Mr. McAdams reports the finding of numerous specimens of pottery and artificial ornaments and implements in the Cahokia mounds and in caves and mounds between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois River, as well as on the latter some twenty-five miles from its mouth. Among the relics found in the Illinois River mounds was a burial vase, and Mr. McAdams says that, in thirty years, he has unearthed more than a thousand of these, many of which closely resemble those found in the mounds of Europe. Dr. Foster also makes mention of an ancient cemetery near Chester, in which "each grave, when explored, is found to contain a cist enclosing a skeleton, for the most part far gone in decay. These cists are built up and covered with slabs of limestone, which here abound."—Another noteworthy group of mounds—though far inferior to the Cahokia group—exists near Hutsonville in Crawford County. As described in the State Geological Survey, this group consists of fifty-five elevations, irregularly dispersed over an area of 1,000 by 1,400 to 1,500 feet, and varying from fourteen to fifty feet in diameter, the larger ones having a height of five to eight feet. From their form and arrangement these are believed to have been mounds of habitation. In the southern portion of this group are four mounds of peculiar construction and larger size, each surrounded by a low ridge or earthwork, with openings facing towards each other, indicating that they were defense-works. The location of this group—a few miles from a prehistoric fortification at Merom, on the Indiana side of the Wabash, to which the name of "Fort Azatlan" has been given—induces the belief that the two groups, like those in the American Bottom and at St. Louis, were parts of the same system.—Professor Engelman, in the part of the State Geological Survey devoted to Massac County, alludes to a remarkable group of earthworks in the Black Bend of the Ohio, as an "extensive" system of "fortifications and mounds which probably belong to the same class as those in the Mississippi Bottom opposite St. Louis and at other points farther up the Ohio." In the report of Government survey by Dan W. Beckwith, in 1834, mention is made of a very large mound on the Kankakee River, near the mouth of Rock Creek, now a part of Kankakee County. This had a base diameter of about 100 feet, with a height of twenty feet, and contained the remains of a large number of Indians killed in a celebrated battle, in which the Illinois and Chippewas, and the Delawares and Shawnees took part. Near by were two other mounds, said to contain the remains of the chiefs of the two parties. In this case, mounds of prehistoric origin had probably been utilized as burial places by the aborigines at a comparatively recent period. Related to the Kankakee mounds, in location if not in period of construction, is a group of nineteen in number on the site of the present city of Morris, in Grundy County. Within a circuit of three miles of Ottawa it has been estimated that there were 3,000 mounds—though many of these are believed to have been of Indian origin. Indeed, the whole Illinois Valley is full of these silent monuments of a prehistoric age, but they are not generally of the conspicuous character of those found in the vicinity of St. Louis and attributed to the Mound Builders.—A very large and numerous group of these monuments exists along the bluffs of the Mississippi River, in the western part of Rock Island and Mercer Counties, chiefly between Drury's Landing and New Boston. Mr. J. E. Stevenson, in "The American Antiquarian," a few years ago, estimated that there were 2,500 of these within a circuit of fifty miles, located in groups of two or three to 100, varying in diameter from fifteen to 150 feet, with an elevation of two to fifteen feet. There are also numerous burial and sacrificial mounds in the vicinity of Chillicothe, on the Illinois River, in the northeastern part of Peoria County.—There are but few specimens of the animal or effigy mounds, of which so many exist in Wisconsin, to be found in Illinois; and the fact that these are found chiefly on Rock River, leaves no doubt of a common origin with the Wisconsin groups. The most remarkable of these is the celebrated "Turtle Mound," within the present limits of the city of Rockford—though some regard it as having more resemblance to an alligator. This figure, which is maintained in a good state of preservation by the citizens, has an extreme length of about 150 feet, by fifty in width at the front legs and thirty-nine at the hind legs, and an elevation equal to the height of a man. There are some smaller mounds in the vicinity, and some bird effigies on Rock River some six miles below Rockford. There is also an animal effigy near the village of Hanover, in Jo Daviess County, with a considerable group of round mounds and embankments in the immediate vicinity, besides a smaller effigy of a similar character on the north side of the Pecatonica in Stephenson County, some ten miles east of Freeport. The Rock River region seems to have been a favorite field for the operations of the mound-builders, as shown by the number and variety of these structures, extending from Sterling, in Whiteside County, to the Wisconsin State line. A large number of these were to be found in the vicinity of the Kishwaukee River in the southeastern part of Winnebago County. The famous prehistoric fortification on Rock River, just beyond the Wisconsin boundary—which seems to have been a sort of counterpart of the ancient Fort Azatlan on the Indiana side of the Wabash—appears to have had a close relation to the works of the mound-builders on the same stream in Illinois.

MOUND CITY, the county-seat of Pulaski County, on the Ohio River, seven miles north of Cairo; is on a branch line of the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad. The chief industries are lumbering and ship-building; also has furniture, canning and other factories. One of the United States National Cemeteries is located here. The town has a bank and two weekly papers. Population (1890), 2,550; (1900), 2,705; (1903, est.), 3,500.

MOUNT CARMEL, a city and the county-seat of Wabash County; is the point of junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Southern Railroads, 132 miles northeast of Cairo, and 24 miles southwest of Vincennes, Ind.; situated on the Wabash River, which supplies good water-power for saw mills, flouring mills, and some other manufactures. The town has railroad shops and two daily newspapers. Agriculture and lumbering are the principal pursuits of the people of the surrounding district. Population (1890), 3,376; (1900), 4,311.

MOUNT CARROLL, the county-seat of Carroll County, an incorporated city, founded in 1843; is 128 miles southwest of Chicago, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. Farming, stock-raising and mining are the principal industries. It has five churches, excellent schools, good libraries, two daily and two semi-weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,836; (1900), 1,965.

MOUNT CARROLL SEMINARY, a young ladies' seminary, located at Mount Carroll, Carroll County; incorporated in 1852; had a faculty of thirteen members in 1896, with 126 pupils, property valued at $100,000, and a library of 5,000 volumes.

MOUNT MORRIS, a town in Ogle County, situated on the Chicago & Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 108 miles west by north from Chicago, and 24 miles southwest of Rockford; is the seat of Mount Morris College and flourishing public school; has handsome stone and brick buildings, three churches and two newspapers. Population (1900), 1,048.

MOUNT OLIVE, a village of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 68 miles southwest of Decatur; in a rich agricultural and coal-mining region. Population (1880), 709; (1890), 1,986; (1900), 2,935.

MOUNT PULASKI, a village and railroad junction in Logan County, 21 miles northwest of Decatur and 24 miles northeast of Springfield. Agriculture, coal-mining and stock-raising are leading industries. It is also an important shipping point for grain, and contains several elevators and flouring mills. Population (1880), 1,125; (1890), 1,357; (1900), 1,643.

MOUNT STERLING, a city, the county-seat of Brown County, midway between Quincy and Jacksonville, on the Wabash Railway. It is surrounded by a rich farming country, and has extensive deposits of clay and coal. It contains six churches and four schools (two large public, and two parochial). The town is lighted by electricity and has public water-works. Wagons, brick, tile and earthenware are manufactured here, and three weekly newspapers are published. Population (1880), 1,445; (1890), 1,655; (1900), 1,960.

MOUNT VERNON, a city and county-seat of Jefferson County, on three trunk lines of railroad, 77 miles east-southeast of St. Louis; is the center of a rich agricultural and coal region; has many flourishing manufactories, including car-works, a plow factory, flouring mills, pressed brick factory, canning factory, and is an important shipping-point for grain, vegetables and fruits. The Appellate Court for the Southern Grand Division is held here, and the city has nine churches, fine school buildings, a Carnegie library, two banks, heating plant, two daily and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 3,233; (1900), 5,216.

MOUNT VERNON & GRAYVILLE RAILROAD.
(See Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway.)

MOWEAQUA, a village of Shelby County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 16 miles south of Decatur; is in rich agricultural and stock-raising section; has coal mine, three banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 848; (1900), 1,478.

MUDD, (Col.) John J., soldier, was born in St. Charles County, Mo., Jan. 9, 1820; his father having died in 1833, his mother removed to Pike County, Ill., to free her children from the influence of slavery. In 1849, and again in 1850, he made the overland journey to California, each time returning by the Isthmus, his last visit extending into 1851. In 1854 he engaged in the commission business in St. Louis, as head of the firm of Mudd & Hughes, but failed in the crash of 1857; then removed to Chicago, and, in 1861, was again in prosperous business. While on a business visit in New Orleans, in December, 1860, he had an opportunity of learning the growing spirit of secession, being advised by friends to leave the St. Charles Hotel in order to escape a mob. In September, 1861, he entered the army as Major of the Second Illinois Cavalry (Col. Silas Noble), and, in the next few months, was stationed successively at Cairo, Bird's Point and Paducah, Ky., and, in February, 1862, led the advance of General McClernand's division in the attack on Fort Donelson. Here he was severely wounded; but, after a few weeks in hospital at St. Louis, was sufficiently recovered to rejoin his regiment soon after the battle of Shiloh. Unable to perform cavalry duty, he was attached to the staff of General McClernand during the advance on Corinth, but, in October following, at the head of 400 men of his regiment, was transferred to the command of General McPherson. Early in 1863 he was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, and soon after to a colonelcy, taking part in the movement against Vicksburg. June 13, he was again severely wounded, but, a few weeks later, was on duty at New Orleans, and subsequently participated in the operations in Southwestern Louisiana and Texas. On May 1, 1864, he left Baton Rouge for Alexandria, as Chief of Staff to General McClernand, but two days later, while approaching Alexandria on board the steamer, was shot through the head and instantly killed. He was a gallant soldier and greatly beloved by his troops.

MULBERRY GROVE, a village of Bond County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis (Vandalia) Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Greenville; has a local newspaper. Pop. (1890), 750; (1900), 632.

MULLIGAN, James A., soldier, was born of Irish parentage at Utica, N. Y., June 25, 1830; in 1836 accompanied his parents to Chicago, and, after graduating from the University of St. Mary's of the Lake, in 1850, began the study of law. In 1851 he accompanied John Lloyd Stephens on his expedition to Panama, and on his return resumed his professional studies, at the same time editing "The Western Tablet," a weekly Catholic paper. At the outbreak of the Rebellion he recruited, and was made Colonel of the Twenty-third Illinois Regiment, known as the Irish Brigade. He served with great gallantry, first in the West and later in the East, being severely wounded and twice captured. He declined a Brigadier-Generalship, preferring to remain with his regiment. He was fatally wounded during a charge at the battle of Winchester. While being carried off the field he noticed that the colors of his brigade were endangered. "Lay me down and save the flag," he ordered. His men hesitated, but he repeated the command until it was obeyed. Before they returned he had been borne away by the enemy, and died a prisoner, at Winchester, Va., July 26, 1864.

MUNN, Daniel W., lawyer and soldier, was born in Orange County, Vt., in 1834; graduated at Thetford Academy in 1852, when he taught two years, meanwhile beginning the study of law. Removing to Coles County, Ill., in 1855, he resumed his law studies, was admitted to the bar in 1858, and began practice at Hillsboro, Montgomery County. In 1862 he joined the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, with the rank of Adjutant, but the following year was appointed Colonel of the First Alabama Cavalry. Compelled to retire from the service on account of declining health, he returned to Cairo, Ill., where he became editor of "The Daily News"; in 1866 was elected to the State Senate, serving four years; served as Presidential Elector in 1868; was the Republican nominee for Congress in 1870, and the following year was appointed by President Grant Supervisor of Internal Revenue for the District including the States of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Removing to Chicago, he began practice there in 1875, in which he has since been engaged. He has been prominently connected with a number of important cases before the Chicago courts.

MUNN, Sylvester W., lawyer, soldier and legislator, was born about 1818, and came from Ohio at thirty years of age, settling at Wilmington, Will County, afterwards removing to Joliet, where he practiced law. During the War he served as Major of the Yates Phalanx (Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers); later, was State's Attorney for Will County and State Senator in the Thirty-first and Thirty-second General Assemblies. Died, at Joliet, Sept. 11, 1888. He was a member of the Illinois State Bar Association from its organization.

MURPHY, Everett J., ex-Member of Congress, was born in Nashville, Ill., July 24, 1852; in early youth removed to Sparta, where he was educated in the high schools of that place; at the age of fourteen he became clerk in a store; in 1877 was elected City Clerk of Sparta, but the next year resigned to become Deputy Circuit Clerk at Chester, remaining until 1882, when he was elected Sheriff of Randolph County. In 1886 he was chosen a Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1889, was appointed, by Governor Fifer, Warden of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, but retired from this position in 1892, and removed to East St. Louis. Two years later he was elected as a Republican to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Twenty-first District, but was defeated for re-election by a small majority in 1896, by Jehu Baker, Democrat and Populist. In 1899 Mr. Murphy was appointed Warden of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, to succeed Col. R. W. McClaughray.

MURPHYSBORO, the county-seat of Jackson County, situated on the Big Muddy River and on main line of the Mobile & Ohio, the St. Louis Division of the Illinois Central, and a branch of the St. Louis Valley Railroads, 52 miles north of Cairo and 90 miles south-southeast of St. Louis. Coal of a superior quality is extensively mined in the vicinity. The city has a foundry, machine shops, skewer factory, furniture factory, flour and saw mills, thirteen churches, four schools, three banks, two daily and three weekly newspapers, city and rural free mail delivery. Population (1890), 3,380; (1900), 6,463; (1903, est.), 7,500.

MURPHYSBORO & SHAWNEETOWN RAILROAD. (See Carbondale & Shawneetown, St. Louis Southern and St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroads.)

NAPERVILLE, a city of Du Page County, on the west branch of the Du Page River and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 30 miles west-southwest of Chicago, and 9 miles east of Aurora. It has three banks, a weekly newspaper, stone quarries, couch factory, and nine churches; is also the seat of the Northwestern College, an institution founded in 1861 by the Evangelical Association; the college now has a normal school department. Population (1890), 2,216; (1900), 2,629.

NAPLES, a town of Scott County, on the Illinois River and the Hannibal and Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, 21 miles west of Jacksonville. Population (1890), 452; (1900), 398.

NASHVILLE, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Washington County, on the Centralia & Chester and the Louisville & Nashville Railways; is 120 miles south of Springfield and 50 miles east by south from St. Louis. It stands in a coal-producing and rich agricultural region. There are two coal mines within the corporate limits, and two large flouring mills do a considerable business. There are numerous churches, public schools, including a high school, a State bank, and four weekly papers. Population (1880), 2,222; (1890), 2,084; (1900), 2,184.

NAUVOO, a city in Hancock County, at the head of the Lower Rapids on the Mississippi, between Fort Madison and Keokuk, Iowa. It was founded by the Mormons in 1840, and its early growth was rapid. After the expulsion of the "Saints" in 1846, it was settled by a colony of French Icarians, who introduced the culture of grapes on a large scale. They were a sort of communistic order, but their experiment did not prove a success, and in a few years they gave place to another class, the majority of the population now being of German extraction. The chief industries are agriculture and horticulture. Large quantities of grapes and strawberries are raised and shipped, and considerable native wine is produced. Population (1880), 1,402; (1890), 1,208; (per census 1900), 1,321. (See also Mormons.)

NAVIGABLE STREAMS (by Statute). Following the example of the French explorers, who chiefly followed the water-ways in their early explorations, the early permanent settlers of Illinois, not only settled, to a great extent, on the principal streams, but later took especial pains to maintain their navigable character by statute. This was, of course, partly due to the absence of improved highways, but also to the belief that, as the country developed, the streams would become extremely valuable, if not indispensable, especially in the transportation of heavy commodities. Accordingly, for the first quarter century after the organization of the State Government, one of the questions receiving the attention of the Legislature, at almost every session, was the enactment of laws affirming the navigability of certain streams now regarded as of little importance, or utterly insignificant, as channels of transportation. Legislation of this character began with the first General Assembly (1819), and continued, at intervals, with reference to one or two of the more important interior rivers of the State, as late as 1867. Besides the Illinois and Wabash, still recognized as navigable streams, the following were made the subject of legislation of this character: Beaucoup Creek, a branch of the Big Muddy, in Perry and Jackson Counties (law of 1819); Big Bay, a tributary of the Ohio in Pope County (Acts of 1833); Big Muddy, to the junction of the East and West Forks in Jefferson County (1835), with various subsequent amendments; Big Vermilion, declared navigable (1831); Bon Pas, a branch of the Wabash, between Wabash and Edwards Counties (1831); Cache River, to main fork in Johnson County (1819); Des Plaines, declared navigable (1839); Embarras (1831), with various subsequent acts in reference to improvement; Fox River, declared navigable to the Wisconsin line (1840), and Fox River Navigation Company, incorporated (1855); Kankakee and Iroquois Navigation & Manufacturing Company, incorporated (1847), with various changes and amendments (1851-65); Kaskaskia (or Okaw), declared navigable to a point in Fayette County north of Vandalia (1819), with various modifying acts (1823-67); Macoupin Creek, to Carrollton and Alton road (1837); Piasa, declared navigable in Jersey and Madison Counties (1861); Rock River Navigation Company, incorporated (1841), with subsequent acts (1845-67); Sangamon River, declared navigable to Third Principal Meridian—east line of Sangamon County—(1822), and the North Fork of same to Champaign County (1845); Sny-Carty (a bayou of the Mississippi), declared navigable in Pike and Adams Counties (1859); Spoon River, navigable to Cameron's mill in Fulton County (1835), with various modifying acts (1845-53); Little Wabash Navigation Company, incorporated and river declared navigable to McCawley's bridge—probably in Clay County—(1826), with various subsequent acts making appropriations for its improvement; Skillet Fork (a branch of the Little Wabash), declared navigable to Slocum's Mill in Marion County (1837), and to Ridgway Mills (1846). Other acts passed at various times declared a number of unimportant streams navigable, including Big Creek in Fulton County, Crooked Creek in Schuyler County, Lusk's Creek in Pope County, McKee's Creek in Pike County, Seven Mile Creek in Ogle County, besides a number of others of similar character.

NEALE, THOMAS M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Fauquier County, Va., 1796; while yet a child removed with his parents to Bowling Green, Ky., and became a common soldier in the War of 1812; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1824, and began the practice of law; served as Colonel of a regiment raised in Sangamon and Morgan Counties for the Winnebago War (1827), and afterwards as Surveyor of Sangamon County, appointing Abraham Lincoln as his deputy. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, for a number of years, at Springfield. Died, August 7, 1840.

NEECE, William H., ex-Congressman, was born, Feb. 26, 1831, in what is now a part of Logan County, Ill., but which was then within the limits of Sangamon; was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in McDonough County; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1858, and has been ever since engaged in practice. His political career began in 1861, when he was chosen a member of the City Council of Macomb. In 1864 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1869, a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1871 he was again elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1878, to the State Senate. From 1883 to 1887 he represented the Eleventh Illinois District in Congress, as a Democrat, but was defeated for re-election in 1890 by William H. Gest, Republican.

NEGROES. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

NEOGA, a village of Cumberland County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 20 miles southwest of Charleston; has a bank, two newspapers, some manufactories, and ships grain, hay, fruit and live-stock. Pop. (1890), 829; (1900), 1,126.

NEPONSET, a village and station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Bureau County, 4 miles southwest of Mendota. Population (1880), 652; (1890), 542; (1900), 516.

NEW ALBANY & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

NEW ATHENS, a village of St. Clair County, on the St. Louis & Cairo "Short Line" (now Illinois Central) Railroad, at the crossing of the Kaskaskia River, 31 miles southeast of St. Louis; has one newspaper and considerable grain trade. Population (1880), 603; (1890), 624; (1900), 856.

NEW BERLIN, a village of Sangamon County, on the Wabash Railway, 17 miles west of Springfield. Population (1890), 403; (1900), 533.

NEWBERRY LIBRARY, a large reference library, located in Chicago, endowed by Walter L.

Chicago Academy of Sciences.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Newberry, an early business man of Chicago, who left half of his estate (aggregating over $2,000,000) for the purpose. The property bequeathed was largely in real estate, which has since greatly increased in value. The library was established in temporary quarters in 1887, and the first section of a permanent building was opened in the autumn of 1893. By that time there had been accumulated about 160,000 books and pamphlets. A collection of nearly fifty portraits—chiefly of eminent Americans, including many citizens of Chicago—was presented to the library by G. P. A. Healy, a distinguished artist, since deceased. The site of the building occupies an entire block, and the original design contemplates a handsome front on each of the four streets, with a large rectangular court in the center. The section already completed is massive and imposing, and its interior is admirably adapted to the purposes of a library, and at the same time rich and beautiful. When completed, the building will have a capacity for four to six million volumes.

NEWBERRY, Walter C., ex-Congressman, was born at Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1835. Early in the Civil War he enlisted as a private, and rose, step by step, to a colonelcy, and was mustered out as Brevet Brigadier-General. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Fourth Illinois District in the Fifty-second Congress (1891-93). His home is in Chicago.

NEWBERRY, Walter L., merchant, banker and philanthropist, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 18, 1804, descended from English ancestry. He was President Jackson's personal appointee to the United States Military Academy at West Point, but was prevented from taking the examination by sickness. Subsequently he embarked in business at Buffalo, N. Y., going to Detroit in 1828, and settling at Chicago in 1833. After engaging in general merchandising for several years, he turned his attention to banking, in which he accumulated a large fortune. He was a prominent and influential citizen, serving several terms as President of the Board of Education, and being, for six years, the President of the Chicago Historical Society. He died at sea, Nov. 6, 1868, leaving a large estate, one-half of which he devoted, by will, to the founding of a free reference library in Chicago. (See Newberry Library.)

NEW BOSTON, a city of Mercer County, on the Mississippi River, at the western terminus of the Galva and New Boston Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Population (1890), 445; (1900), 703.

NEW BRIGHTON, a village of St. Clair County and suburb of East St. Louis. Population (1890), 868.

NEW BURNSIDE, a village of Johnson County, on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 53 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1880), 650; (1890), 596; (1900), 468.

NEW DOUGLAS, a village in Madison County, on the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad; in farming and fruit-growing region; has coal mine, flour mill and newspaper. Population (1900), 469.

NEWELL, John, Railway President, was born at West Newbury, Mass., March 31, 1830, being directly descended from "Pilgrim" stock. At the age of 16 he entered the employment of the Cheshire Railroad in New Hampshire. Eighteen months later he was appointed an assistant engineer on the Vermont Central Railroad, and placed in charge of the construction of a 10-mile section of the line. His promotion was rapid, and, in 1850, he accepted a responsible position on the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad. From 1850 to 1856 he was engaged in making surveys for roads in Kentucky and New York, and, during the latter year, held the position of engineer of the Cairo City Company, of Cairo, Ill. In 1857 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as Division Engineer, where his remarkable success attracted the attention of the owners of the old Winona & St. Peter Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern system), who tendered him the presidency. This he accepted, but, in 1864, was made President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad. Four years later, he accepted the position of General Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, but resigned, in 1869, to become Vice-President of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1871 he was elevated to the presidency, but retired in September, 1874, to accept the position of General Manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, of which he was elected President, in May, 1883, and continued in office until the time of his death, which occurred at Youngstown, Ohio, August 25, 1894.

NEWHALL, (Dr.) Horatio, early physician and newspaper publisher, came from St. Louis, Mo., to Galena, Ill., in 1827, and engaged in mining and smelting, but abandoned this business, the following year, for the practice of his profession; soon afterward became interested in the publication of "The Miners' Journal," and still later in "The Galena Advertiser," with which Hooper Warren and Dr. Philleo were associated.

In 1830 he became a Surgeon in the United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Winnebago, but retired from the service, in 1832, and returned to Galena. When the Black Hawk War broke out he volunteered his services, and, by order of General Scott, was placed in charge of a military hospital at Galena, of which he had control until the close of the war. The difficulties of the position were increased by the appearance of the Asiatic cholera among the troops, but he seems to have discharged his duties with satisfaction to the military authorities. He enjoyed a wide reputation for professional ability, and had an extensive practice. Died, Sept. 19, 1870.

NEWMAN, a village of Douglas County, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, 52 miles east of Decatur; has a bank, a newspaper, canning factory, broom factory, electric lights, and large trade in agricultural products and livestock. Population (1890), 990; (1900), 1,166.

NEWSPAPERS, EARLY. The first newspaper published in the Northwest Territory, of which the present State of Illinois, at the time, composed a part, was "The Centinel of the Northwest Territory," established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell, the first issue appearing in November, 1793. This was also the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1796 it was sold to Edmund Freeman and assumed the name of "Freeman's Journal." Nathaniel Willis (grandfather of N. P. Willis, the poet) established "The Scioto Gazette," at Chillicothe, in 1796. "The Western Spy and Hamilton Gazette" was the third paper in Northwest Territory (also within the limits of Ohio), founded in 1799. Willis's paper became the organ of the Territorial Government on the removal of the capital to Chillicothe, in 1800.

The first newspaper in Indiana Territory (then including Illinois) was established by Elihu Stout at Vincennes, beginning publication, July 4, 1804. It took the name of "The Western Sun and General Advertiser," but is now known as "The Western Sun," having had a continuous existence for ninety-five years.

The first newspaper published in Illinois Territory was "The Illinois Herald," but, owing to the absence of early files and other specific records, the date of its establishment has been involved in some doubt. Its founder was Matthew Duncan (a brother of Joseph Duncan, who was afterwards a member of Congress and Governor of the State from 1834 to 1838), and its place of publication Kaskaskia, at that time the Territorial capital. Duncan, who was a native of Kentucky, brought a press and a primitive printer's outfit with him from that State. Gov. John Reynolds, who came as a boy to the "Illinois Country" in 1800, while it was still a part of the "Northwest Territory," in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," has fixed the date of the first issue of this paper in 1809, the same year in which Illinois was severed from Indiana Territory and placed under a separate Territorial Government. There is good reason, however, for believing that the Governor was mistaken in this statement. If Duncan brought his press to Illinois in 1809—which is probable—it does not seem to have been employed at once in the publication of a newspaper, as Hooper Warren (the founder of the third paper established in Illinois) says it "was for years only used for the public printing." The earliest issue of "The Illinois Herald" known to be in existence, is No. 32 of Vol. II, and bears date, April 18, 1816. Calculating from these data, if the paper was issued continuously from its establishment, the date of the first issue would have been Sept. 6, 1814. Corroborative evidence of this is found in the fact that "The Missouri Gazette," the original of the old "Missouri Republican" (now "The St. Louis Republic"), which was established in 1808, makes no mention of the Kaskaskia paper before 1814, although communication between Kaskaskia and St. Louis was most intimate, and these two were, for several years, the only papers published west of Vincennes, Ind.

In August, 1817, "The Herald" was sold to Daniel P. Cook and Robert Blackwell, and the name of the paper was changed to "The Illinois Intelligencer." Cook—who had previously been Auditor of Public Accounts for the Territory, and afterwards became a Territorial Circuit Judge, the first Attorney-General under the new State Government, and, for eight years, served as the only Representative in Congress from Illinois—for a time officiated as editor of "The Intelligencer," while Blackwell (who had succeeded to the Auditorship) had charge of the publication. The size of the paper, which had been four pages of three wide columns to the page, was increased, by the new publishers, to four columns to the page. On the removal of the State capital to Vandalia, in 1820, "The Intelligencer" was removed thither also, and continued under its later name, afterwards becoming, after a change of management, an opponent of the scheme for the calling of a State Convention to revise the State Constitution with a view to making Illinois a slave State. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

The second paper established on Illinois soil was "The Shawnee Chief," which began publication at Shawneetown, Sept. 5, 1818, with Henry Eddy—who afterwards became a prominent lawyer of Southern Illinois—as its editor. The name of "The Chief" was soon afterwards changed to "The Illinois Emigrant," and some years later, became "The Shawneetown Gazette." Among others who were associated with the Shawneetown paper, in early days, was James Hall, afterwards a Circuit Judge and State Treasurer, and, without doubt, the most prolific and popular writer of his day in Illinois. Later, he established "The Illinois Magazine" at Vandalia, subsequently removed to Cincinnati, and issued under the name of "The Western Monthly Magazine." He was also a frequent contributor to other magazines of that period, and author of several volumes, including "Legends of the West" and "Border Tales." During the contest over the slavery question, in 1823-24, "The Gazette" rendered valuable service to the anti-slavery party by the publication of articles in opposition to the Convention scheme, from the pen of Morris Birkbeck and others.

The third Illinois paper—and, in 1823-24, the strongest and most influential opponent of the scheme for establishing slavery in Illinois—was "The Edwardsville Spectator," which began publication at Edwardsville, Madison County, May 23, 1819. Hooper Warren was the publisher and responsible editor, though he received valuable aid from the pens of Governor Coles, George Churchill, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, Morris Birkbeck and others. (See Warren, Hooper.) Warren sold "The Spectator" to Rev. Thomas Lippincott in 1825, and was afterwards associated with papers at Springfield, Galena, Chicago and elsewhere.

The agitation of the slavery question (in part, at least) led to the establishment of two new papers in 1822. The first of these was "The Republican Advocate," which began publication at Kaskaskia, in April of that year, under the management of Elias Kent Kane, then an aspirant to the United States Senatorship. After his election to that office in 1824, "The Advocate" passed into the hands of Robert K. Fleming, who, after a period of suspension, established "The Kaskaskia Recorder," but, a year or two later, removed to Vandalia. "The Star of the West" was established at Edwardsville, as an opponent of Warren's "Spectator," the first issue making its appearance, Sept. 14, 1822, with Theophilus W. Smith, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court, as its reputed editor. A few months later it passed into new hands, and, in August, 1823, assumed the name of "The Illinois Republican." Both "The Republican Advocate" and "The Illinois Republican" were zealous organs of the pro-slavery party.

With the settlement of the slavery question in Illinois, by the election of 1824, Illinois journalism may be said to have entered upon a new era. At the close of this first period there were only five papers published in the State—all established within a period of ten years; and one of these ("The Illinois Republican," at Edwardsville) promptly ceased publication on the settlement of the slavery question in opposition to the views which it had advocated. The next period of fifteen years (1825-40) was prolific in the establishment of new newspaper ventures, as might be expected from the rapid increase of the State in population, and the development in the art of printing during the same period. "The Western Sun," established at Belleville (according to one report, in December, 1825, and according to another, in the winter of 1827-28) by Dr. Joseph Green, appears to have been the first paper published in St. Clair County. This was followed by "The Pioneer," begun, April 25, 1829, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, with the indomitable Dr. John M. Peck, author of "Peck's Gazetteer," as its editor. It was removed in 1836 to Upper Alton, when it took the name of "The Western Pioneer and Baptist Banner." Previous to this, however, Hooper Warren, having come into possession of the material upon which he had printed "The Edwardsville Spectator," removed it to Springfield, and, in the winter of 1826-27, began the publication of the first paper at the present State capital, which he named "The Sangamo Gazette." It had but a brief existence. During 1830, George Forquer, then Attorney-General of the State, in conjunction with his half-brother, Thomas Ford (afterwards Governor), was engaged in the publication of a paper called "The Courier," at Springfield, which was continued only a short time. The earliest paper north of Springfield appears to have been "The Hennepin Journal," which began publication, Sept. 15, 1827. "The Sangamo Journal"—now "The Illinois State Journal," and the oldest paper of continuous existence in the State—was established at Springfield by Simeon and Josiah Francis (cousins from Connecticut), the first issue bearing date, Nov. 10, 1831. Before the close of the same year James G. Edwards, afterwards the founder of "The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye," began the publication of "The Illinois Patriot" at Jacksonville. Another paper, established the same year, was "The Gazette" at Vandalia, then the State capital. (See Forquer, George; Ford, Thomas; Francis, Simon.)

At this early date the development of the lead mines about Galena had made that place a center of great business activity. On July 8, 1828, James Jones commenced the issue of "The Miners' Journal," the first paper at Galena. Jones died of cholera in 1833, and his paper passed into other hands. July 20, 1829, "The Galena Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald" began publication, with Drs. Horatio Newhall and Addison Philleo as editors, and Hooper Warren as publisher, but appears to have been discontinued before the expiration of its first year. "The Galenian" was established as a Democratic paper by Philleo, in May, 1832, but ceased publication in September, 1836. "The Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," founded in November, 1834, by Loring and Bartlett (the last named afterwards one of the founders of "The Quincy Whig"), has had a continuous existence, being now known as "The Galena Advertiser." Benjamin Mills, one of the most brilliant lawyers of his time, was editor of this paper during a part of the first year of its publication.

Robert K. Fleming, who has already been mentioned as the successor of Elias Kent Kane in the publication of "The Republican Advocate," at Kaskaskia, later published a paper for a short time at Vandalia, but, in 1827, removed his establishment to Edwardsville, where he began the publication of "The Corrector." The latter was continued a little over a year, when it was suspended. He then resumed the publication of "The Recorder" at Kaskaskia. In December, 1833, he removed to Belleville and began the publication of "The St. Clair Gazette," which afterwards passed, through various changes of owners, under the names of "The St. Clair Mercury" and "Representative and Gazette." This was succeeded, in 1839, by "The Belleville Advocate," which has been published continuously to the present time.

Samuel S. Brooks (the father of Austin Brooks, afterwards of "The Quincy Herald") at different times published papers at various points in the State. His first enterprise was "The Crisis" at Edwardsville, which he changed to "The Illinois Advocate," and, at the close of his first year, sold out to Judge John York Sawyer, who united it with "The Western Plowboy," which he had established a few months previous. "The Advocate" was removed to Vandalia, and, on the death of the owner (who had been appointed State Printer), was consolidated with "The Illinois Register," which had been established in 1836. The new paper took the name of "The Illinois Register and People's Advocate," in 1839 was removed to Springfield, and is now known as "The Illinois State Register."

Other papers established between 1830 and 1840 include: "The Vandalia Whig" (1831); "The Alton Spectator," the first paper published in Alton (January, 1834); "The Chicago Democrat," by John Calhoun (Nov. 26, 1833); "The Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Bounty Land Advertiser," by Francis A. Arenz (July 29, 1833); "The Alton American" (1833); "The White County News," at Carmi (1833); "The Danville Enquirer" (1833); "The Illinois Champion," at Peoria (1834); "The Mount Carmel Sentinel and Wabash Advocate" (1834); "The Illinois State Gazette and Jacksonville News," at Jacksonville (1835); "The Illinois Argus and Bounty Land Register," at Quincy (1835); "The Rushville Journal and Military Tract Advertiser" (1835); "The Alton Telegraph" (1836); "The Alton Observer" (1836); "The Carthaginian," at Carthage (1836); "The Bloomington Observer" (1837); "The Backwoodsman," founded by Prof. John Russell, at Grafton, and the first paper published in Greene County (1837); "The Quincy Whig" (1838); "The Illinois Statesman," at Paris, Edgar County (1838); "The Peoria Register" (1838). The second paper to be established in Chicago was "The Chicago American," whose initial number was issued, June 8, 1835, with Thomas O. Davis as proprietor and editor. In July, 1837, it passed into the hands of William Stuart & Co., and, on April 9, 1839, its publishers began the issue of the first daily ever published in Chicago. "The Chicago Express" succeeded "The American" in 1842, and, in 1844, became the forerunner of "The Chicago Journal." The third Chicago paper was "The Commercial Advertiser," founded by Hooper Warren, in 1836. It lived only about a year. Zebina Eastman, who was afterwards associated with Warren, and became one of the most influential journalistic opponents of slavery, arrived in the State in 1839, and, in the latter part of that year, was associated with the celebrated Abolitionist, Benjamin Lundy, in the preliminary steps for the issue of "The Genius of Universal Emancipation," projected by Lundy at Lowell, in La Salle County. Lundy's untimely death, in August, 1839, however, prevented him from seeing the consummation of his plan, although Eastman lived to carry it out in part. A paper whose career, although extending only a little over one year, marked an era in Illinois journalism, was "The Altón Observer," its history closing with the assassination of its editor, Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the night of Nov. 8, 1837, while unsuccessfully attempting to protect his press from destruction, for the fourth time, by a pro-slavery mob. Humiliating as was this crime to every law-abiding Illinoisan, it undoubtedly strengthened the cause of free speech and assisted in hastening the downfall of the institution in whose behalf it was committed.

That the development in the field of journalism, within the past sixty years, has more than kept pace with the growth in population, is shown by the fact that there is not a county in the State without its newspaper, while every town of a few hundred population has either one or more. According to statistics for 1898, there were 605 cities and towns in the State having periodical publications of some sort, making a total of 1,709, of which 174 were issued daily, 34 semi-weekly, 1,205 weekly, 28 semi-monthly, 238 monthly, and the remainder at various periods ranging from tri-weekly to eight times a year.

NEWTON, the county-seat of Jasper County, situated on the Embarras River, at the intersection of subsidiary lines of the Illinois Central Railroad from Peoria and Effingham; is an incorporated city, was settled in 1828, and made the county-seat in 1836. Agriculture, coal-mining and dairy farming are the principal pursuits in the surrounding region. The city has water-power, which is utilized to some extent in manufacturing, but most of its factories are operated by steam. Among these establishments are flour and saw mills, and grain elevators. There are a half-dozen churches, a good public school system, including parochial school and high school, besides two banks and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 1,428; (1900), 1,630.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY (Nickel Plate), a line 522.47 miles in length, of which (1898) only 9.96 miles are operated in Illinois. It owns no track in Illinois, but uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad (9.96 miles in length), of which it has financial control, to enter the city of Chicago. The total capitalization of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, in 1898, is $50,222,568, of which $19,425,000 is in bonds.—(HISTORY.) The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad was incorporated under the laws of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in 1881, construction begun immediately, and the road put in operation in 1882. In 1885 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1887, and reorganized by the consolidation of various eastern lines with the Fort Wayne & Illinois Railroad, forming the line under its present name. The road between Buffalo, N. Y., and the west line of Indiana is owned by the Company, but, for its line in Illinois, it uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad, of which it is the lessee, as well as the owner of its capital stock. The main line of the "Nickel Plate" is controlled by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, which owns more than half of both the preferred and common stock.

NIANTIC, a town in Macon County, on the Wabash Railway, 27 miles east of Springfield. Agriculture is the leading industry. The town has three elevators, three churches, school, coal mine, a newspaper and a bank. Pop. (1900), 654.

NICOLAY, John George, author, was born in Essingen, Bavaria, Feb. 26, 1832; at 6 years of age was brought to the United States, lived for a time in Cincinnati, attending the public schools there, and then came to Illinois; at 16 entered the office of "The Pike County Free Press" at Pittsfield, and, while still in his minority, became editor and proprietor of the paper. In 1857 he became Assistant Secretary of State under O. M. Hatch, the first Republican Secretary, but during Mr. Lincoln's candidacy for President, in 1860, aided him as private secretary, also acting as a correspondent of "The St. Louis Democrat." After the election he was formally selected by Mr. Lincoln as his private secretary, accompanying him to Washington and remaining until Mr. Lincoln's assassination. In 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Paris, remaining until 1869; on his return for some time edited "The Chicago Republican"; was also Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in Washington from 1872 to 1887. Mr. Nicolay is author, in collaboration with John Hay, of "Abraham Lincoln: A History," first published serially in "The Century Magazine," and later issued in ten volumes; of "The Outbreak of the Rebellion" in "Campaigns of the Civil War," besides numerous magazine articles. He lives in Washington, D. C.

NICOLET, Jean, early French explorer, came from Cherbourg, France, in 1618, and, for several years, lived among the Algonquins, whose language he learned and for whom he acted as interpreter. On July 4, 1634, he discovered Lake Michigan, then called the "Lake of the Illinois," and visited the Chippewas, Menominees and Winnebagoes, in the region about Green Bay, among whom he was received kindly. From the Mascoutins, on the Fox River (of Wisconsin), he learned of the Illinois Indians, some of whose northern villages he also visited. He subsequently returned to Quebec, where he was drowned, in October, 1642. He was probably the first Caucasian to visit Wisconsin and Illinois.

NILES, Nathaniel, lawyer, editor and soldier, born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1817; attended an academy at Albany, from 1830 to '34, was licensed to practice law and removed west in 1837, residing successively at Delphi and Frankfort, Ind., and at Owensburg, Ky., until 1842, when he settled in Belleville, Ill. In 1846 he was commissioned a First Lieutenant in the Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Colonel Bissell's) for the Mexican War, but, after the battle of Buena Vista, was promoted by General Wool to the captaincy of an independent company of Texas foot. He was elected Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives at the session of 1849, and the same year was chosen County Judge of St. Clair County, serving until 1861. With the exception of brief periods from 1851 to '59, he was editor and part owner of "The Belleville Advocate," a paper originally Democratic, but which became Republican on the organization of the Republican party. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the completion of its organization having been delayed, he resigned, and, the following year, was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirtieth, serving until May, 1864, when he resigned—in March, 1865, receiving the compliment of a brevet Brigadier-Generalship. During the winter of 1862-63 he was in command at Memphis, but later took part in the Vicksburg campaign, and in the campaigns on Red River and Bayou Teche. After the war he served as Representative in the General Assembly from St. Clair County (1865-66); as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; on the Commission for building the State Penitentiary at Joliet, and as Commissioner (by appointment of Governor Oglesby) for locating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home. His later years have been spent chiefly in the practice of his profession, with occasional excursions into journalism. Originally an anti-slavery Democrat, he became one of the founders of the Republican party in Southern Illinois.

NIXON, William Penn, journalist, Collector of Customs, was born in Wayne County, Ind., of North Carolina and Quaker ancestry, early in 1832. In 1853 he graduated from Farmers' (now Belmont) College, near Cincinnati, Ohio. After devoting two years to teaching, he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania (1855), graduating in 1859. For nine years thereafter he practiced law at Cincinnati, during which period he was thrice elected to the Ohio Legislature. In 1868 he embarked in journalism, he and his older brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, with a few friends, founding "The Cincinnati Chronicle." A few years later "The Times" was purchased, and the two papers were consolidated under the name of "The Times-Chronicle." In May, 1872, having disposed of his interests in Cincinnati, he assumed the business management of "The Chicago Inter Ocean," then a new venture and struggling for a foothold. In 1875 he and his brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, secured a controlling interest in the paper, when the former assumed the position of editor-in-chief, which he continued to occupy until 1897, when he was appointed Collector of Customs for the City of Chicago—a position which he now holds.

NOKOMIS, a city of Montgomery County, on the "Big Four" main line and "Frisco" Railroads, 81 miles east by north from St. Louis and 52 miles west of Mattoon; in important grain-growing and hay-producing section; has water-works, electric lights, three flour mills, two machine shops, wagon factory, creamery, seven churches, high school, two banks and three papers; is noted for shipments of poultry, butter and eggs. Population (1890), 1,305; (1900), 1,371.

NORMAL, a city in McLean County, 2 miles north of Bloomington and 124 southwest of Chicago; at intersecting point of the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads. It lies in a rich coal and agricultural region, and has extensive fruit-tree nurseries, two canning factories, one bank, hospital, and four periodicals. It is the seat of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, founded in 1869, and the Illinois State Normal University, founded in 1857; has city and rural mail delivery. Pop. (1890), 3,459; (1900), 3,795.

NORMAL UNIVERSITIES. (See Southern Illinois Normal University; State Normal University.)

NORTH ALTON, a village of Madison County and suburb of the city of Alton. Population (1880), 838; (1890), 762; (1900), 904.

NORTHCOTT, William A., Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 28, 1854—the son of Gen. R. S. Northcott, whose loyalty to the Union, at the beginning of the Rebellion, compelled him to leave his Southern home and seek safety for himself and family in the North. He went to West Virginia, was commissioned Colonel of a regiment and served through the war, being for some nine months a prisoner in Libby Prison. After acquiring his literary education in the public schools, the younger Northcott spent some time in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., after which he was engaged in teaching. Meanwhile, he was preparing for the practice of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877, two years later coming to Greenville, Bond County, Ill., which has since been his home. In 1880, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as Supervisor of the Census for the Seventh District; in 1882 was elected State's Attorney for Bond County and re-elected successively in '84 and '88; in 1890 was appointed on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and, by selection of the Board, delivered the annual address to the graduating class of that year. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Congress for the Eighteenth District, but was defeated in the general landslide of that year. In 1896 he was more fortunate, being elected Lieutenant-Governor by the vote of the State, receiving a plurality of over 137,000 over his Democratic opponent.

NORTH PEORIA, formerly a suburban village in Peoria County, 2 miles north of the city of Peoria; annexed to the city of Peoria in 1900.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION, THE.

The Ordinance of 1787, making the first specific provision, by Congress, for the government of the country lying northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi (known as the Northwest Territory), provided, among other things (Art. V., Ordinance 1787), that "there shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three nor more than five States." It then proceeds to fix the boundaries of the proposed States, on the assumption that there shall be three in number, adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, however, and it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." On the basis of this provision it has been claimed that the northern boundaries of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio should have been on the exact latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan, and that the failure to establish this boundary was a violation of the Ordinance, inasmuch as the fourteenth section of the preamble thereto declares that "the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."—In the limited state of geographical knowledge, existing at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance, there seems to have been considerable difference of opinion as to the latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan. The map of Mitchell (1755) had placed it on the parallel of  $42^{\circ} 20'$ , while that of Thomas Hutchins (1778) fixed it at  $41^{\circ} 37'$ . It was officially established by Government survey, in 1835, at  $41^{\circ} 37' 07.9''$ . As a matter of fact, the northern boundary of neither of the three States named was finally fixed on the line mentioned in the proviso above quoted from the Ordinance—that of Ohio, where it meets the shore of Lake Erie, being a little north of  $41^{\circ} 44'$ ; that of Indiana at  $41^{\circ} 46'$  (some 10 miles north of the southern bend of the lake), and that of Illinois at  $42^{\circ} 30'$ —about 61 miles north of the same line. The boundary line between Ohio and Michigan was settled after a bitter controversy, on the admission of the latter State into the Union, in 1837, in the acceptance by her of certain conditions proposed by Congress. These included the annexation to Michigan of what is known as the "Upper Peninsula," lying between Lakes Michigan and Superior, in lieu of a strip averaging six miles on her southern border, which she demanded from Ohio.—The establishment of the northern boundary of Illinois, in 1818, upon the line which now exists, is universally conceded to have been due to the action of Judge Nathaniel Pope, then the Delegate in Congress from Illinois Territory. While it was then acquiesced in without question, it has since been the subject of considerable controversy and has been followed by almost incalculable results. The "enabling act," as originally introduced early in 1818, empowering the people of Illinois Territory to form a State Government, fixed the northern boundary of the proposed State at  $41^{\circ} 39'$ ; then the supposed latitude of the southern extremity of Lake Michigan. While the act was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Pope offered an amendment advancing the northern boundary to  $42^{\circ} 30'$ . The object of his amendment (as he explained) was to gain for the new State a coast line on Lake Michigan, bringing it into political and commercial relations with the States east of it—Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York—thus “affording additional security to the perpetuity of the Union.” He argued that the location of the State between the Mississippi, Wabash and Ohio Rivers—all flowing to the south—would bring it in intimate communication with the Southern States, and that, in the event of an attempted disruption of the Union, it was important that it should be identified with the commerce of the Lakes, instead of being left entirely to the waters of the south-flowing rivers. “Thus,” said he, “a rival interest would be created to check the wish for a Western or Southern Confederacy. Her interests would thus be balanced and her inclinations turned to the North.” He recognized Illinois as already “the key to the West,” and he evidently foresaw that the time might come when it would be the Keystone of the Union. While this evinced wonderful foresight, scarcely less convincing was his argument that, in time, a commercial emporium would grow up upon Lake Michigan, which would demand an outlet by means of a canal to the Illinois River—a work which was realized in the completion of the Illinois & Michigan Canal thirty years later, but which would scarcely have been accomplished had the State been practically cut off from the Lake and its chief emporium left to grow up in another commonwealth, or not at all. Judge Pope’s amendment was accepted without division, and, in this form, a few days later, the bill became a law.—The almost superhuman sagacity exhibited in Judge Pope’s argument, has been repeatedly illustrated in the commercial and political history of the State since, but never more significantly than in the commanding position which Illinois occupied during the late Civil War, with one of its citizens in the Presidential chair and another leading its 250,000 citizen soldiery and the armies of the Union in battling for the perpetuity of the Republic—a position which more than fulfilled every prediction made for it.—The territory affected by this settlement of the northern boundary, includes all that part of the State north of the northern line of La Salle County, and embraces the greater portion of the fourteen counties of Cook, Dupage, Kane, Lake, McHenry, Boone, DeKalb, Lee, Ogle, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll and Whiteside, with portions of Kendall, Will and Rock Island—estimated at 8,500 square miles, or more than one-seventh of the present area of the State. It has been argued that this territory belonged to the State of Wisconsin under the provisions of the Ordinance of 1787, and there were repeated attempts made, on the part of the Wisconsin Legislature and its Territorial Governor (Doty), between 1839 and 1843, to induce the people of these counties to recognize this claim. These were, in a few instances, partially successful, although no official notice was taken of them by the authorities of Illinois. The reply made to the Wisconsin claim by Governor Ford—who wrote his “History of Illinois” when the subject was fresh in the public mind—was that, while the Ordinance of 1787 gave Congress power to organize a State north of the parallel running through the southern bend of Lake Michigan, “there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring such additional State to be organized of the territory north of that line.” In other words, that, when Congress, in 1818, authorized the organization of an additional State north of and in (i. e., within) the line named, it did not violate the Ordinance of 1787, but acted in accordance with it—in practically assuming that the new State “need not necessarily include the whole of the region north of that line.” The question was set at rest by Wisconsin herself in the action of her Constitutional Convention of 1847-48, in framing her first constitution, in form recognizing the northern boundary of Illinois as fixed by the enabling act of 1818.

NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, created by Act of the Legislature, approved, April 16, 1869. The Commissioners appointed by Governor Palmer to fix its location consisted of August Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, D. S. Hammond and William Adams. After considering many offers and examining numerous sites, the Commissioners finally selected the Chisholm farm, consisting of about 155 acres, 1½ miles from Elgin, on the west side of Fox River, and overlooking that stream, as a site—this having been tendered as a donation by the citizens of Elgin. Plans were adopted in the latter part of 1869, the system of construction chosen conforming, in the main, to that of the United States Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C. By January, 1872, the north wing and rear building were so far advanced as to permit the reception of sixty patients. The center building was ready for occupancy in April, 1873, and the south wing before the end of the following year. The total expenditures previous to 1876 had exceeded $637,000, and since that date liberal appropriations have been made for additions, repairs and improvements, including the addition of between 300 and 400 acres to the lands connected with the institution. The first Board of Trustees consisted of Charles N. Holden, Oliver Everett and Henry W. Sherman, with Dr. E. A. Kilbourne as the first Superintendent, and Dr. Richard A. Dewey (afterwards Superintendent of the Eastern Hospital at Kankakee) as his Assistant. Dr. Kilbourne remained at the head of the institution until his death, Feb. 27, 1890, covering a period of nineteen years. Dr. Kilbourne was succeeded by Dr. Henry J. Brooks, and he, by Dr. Loewy, in June, 1893, and the latter by Dr. John B. Hamilton (former Supervising Surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service) in 1897. Dr. Hamilton died in December, 1898. (See Hamilton, John B.) The total value of State property, June 30, 1894, was $882,745.66, of which $701,330 was in land and buildings. Under the terms of the law establishing the hospital, provision is made for the care therein of the incurably insane, so that it is both a hospital and an asylum. The whole number of patients under treatment, for the two years preceding June 30, 1894, was 1,797, the number of inmates, on Dec. 1, 1897, 1,054, and the average daily attendance for treatment, for the year 1896, 1,296. The following counties comprise the district dependent upon the Elgin Hospital: Boone, Carroll, Cook, DeKalb, Jo Daviess, Kane, Kendall, Lake, Stephenson, Whiteside and Winnebago.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution, incorporated in 1884, at Dixon, Lee County, Ill., for the purpose of giving instruction in branches related to the art of teaching. Its last report claims a total of 1,639 pupils, of whom 885 were men and 744 women, receiving instruction from thirty-six teachers. The total value of property was estimated at more than $200,000, of which $160,000 was in real estate and $45,000 in apparatus. Attendance on the institution has been affected by the establishment, under act of the Legislature of 1895, of the Northern State Normal School at DeKalb (which see).

NORTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, an institution for the confinement of criminals of the State, located at Joliet, Will County. The site was purchased by the State in 1857, and comprises some seventy-two acres. Its erection was found necessary because of the inadequacy of the first penitentiary, at Alton. (See Alton Penitentiary.) The original plan contemplated a cell-house containing 1,000 cells, which, it was thought, would meet the public necessities for many years to come. Its estimated cost was $550,000; but, within ten years, there had been expended upon the institution the sum of $934,000, and its capacity was taxed to the utmost. Subsequent enlargements have increased the cost to over $1,600,000, but by 1877, the institution had become so overcrowded that the erection of another State penal institution became positively necessary. (See Southern Penitentiary.) The prison has always been conducted on "the Auburn system," which contemplates associate labor in silence, silent meals in a common refectory, and (as nearly as practicable) isolation at night. The system of labor has varied at different times, the "lessee system," the "contract system" and the "State account plan" being successively in force. (See Convict Labor.) The whole number of convicts in the institution, at the date of the official report of 1895, was 1,566. The total assets of the institution, Sept. 30, 1894, were reported at $2,121,308.86, of which $1,644,601.11 was in real estate.

NORTH & SOUTH RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway.)

NORTHERN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution for the education of teachers of the common schools, authorized to be established by act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1895. The act made an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of buildings and other improvements. The institution was located at DeKalb, DeKalb County, in the spring of 1896, and the erection of buildings commenced soon after—Isaac F. Ellwood, of DeKalb, contributing $30,000 in cash, and J. F. Glidden, a site of sixty-seven acres of land. Up to Dec. 1, 1897, the appropriations and contributions, in land and money, aggregated $175,000. The school was expected to be ready for the reception of pupils in the latter part of 1899, and, it is estimated, will accommodate 1,000 students.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. The name formerly applied to that portion of the United States north and west of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The claim of the Government to the land had been acquired partly through conquest, by the expedition of Col. George Rogers Clark (which see), under the auspices of the State of Virginia in 1778; partly through treaties with the Indians, and partly through cessions from those of the original States laying claim thereto. The first plan for the government of this vast region was devised and formulated by Thomas Jefferson, in his proposed Ordinance of 1784, which failed of ultimate passage. But three years later a broader scheme was evolved, and the famous Ordinance of 1787, with its clause prohibiting the extension of slavery beyond the Ohio River, passed the Continental Congress. This act has been sometimes termed "The American Magna Charta," because of its engrafting upon the organic law the principles of human freedom and equal rights. The plan for the establishment of a distinctive territorial civil government in a new Territory—the first of its kind in the new republic—was felt to be a tentative step, and too much power was not granted to the residents. All the officers were appointive, and each official was required to be a land-owner. The elective franchise (but only for members of the General Assembly) could first be exercised only after the population had reached 5,000. Even then, every elector must own fifty acres of land, and every Representative, 200 acres. More liberal provisions, however, were subsequently incorporated by amendment, in 1809. The first civil government in the Northwest Territory was established by act of the Virginia Legislature, in the organization of all the country west of the Ohio under the name "Illinois County," of which the Governor was authorized to appoint a "County Lieutenant" or "Commandant-in-Chief." The first "Commandant" appointed was Col. John Todd, of Kentucky, though he continued to discharge the duties for only a short period, being killed in the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782. After that the Illinois Country was almost without the semblance of an organized civil government, until 1788, when Gen. Arthur St. Clair was appointed the first Governor of Northwest Territory, under the Ordinance of 1787, serving until the separation of this region into the Territories of Ohio and Indiana in 1800, when William Henry Harrison became the Governor of the latter, embracing all that portion of the original Northwest Territory except the State of Ohio. During St. Clair's administration (1790) that part of the present State of Illinois between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on the west, and a line extending north from about the site of old Fort Massac, on the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mackinaw River, in the present county of Tazewell, on the east, was erected into a county under the name of St. Clair, with three county-seats, viz.: Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher. (See St. Clair County.) Between 1830 and 1834 the name Northwest Territory was applied to an unorganized region, embracing the present State of Wisconsin, attached to Michigan Territory for governmental purposes. (See Illinois County; St. Clair, Arthur; and Todd, John.)

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE, located at Naperville, Du Page County, and founded in 1865, under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. It maintains business, preparatory and collegiate departments, besides a theological school. In 1898 it had a faculty of nineteen professors and assistants, with some 360 students, less than one-third of the latter being females, though both sexes are admitted to the college on an equal footing. The institution owns property to the value of $207,000, including an endowment of $85,000.

NORTHWESTERN GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway.)

NORTHWESTERN NORMAL, located at Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., incorporated in 1884; in 1894 had a faculty of twelve teachers with 171 pupils, of whom ninety were male and eighty-one female.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, an important educational institution, established at Evanston, in Cook County, in 1851. In 1898 it reported 2,599 students (1,980 male and 619 female), and a faculty of 234 instructors. It embraces the following departments, all of which confer degrees: A College of Liberal Arts; two Medical Schools (one for women exclusively); a Law School; a School of Pharmacy and a Dental College. The Garrett Biblical Institute, at which no degrees are conferred, constitutes the theological department of the University. The charter of the institution requires a majority of the Trustees to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the University is the largest and wealthiest of the schools controlled by that denomination. The College of Liberal Arts and the Garrett Biblical Institute are at Evanston; the other departments (all professional) are located in Chicago. In the academic department (Liberal Arts School), provision is made for both graduate and post-graduate courses. The Medical School was formerly known as the Chicago Medical College, and its Law Department was originally the Union College of Law, both of which have been absorbed by the University, as have also its schools of dentistry and pharmacy, which were formerly independent institutions. The property owned by the University is valued at $4,870,000, of which $1,100,000 is real estate, and $2,250,000 in endowment funds. Its income from fees paid by students in 1898 was $215,288, and total receipts from all sources, $482,389. Co-education of the sexes prevails in the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers is President.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, located in Chicago; was organized in 1859 as Medical School of the Lind (now Lake Forest) University. Three annual terms, of five months each, at first constituted a course, although attendance at two only was compulsory. The institution first opened in temporary quarters, Oct. 9, 1859, with thirteen professors and thirty-three students. By 1863 more ample accommodations were needed, and the Trustees of the Lind University being unable to provide a building, one was erected by the faculty. In 1864 the University relinquished all claim to the institution, which was thereupon incorporated as the Chicago Medical College. In 1868 the length of the annual terms was increased to six months, and additional requirements were imposed on candidates for both matriculation and graduation. The same year, the college building was sold, and the erection of a new and more commodious edifice, on the grounds of the Mercy Hospital, was commenced. This was completed in 1870, and the college became the medical department of the Northwestern University. The number of professorships had been increased to eighteen, and that of undergraduates to 107. Since that date new laboratory and clinical buildings have been erected, and the growth of the institution has been steady and substantial. Mercy and St. Luke's Hospital, and the South Side Free Dispensary afford resources for clinical instruction. The teaching faculty, as constituted in 1898, consists of about fifty instructors, including professors, lecturers, demonstrators, and assistants.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMAN'S MEDICAL SCHOOL, an institution for the professional education of women, located in Chicago. Its first corporate name was the "Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago," and it was in close connection with the Chicago Hospital for Women and Children. Later, it severed its connection with the hospital and took the name of the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago." Co-education of the sexes, in medicine and surgery, was experimentally tried from 1868 to 1870, but the experiment proved repugnant to the male students, who unanimously signed a protest against the continuance of the system. The result was the establishment of a separate school for women in 1870, with a faculty of sixteen professors. The requirements for graduation were fixed at four years of medical study, including three annual graded college terms of six months each. The first term opened in the autumn of 1870, with an attendance of twenty students. The original location of the school was in the "North Division" of Chicago, in temporary quarters. After the fire of 1871 a removal was effected to the "West Division," where (in 1878-79) a modest, but well arranged building was erected. A larger structure was built in 1884, and, in 1891, the institution became a part of the Northwestern University. The college, in all its departments, is organized along the lines of the best medical schools of the country. In 1896 there were twenty-four professorships, all capably filled, and among the faculty are some of the best known specialists in the country.

NORTON, Jesse O., lawyer, Congressman and Judge, was born at Bennington, Vt., April 25, 1812, and graduated from Williams College in 1835. He settled at Joliet in 1839, and soon became prominent in the affairs of Will County. His first public office was that of City Attorney, after which he served as County Judge (1846-50). Meanwhile, he was chosen a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1852, to Congress, as a Whig. His vigorous opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise resulted in his re-election as a Representative in 1854. At the expiration of his second term (1857) he was chosen Judge of the eleventh circuit, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Randall, resigned. He was once more elected to Congress in 1862, but disagreed with his party as to the legal status of the States lately in rebellion. President Johnson appointed him United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, which office he filled until 1869. Immediately upon his retirement he began private practice at Chicago, where he died, August 3, 1875.

NORWOOD PARK, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad (Wisconsin Division), 11 miles northwest of Chicago. Incorporated in City of Chicago, 1893.

NOYES, George Clement, clergyman, was born at Landaff, N. H., August 4, 1833, brought by his parents to Pike County, Ill., in 1844, and, at the age of 16, determined to devote his life to the ministry; in 1851, entered Illinois College at Jacksonville, graduating with first honors in the class of 1855. In the following autumn he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, and, having graduated in 1858, was ordained the same year, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Laporte, Ind. Here he remained ten years, when he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, Ill., then a small organization which developed, during the twenty years of his pastorate, into one of the strongest and most influential churches in Evanston. For a number of years Dr. Noyes was an editorial writer and weekly correspondent of "The New York Evangelist," over the signature of "Clement." He was also, for several years, an active and very efficient member of the Board of Trustees of Knox College. The liberal bent of his mind was illustrated in the fact that he acted as counsel for Prof. David Swing, during the celebrated trial of the latter for heresy before the Chicago Presbytery—his argument on that occasion winning encomiums from all classes of people. His death took place at Evanston, Jan. 14, 1889, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, and was deeply deplored, not only by his own church and denomination, but by the whole community. Some two weeks after it occurred a union meeting was held in one of the churches at Evanston, at which addresses in commemoration of his services were delivered by some dozen ministers of that village and of Chicago, while various social and literary organizations and the press bore testimony to his high character. He was a member of the Literary Society of Chicago, and, during the last year of his life, served as its President. Dr. Noyes was married, in 1858, to a daughter of David A. Smith, Esq., an honored citizen and able lawyer of Jacksonville.

OAKLAND, a city of Coles County on the Vandalia Line and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, 15 miles northeast of Charleston; is in grain center and broom-corn belt; the town has two banks and one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 995; (1900), 1,198.

OAK PARK, a village of Cook County, and popular residence suburb of Chicago, 9 miles west of the initial station of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, on which it is located; is also upon the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad. The place has numerous churches, prosperous schools, a public library, telegraph and express offices, banks and two local papers. Population (1890), 1,888; (1890), 4,771.

OBERLY, John H., journalist and Civil Service Commissioner, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1837; spent part of his boyhood in Allegheny County, Pa., but, in 1853, began learning the printer's trade in the office of "The Wooster (Ohio) Republican," completing it at Memphis, Tenn., and becoming a journeyman printer in 1857. He worked in various offices, including the Wooster paper, where he also began the study of law, but, in 1860, became part proprietor of "The Bulletin" job office at Memphis, in which he had been employed as an apprentice, and, later, as foreman. Having been notified to leave Memphis on account of his Union principles after the beginning of the Civil War, he returned to Wooster, Ohio, and conducted various papers there during the next four years, but, in 1865, came to Cairo, Ill., where he served for a time as foreman of "The Cairo Democrat," three years later establishing "The Cairo Bulletin." Although the latter paper was burned out a few months later, it was immediately re-established. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1877, was appointed by Governor Cullom the Democratic member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, serving four years, meanwhile (in 1880) being the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. Other positions held by him included Mayor of the city of Cairo (1869); President of the National Typographical Union at Chicago (1865), and at Memphis (1866); delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore (1872), and Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee (1882-84). After retiring from the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, he united in founding "The Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin," of which he was editor some three years. During President Cleveland's administration he was appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, being later transferred to the Commissionership of Indian Affairs. He was subsequently connected in an editorial capacity with "The Washington Post," "The Richmond (Va.) State," "The Concord (N. H.) People and Patriot" and "The Washington Times." While engaged in an attempt to reorganize "The People and Patriot," he died at Concord, N. H., April 15, 1899.

ODD FELLOWS. "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Alton, June 11, 1836. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and reorganized, at Springfield, in 1842. S. C. Pierce was the first Grand Master, and Samuel L. Miller, Grand Secretary. Wilkey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at Alton in 1838, and the Grand Encampment, at Peoria, in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch. In 1850 the subordinate branches of the Order numbered seventy-six, with 3,291 members, and $25,392.87 revenue. In 1895 the Lodges numbered 833, the membership 50,544, with $475,252.18 revenue, of which $135,018.40 was expended for relief. The Encampment branch, in 1895, embraced 179 organizations with a membership of 6,812 and $23,865.25 revenue, of which $6,781.40 was paid out for relief. The Rebekah branch, for the same year, comprised 422 Lodges, with 22,000 members and $43,215.65 revenue, of which $3,122.79 was for relief. The total sum distributed for relief by the several organizations (1895) was $144,972.59. The Order was especially liberal in its benefactions to the sufferers by the Chicago fire of 1871, an appeal to its members calling forth a generous response throughout the United States. (See Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.)

ODD FELLOWS' ORPHANS' HOME, a benevolent institution, incorporated in 1889, erected at Lincoln, Ill., under the auspices of the Daughters of Rebekah (see Odd Fellows), and dedicated August 19, 1892. The building is four stories in height, has a capacity for the accommodation of fifty children, and cost $36,524.76, exclusive of forty acres of land valued at $8,000.

ODELL, a village of Livingston County, and station on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 82 miles south-southwest of Chicago. It is in a grain and stock-raising region. Population (1880), 908; (1890), 800; (1900), 1,000.

ODIN, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways, 244 miles south by west from Chicago; in fruit belt; has coal-mine, two fruit evaporators, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,180.

O'FALLOX, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 18 miles east of St. Louis; has interurban railway, electric lights, water-works, factories, coal-mine, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,267.

OGDEN, William Butler, capitalist and Railway President, born at Walton, N. Y., June 15, 1805. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1834, and, the following year, removed to Chicago, where he established a land and trust agency. He took an active part in the various enterprises centering around Chicago, and, on the incorporation of the city, was elected its first Mayor. He was prominently identified with the construction of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and, in 1847, became its President. While visiting Europe in 1853, he made a careful study of the canals of Holland, which convinced him of the desirability of widening and deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal and of constructing a ship canal across the southern peninsula of Michigan. In 1855 he became President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railroad, and effected its consolidation with the Galena & Chicago Union. Out of this consolidation sprang the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, of which he was elected President. In 1850 he presided over the National Pacific Railroad Convention, and, upon the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he became its President. He was largely connected with the inception of the Northern Pacific line, in the success of which he was a firm believer. He also controlled various other interests of public importance, among them the great lumbering establishments at Peshtigo, Wis., and, at the time of his death, was the owner of what was probably the largest plant of that description in the world. His benefactions were numerous, among the recipients being the Rush Medical College, of which he was President; the Theological Seminary of the Northwest, the Chicago Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the University of Chicago, the Astronomical Society, and many other educational and benevolent institutions and organizations in the Northwest. Died, in New York City, August 3, 1877. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.)

OGLE, Joseph, pioneer, was born in Virginia in 1741, came to Illinois in 1785, settling in the American Bottom within the present County of Monroe, but afterwards removed to St. Clair County, about the site of the present town of O'Fallon, 8 miles north of Belleville; was selected by his neighbors to serve as Captain in their skirmishes with the Indians. Died, at his home in St. Clair County, in February, 1821. Captain Ogle had the reputation of being the earliest convert to Methodism in Illinois. Ogle County, in Northern Illinois, was named in his honor.—Jacob (Ogle), son of the preceding, also a native of Virginia, was born about 1772, came to Illinois with his father in 1785, and was a "Ranger" in the War of 1812. He served as a Representative from St. Clair County in the Third General Assembly (1822), and again in the Seventh (1830), in the former being an opponent of the pro-slavery convention scheme. Beyond two terms in the Legislature he seems to have held no public office except that of Justice of the Peace. Like his father, he was a zealous Methodist and highly respected. Died, in 1844, aged 72 years.

OGLE COUNTY, next to the "northern tier" of counties of the State and originally a part of Jo Daviess. It was separately organized in 1837, and Lee County was carved from its territory in 1839. In 1900 its area was 780 square miles, and its population 29,129. Before the Black Hawk War immigration was slow, and life primitive. Peoria was the nearest food market. New grain was "ground" on a grater, and old pounded with an extemporized pestle in a wooden mortar. Rock River flows across the county from northeast to southwest. A little oak timber grows along its banks, but, generally speaking, the surface is undulating prairie, with soil of a rich loam. Sandstone is in ample supply, and all the limestones abound. An extensive peat-bed has been discovered on the Killbuck Creek. Oregon, the county-seat, has fine water-power. The other principal towns are Rochelle, Polo, Forreston and Mount Morris.

OGLESBY, Richard James, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Oldham County, Ky., July 25, 1824; left an orphan at the age of 8 years; in 1836 accompanied an uncle to Decatur, Ill., where, until 1844, he worked at farming, carpentering and rope-making, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sullivan, in Moultrie County. In 1846 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's regiment), and served through the Mexican War, taking part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. In 1847 he pursued a course of study at the Louisville Law School, graduating in 1848. He was a "forty-niner" in California, but returned to Decatur in 1851. In 1858 he made an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in the Decatur District. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate, but early in 1861 resigned his seat to accept the colonelcy of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers. Through gallantry (notably at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth) he rose to be Major-General, being severely wounded in the last-named battle. He resigned his commission on account of disability, in May, 1864, and the following November was elected Governor, as a Republican. In 1872 he was re-elected Governor, but, two weeks after his inauguration, resigned to accept a seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected by the Legislature of 1873. In 1884 he was elected Governor for the third time—being the only man in the history of the State who (up to the present time—1899) has been thus honored. After the expiration of his last term as Governor, he devoted his attention to his private affairs at his home at Elkhart, in Logan County, where he died, April 24, 1899, deeply mourned by personal and political friends in all parts of the Union, who admired his strict integrity and sterling patriotism.

OHIO, INDIANA & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Peoria & Eastern Railroad.)

OHIO RIVER, an affluent of the Mississippi, formed by the union of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, at Pittsburgh, Pa. At this point it becomes a navigable stream about 400 yards wide, with an elevation of about 700 feet above sea-level. The beauty of the scenery along its banks secured for it, from the early French explorers (of whom La Salle was one), the name of "La Belle Riviere." Its general course is to the southwest, but with many sinuosities, forming the southern boundary of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the western and northern boundary of West Virginia and Kentucky, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, in latitude 37° N., and about 1,200 miles above the mouth of the latter stream. The area which it drains is computed to be 214,000 square miles. Its mouth is 268 feet above the level of the sea. The current is remarkably gentle and uniform, except near Louisville, where there is a descent of twenty-two feet within two miles, which is evaded by means of a canal around the falls. Large steamboats can navigate its whole length, except in low stages of water and when closed by ice in winter. Its largest affluents are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Great Kanawha and the Green Rivers, from the south, and the Wabash, the Miami, Scioto and Muskingum from the north. The principal cities on its banks are Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, New Albany, Madison and Cairo. It is crossed by bridges at Wheeling, Cincinnati and Cairo. The surface of the Ohio is subject to a variation of forty-two to fifty-one feet between high and low water. Its length is 975 miles, and its width varies from 400 to 1,000 yards. (See Inundations, Remarkable.)

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

OLNEY, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Richland County, 31 miles west of Vincennes, Ind., and 117 miles east of St. Louis, Mo., at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central and the Ohio River Division of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad; is in the center of the fruit belt and an important shipping point for farm produce and live-stock; has flour mills, a furniture factory and railroad repair shops, banks, a public library, churches and five newspapers, one issuing daily and another semi-weekly editions. Population (1890), 3,831; (1900), 4,260.

OMELVENY, John, pioneer and head of a numerous family which became prominent in Southern Illinois; was a native of Ireland who came to America about 1798 or 1799. After residing in Kentucky a few years, he removed to Illinois, locating in what afterwards became Pope County, whither his oldest son, Samuel, had preceded him about 1797 or 1798. The latter for a time followed the occupation of flat-boating, carrying produce to New Orleans. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 from Pope County, being the colleague of Hamlet Ferguson. A year later he removed to Randolph County, where he served as a member of the County Court, but, in 1820-22, we find him a member of the Second General Assembly from Union County, having successfully contested the seat of Samuel Alexander, who had received the certificate of election. He died in 1828.—Edward (Omenvy), another member of this family, and grandson of the elder John Omenvy, represented Monroe County in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), and was Presidential Elector in 1852, but died sometime during the Civil War.—Harvey K. S. (Omenvy), the fifth son of William Omenvy and grandson of John, was born in Todd County, Ky., in 1823, came to Southern Illinois, in 1852, and engaged in the practice of law, being for a time the partner of Senator Thomas E. Merritt, at Salem. Early in 1858 he was elected a Justice of the Circuit Court to succeed Judge Breese, who had been promoted to the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1861. He gained considerable notoriety by his intense hostility to the policy of the Government during the Civil War, was a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and was named as a member of the Peace Commission proposed to be appointed by the General Assembly, in 1863, to secure terms of peace with the Southern Confederacy. He was also a leading spirit in the peace meeting held at Peoria, in August, 1863. In 1869 Mr. Omenvy removed to Los Angeles, Cal., which has since been his home, and where he has carried on a lucrative law practice.

ONARGA, a town in Iroquois County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 85 miles south by west from Chicago, and 43 miles north by east from Champaign. It is a manufacturing town, flour, wagons, wire-fencing, stoves and tile being among the products. It has a bank, eight churches, a graded school, a commercial college, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,061; (1890), 994; (1900), 1,270.

ONEIDA, a city in Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles northeast of Galesburg; has wagon, pump and furniture factories, two banks, electric lights, several churches, a graded school, and a weekly paper. The surrounding country is rich prairie, where coal is mined about twenty feet below the surface. Pop. (1890), 699; (1900), 785.

OQUAWKA, the county-seat of Henderson County, situated on the Mississippi River, about 15 miles above Burlington Iowa, and 32 miles west of Galesburg. It is in a farming region, but has some manufactories. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank and three newspapers. Population (1900), 1,010.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. This is the name given to the first organic act, passed by Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The first step in this direction was taken in the appointment, by Congress, on March 1, 1784, of a committee, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan for the temporary government of the region which had been acquired, by the capture of Kaskaskia, by Col. George Rogers Clark, nearly six years previous. The necessity for some step of this sort had grown all the more urgent, in consequence of the recognition of the right of the United States to this region by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, and the surrender, by Virginia, of the title she had maintained thereto on account of Clark's conquest under her auspices—a right which she had exercised by furnishing whatever semblance of government so far existed northwest of the Ohio. The report submitted from Jefferson's committee proposed the division of the Territory into seven States, to which was added the proviso that, after the year 1800, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." This report failed of adoption, however, Congress contenting itself with the passage of a resolution providing for future organization of this territory into States by the people—the measures necessary for temporary government being left to future Congressional action. While the postponement, in the resolution as introduced by Jefferson, of the inhibition of slavery to the year 1800, has been criticised, its introduction was significant, as coming from a representative from a slave State, and being the first proposition in Congress looking to restriction, of any character, on the subject of slavery. Congress having taken no further step under the resolution adopted in 1784, the condition of the country (thus left practically without a responsible government, while increasing in population) became constantly more deplorable. An appeal from the people about Kaskaskia for some better form of government, in 1786, aided by the influence of the newly organized "Ohio Company," who desired to encourage emigration to the lands which they were planning to secure from the General Government, at last brought about the desired result, in the passage of the famous "Ordinance," on the 13th day of July, 1787. While making provision for a mode of temporary self-government by the people, its most striking features are to be found in the six "articles"—a sort of "Bill of Rights"—with which the document closes. These assert: (1) the right of freedom of worship and religious opinion; (2) the right to the benefit of habeas corpus and trial by jury; to proportionate representation, and to protection in liberty and property; (3) that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged"; (4) that the States, formed within the territory referred to, "shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made"; (5) prescribe the boundaries of the States to be formed therein and the conditions of their admission into the Union; and (6—and most significant of all) repeat the prohibition regarding the introduction of slavery into the Northwest Territory, as proposed by Jefferson, but without any qualification as to time. There has been considerable controversy regarding the authorship of this portion of the Ordinance, into which it is not necessary to enter here. While it has been characterized as a second and advanced Declaration of Independence—and probably no single act of Congress was ever fraught with more important and far-reaching results—it seems remarkable that a majority of the States supporting it and securing its adoption, were then, and long continued to be, slave States.

OREGON, the county-seat of Ogle County, situated on Rock River and the Minneapolis Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 100 miles west from Chicago. The surrounding region is agricultural; the town has water power and manufactures flour, pianos, steel tanks, street sprinklers, and iron castings. It has two banks, water-works supplied by flowing artesian wells, cereal mill, and two weekly newspapers; has also obtained some repute as a summer resort. Pop. (1880), 1,088; (1890), 1,566; (1900), 1,577.

ORION, a village of Henry County, at the intersection of the Rock Island Division of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 19 miles southeast of Rock Island. Pop. (1890), 624; (1900), 584.

OSBORN, William Henry, Railway President, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 21, 1820. After receiving a high school education in his native town, he entered the counting room of the East India house of Peele, Hubbell & Co.; was subsequently sent to represent the firm at Manila, finally engaging in business on his own account, during which he traveled extensively in Europe. Returning to the United States in 1853, he took up his residence in New York, and, having married the daughter of Jonathan Sturges, one of the original incorporators and promoters of the Illinois Central Railroad, he soon after became associated with that enterprise. In August, 1854, he was chosen a Director of the Company, and, on Dec. 1, 1855, became its third President, serving in the latter position nearly ten years (until July 11, 1865), and, as a Director, until 1877—in all, twenty-two years. After retiring from his connection with the Illinois Central Railroad, Mr. Osborn gave his attention largely to enterprises of an educational and benevolent character in aid of the unfortunate classes in the State of New York.

OSBORN, Thomas O., soldier and diplomatist, was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 11, 1832; graduated from the Ohio University at Athens, in 1854; studied law at Crawfordsville, Ind., with Gen. Lew Wallace, was admitted to the bar and began practice in Chicago. Early in the war for the Union he joined the "Yates Phalanx," which, after some delay on account of the quota being full, was mustered into the service, in August, 1861, as the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the subject of this sketch being commissioned its Lieutenant-Colonel. His promotion to the colonelcy soon followed, the regiment being sent east to guard the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where it met the celebrated Stonewall Jackson, and took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Winchester, Bermuda Hundreds, and Drury's Bluff, besides the sieges of Charleston and Petersburg. At Bermuda Hundreds Colonel Osborn was severely wounded, losing the use of his right arm. He bore a conspicuous part in the operations about Richmond which resulted in the capture of the rebel capital, his services being recognized by promotion to the brevet rank of Major-General. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law in Chicago, but, in 1874, was appointed Consul-General and Minister-Resident to the Argentine Republic, remaining in that position until June, 1885, when he resigned, resuming his residence in Chicago.

OSWEGO, a village in Kendall County, on the Aurora and Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 6 miles south of Aurora. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 618.

OTTAWA, the county-seat and principal city of La Salle County, being incorporated as a village in 1838, and, as a city, in 1853. It is located at the confluence of the Illinois and Fox Rivers and on the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is the intersecting point of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway and the Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 98 miles east of Rock Island and 83 miles west-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region abounds in coal. Sand of a superior quality for the manufacture of glass is found in the vicinity and the place has extensive glass works. Other manufactured products are brick, drain-tile, sewer-pipe, tile-roofing, pottery, pianos, organs, cigars, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements, hay carriers, hay presses, sash, doors, blinds, cabinet work, saddlery and harness and pumps. The city has some handsome public buildings including the Appellate (formerly Supreme) Court House for the Northern Division. It also has several public parks, one of which (South Park) contains a medicinal spring. There are a dozen churches and numerous public school buildings, including a high school. The city is lighted by gas and electricity, has electric street railways, good sewerage, and water-works supplied from over 150 artesian wells and numerous natural springs. It has one private and two national banks, five libraries, and eight weekly newspapers (three German), of which four issue daily editions. Pop. (1890), 9,985; (1900), 10,588.

OTTAWA, CHICAGO & FOX RIVER VALLEY RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

OUTAGAMIES, a name given, by the French, to the Indian tribe known as the Foxes. (See Sacs and Foxes.)

OWEN, Thomas J. V., early legislator and Indian Agent, was born in Kentucky, April 5, 1801; came to Illinois at an early day, and, in 1830, was elected to the Seventh General Assembly from Randolph County; the following year was appointed Indian Agent at Chicago, as successor to Dr. Alexander Wolcott, who had died in the latter part of 1830. Mr. Owen served as Indian Agent until 1835; was a member of the first Board of Town Trustees of the village of Chicago, Commissioner of School Lands, and one of the Government Commissioners who conducted the treaty with the Pottawatomie and other tribes of Indians at Chicago, in September, 1833. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 15, 1835.

PADDOCK, Gaius, pioneer, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1758; at the age of 17 he entered the Colonial Army, serving until the close of the Revolutionary War, and being in Washington's command at the crossing of the Delaware. After the war he removed to Vermont; but, in 1815, went to Cincinnati, and, a year later, to St. Charles, Mo. Then, after having spent about a year at St. Louis, in 1818 he located in Madison County, Ill., at a point afterwards known as "Paddock's Grove," and which became one of the most prosperous agricultural sections of Southern Illinois. Died, in 1831.

PAINE, (Gen.) Eleazer A., soldier, was born in Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815; graduated at West Point Military Academy, in 1839, and was assigned to the First Infantry, serving in the Florida War (1839-40), but resigned, Oct. 11, 1840. He then studied law and practiced at Painesville, Ohio, (1843-48), and at Monmouth, Ill., (1848-61), meanwhile serving in the lower branch of the Eighteenth General Assembly (1852-53). Before leaving Ohio, he had been Deputy United States Marshal and Lieutenant-Colonel of the State Militia, and, in Illinois, became Brigadier-General of Militia (1845-48). He was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Illinois in April, 1861, and served through the war, being promoted Brigadier-General in September, 1861. The first duty performed by his regiment, after this date, was the occupation of Paducah, Ky., where he was in command. Later, it took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, the battles of Shiloh, New Madrid and Corinth, and also in the various engagements in Northern Georgia and in the "march to the sea." From November, 1862, to May, 1864, General Paine was guarding railroad lines in Central Tennessee, and, during a part of 1864, in command of the Western District of Kentucky. He resigned, April 5, 1865, and died in Jersey City, Dec. 16, 1882. A sturdy Union man, he performed his duty as a soldier with great zeal and efficiency.

PALATINE, a village of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 26 miles northwest from Chicago. There are flour and planing mills here; dairying and farming are leading industries of the surrounding country. Population (1880), 731; (1890), 891; (1900), 1,020.

PALESTINE, a town in Crawford County, about 2 miles from the Wabash River, 7 miles east of Robinson, and 35 miles southwest of Terre Haute, on the Illinois Central Railway; has five churches, a graded school, a bank, weekly newspaper, flour mill, cold storage plant, canning factory, garment factory, and municipal light and power plant. Pop. (1890), 732; (1900), 979.

PALMER, Frank W., journalist, ex-Congressman and Public Printer, was born at Manchester, Dearborn County, Ind., Oct. 11, 1827; learned the printer's trade at Jamestown, N. Y., afterwards edited "The Jamestown Journal," and served two terms in the New York Legislature; in 1858 removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and edited "The Dubuque Times," was elected to Congress in 1860, and again in 1868 and 1872, meanwhile having purchased "The Des Moines Register," which he edited for several years. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and became editor of "The Inter Ocean," remaining two years; in 1877 was appointed Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving eight years. Shortly after the accession of President Harrison, in 1889, he was appointed Public Printer, continuing in office until the accession of President Cleveland in 1893, when he returned to newspaper work, but resumed his old place at the head of the Government Printing Bureau after the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897.

PALMER, John McAuley, lawyer, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., Sept. 13, 1817; removed with his father to Madison County, Ill., in 1831, and, four years later, entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, as a student; later taught and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1843 he was elected Probate Judge of Macoupin County, also served in the State Constitutional Convention of 1847; after discharging the duties of Probate and County Judge, was elected to the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, in 1852, and re-elected in 1854, as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, casting his vote for Lyman Trumbull for United States Senator in 1855, but resigned his seat in 1856; was President of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in the latter year, and appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in 1859, and chosen a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket in 1860; served as a member of the National Peace Conference of 1861; entered the army as Colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; was promoted Brigadier General, in November, 1861, taking part in the campaign in Tennessee up to Chickamauga, assuming the command of the Fourteenth Army Corps with the rank of Major-General, but was relieved at his own request before Atlanta. In 1865 he was assigned, by President Lincoln, to command of the Military Department of Kentucky, but, in September, 1866, retired from the service, and, in 1867, became a citizen of Springfield. The following year he was elected Governor, as a Republican, but, in 1872, supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since cooperated with the Democratic party. He was three times the unsuccessful candidate of his party for United States Senator, and was their nominee for Governor in 1888, but defeated. In 1890 he was nominated for United States Senator by the Democratic State Convention and elected in joint session of the Legislature, March 11, 1891, receiving on the 154th ballot 101 Democratic and two Farmers' Mutual Alliance votes. He became an important factor in the campaign of 1896 as candidate of the "Sound Money" Democracy for President, although receiving no electoral votes, proving his devotion to principle. His last years were occupied in preparation of a volume of personal recollections, which was completed, under the title of "The Story of an Earnest Life," a few weeks before his death, which occurred at his home in Springfield, September 25, 1900.

PALMER, Potter, merchant and capitalist, was born in Albany County, N. Y., in 1825; received an English education and became a junior clerk in a country store at Durham, Greene County, in that State, three years later being placed in charge of the business, and finally engaging in business on his own account. Coming to Chicago in 1852, he embarked in the dry-goods business on Lake Street, establishing the house which afterwards became Field, Leiter & Co. (now Marshall Field & Co.), from which he retired, in 1865, with the basis of an ample fortune, which has since been immensely increased by fortunate operations in real estate. Mr. Palmer was Second Vice-President of the first Board of Local Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1891.—Mrs. Bertha M. Honore (Palmer), wife of the preceding, is the daughter of H. H.

Honore, formerly a prominent real-estate owner and operator of Chicago. She is a native of Louisville, Ky., where her girlhood was chiefly spent, though she was educated at a convent near Baltimore, Md. Later she came with her family to Chicago, and, in 1870, was married to Potter Palmer. Mrs. Palmer has been a recognized leader in many social and benevolent movements, but won the highest praise by her ability and administrative skill, exhibited as President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

PALMYRA, a village of Macoupin County, on the Springfield Division of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railway, 33 miles southwest from Springfield; has some local manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. Population (1900), 813.

PANA, an important railway center and principal city of Christian County, situated in the southeastern part of the County, and at the intersecting point of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads, 35 miles south by west from Decatur, and 42 miles southeast of Springfield. It is an important shipping-point for grain and has two elevators. Its mechanical establishments include two flouring mills, a foundry, two machine shops and two planing mills. The surrounding region is rich in coal, which is extensively mined. Pana has banks, several churches, graded schools, and three papers issuing daily and weekly editions. Population (1890), 5,077; (1900), 5,530.

PANA, SPRINGFIELD & NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

PARIS, a handsome and flourishing city, the county-seat of Edgar County. It is an important railway center, situated on the "Big Four" and the Vandalia Line, 160 miles south of Chicago, and 170 miles east-northeast of St. Louis; is in the heart of a wealthy and populous agricultural region, and has a prosperous trade. Its industries include foundries, three elevators, flour, saw and planing mills, glass, broom, and corn product factories. The city has three banks, three daily and four weekly newspapers, a court house, ten churches, and graded schools. Pop. (1890), 4,996; (1900), 6,105.

PARIS & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PARKS, Gavion D. A., lawyer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1817; went to New York City in 1838, where he completed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar, removing to Lockport, Ill., in 1842. Here he successively edited a paper, served as Master in Chancery and in an engineering corps on the Illinois & Michigan Canal; was elected County Judge in 1849, removed to Joliet, and, for a time, acted as an attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Michigan Central and the Chicago & Alton Railroads; was also a Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; was elected Representative in 1852, became a Republican and served on the first Republican State Central Committee (1856); the same year was elected to the State Senate, and was a Commissioner of the State Penitentiary in 1864. In 1872 Mr. Parks joined in the Liberal-Republican movement, was defeated for Congress, and afterwards acted with the Democratic party. Died, Dec. 28, 1895.

PARKS, Lawson A., journalist, was born at Mecklenburg, N. C., April 15, 1813; learned the printing trade at Charlotte, in that State; came to St. Louis in 1833, and, in 1836, assisted in establishing "The Alton Telegraph," but sold his interest a few years later. Then, having officiated as pastor of Presbyterian churches for some years, in 1854 he again became associated with "The Telegraph," acting as its editor. Died at Alton, March 31, 1875.

PARK RIDGE, a suburban village on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 13 miles northwest of Chicago. Population (1880), 457; (1890), 987; (1900), 1,340.

PARTRIDGE, Charles Addison, journalist and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in Westford, Chittenden County, Vt., Dec. 8, 1843; came with his parents to Lake County, Ill., in 1844, and spent his boyhood on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, with four terms in a high school at Burlington, Wis. At 16 he taught a winter district school near his boyhood home, and at 18 enlisted in what became Company C of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, being mustered into the service as Eighth Corporal at Rockford. His regiment becoming attached to the Army of the Cumberland, he participated with it in the battles of Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, as well as those of Franklin and Nashville, and has taken a just pride in the fact that he never fell out on the march, took medicine from a doctor or was absent from his regiment during its term of service, except for four months while recovering from a gun-shot wound received at Chickamauga. He was promoted successively to Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of his old company, of which his father was First Lieutenant for six months and until forced to resign on account of impaired health. Receiving his final discharge, June 28, 1865, he returned to the farm, where he remained until 1869, in the meantime being married to Miss Jennie E. Earle, in 1866, and teaching school one winter. In 1869 he was elected County Treasurer of Lake County on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1871; in January of the latter year, purchased an interest in "The Waukegan Gazette," with which he remained associated some fifteen years, at first as the partner of Rev. A. K. Fox, and later of his younger brother, H. E. Partridge. In 1877 he was appointed, by President Hayes, Postmaster at Waukegan, serving four years; in 1886 was elected to the Legislature, serving (by successive elections) as Representative in the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies, being frequently called upon to occupy the Speaker's chair, and, especially during the long Senatorial contest of 1891, being recognized as a leader of the Republican minority. In 1888 he was called to the service of the Republican State Central Committee (of which he had previously been a member), as assistant to the veteran Secretary, the late Daniel Shepard, remaining until the death of his chief, when he succeeded to the secretaryship. During the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was associated with the late William J. Campbell, then the Illinois member of the Republican National Committee, and was entrusted by him with many important and confidential missions. Without solicitation on his part, in 1894 he was again called to assume the secretaryship of the Republican State Central Committee, and bore a conspicuous and influential part in winning the brilliant success achieved by the party in the campaign of that year. From 1893 to 1895 he served as Mayor of Waukegan; in 1896 became Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois—a position which he held in 1889 under Commander James S. Martin, and to which he has been re-appointed by successive Department Commanders up to the present time. Mr. Partridge's service in the various public positions held by him, has given him an acquaintance extending to every county in the State.

PATOKA, a village of Marion County, on the Western branch of the Illinois Central Railway, 15 miles south of Vandalia. There are flour and saw mills here; the surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 640.

PATTERSON, Robert Wilson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1814; came to Bond County, Ill., with his parents in 1822, his father dying two years later; at 18 had had only nine months' schooling, but graduated at Illinois College in 1837; spent a year at Lane Theological Seminary, another as tutor in Illinois College, and then, after two years more at Lane Seminary and preaching in Chicago and at Monroe, Mich., in 1842 established the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which he remained the pastor over thirty years. In 1850 he received a call to the chair of Didactic Theology at Lane Seminary, as successor to Dr. Lyman Beecher, but it was declined, as was a similar call ten years later. Resigning his pastorate in 1873, he was, for several years, Professor of Christian Evidences and Ethics in the Theological Seminary of the Northwest; in 1876-78 served as President of Lake Forest University (of which he was one of the founders), and, in 1880-83, as lecturer in Lane Theological Seminary. He received the degree of D.D. from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1854, that of LL.D. from Lake Forest University, and was Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly (N. S.) at Wilmington, Del., in 1859. Died, at Evanston, Ill., Feb. 24, 1894.

PAVEY, Charles W., soldier and ex-State Auditor, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1835; removed to Illinois in 1859, settling in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, and, for a time, followed the occupation of a farmer and stock-raiser. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Eightieth Illinois Volunteers for the Civil War, and became First Lieutenant of Company E. He was severely wounded at the battle of Sand Mountain, and, having been captured, was confined in Libby Prison, at Salisbury, N. C., and at Danville, Va., for a period of nearly two years, enduring great hardship and suffering. Having been exchanged, he served to the close of the war as Assistant Inspector-General on the Staff of General Rousseau, in Tennessee. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880, which nominated General Garfield for the Presidency, and was one of the famous "306" who stood by General Grant in that struggle. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur Collector of Internal Revenue for the Southern District, and, in 1888, was nominated and elected State Auditor on the Republican ticket, but was defeated for re-election in the "land-slide" of 1892. General Pavey has been prominent in "G. A. R." councils, and held the position of Junior Vice-Commander for the Department of Illinois in 1878, and that of Senior Vice-Commander in 1879. He also served as Brigadier-General of the National Guard, for Southern Illinois, during the railroad strike of 1877. In 1897 he received from President McKinley the appointment of Special Agent of the Treasury Department. His home is at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County.

PAWNEE, a village of Sangamon County, at the eastern terminus of the Auburn & Pawnee Railroad, 19 miles south of Springfield. The town has a bank and a weekly paper. Population (1900), 595; (1903, est.), 1,000.

PAWNEE RAILROAD, a short line in Sangamon County, extending from Pawnee to Auburn (9 miles), where it forms a junction with the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The company was organized and procured a charter in December, 1888, and the road completed the following year. The cost was $101,774. Capital stock authorized, $100,000; funded debt (1895), $50,000.

PAW PAW, a village of Lee County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 8 miles northwest of Earlville. The town is in a farming region, but has a bank and one weekly paper. Population (1890), 635; (1900), 765.

PAXTON, the county-seat of Ford County, is situated at the intersection of the Chicago Division of the Illinois Central and the Lake Erie & Western Railroads, 103 miles south by west from Chicago, and 49 miles east of Bloomington. It contains a court house, two schools, water-works, electric light and water-heating system, two banks, nine churches, and one daily newspaper. It is an important shipping-point for the farm products of the surrounding territory, which is a rich agricultural region. Besides brick and tile works and flour mills, factories for the manufacture of carriages, buggies, hardware, cigars, brooms, and plows are located here. Pop. (1890), 2,187; (1900), 3,036.

PAYSON, a village in Adams County, 15 miles southeast of Quincy; the nearest railroad station being Fall Creek, on the Quincy and Louisiana Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has one newspaper. Population (1900), 465.

PATSON, Lewis E., lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1840; came to Illinois at the age of 12, and, after passing through the common schools, attended Lombard University, at Galesburg, for two years. He was admitted to the bar at Ottawa in 1862, and, in 1865, took up his residence at Pontiac. From 1869 to 1873 he was Judge of the Livingston County Court, and, from 1881 to 1891, represented his District in Congress, being elected as a Republican, but, in 1890, was defeated by his Democratic opponent, Herman W. Snow. Since retiring from Congress he has practiced his profession in Washington, D. C.

PEABODY, Selim Hobart, educator, was born in Rockingham County, Vt., August 20, 1829; after reaching 13 years of age, spent a year in a Boston Latin School, then engaged in various occupations, including teaching, until 1848, when he entered the University of Vermont, graduating third in his class in 1852; was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Engineering in the Polytechnic College at Philadelphia, in 1854, remaining three years, when he spent five years in Wisconsin, the last three as Superintendent of Schools at Racine. From 1865 to 1871 he was teacher of physical science in Chicago High School, also conducting night schools for working men; in 1871 became Professor of Physics and Engineering in Massachusetts Agricultural College, but returned to the Chicago High School in 1874; in 1876 took charge of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, and, in 1878, entered the Illinois Industrial University (now University of Illinois), at Champaign, first as Professor of Mechanical Engineering, in 1880 becoming President, but resigning in 1891. During the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Professor Peabody was Chief of the Department of Liberal Arts, and, on the expiration of his service there, assumed the position of Curator of the newly organized Chicago Academy of Sciences, from which he retired some two years later.

PEARL, a village of Pike County, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 14 miles west of Roodhouse. Population (1890), 928; (1900), 722.

PEARSON, Isaac N., ex-Secretary of State, was born at Centreville, Pa., July 27, 1842; removed to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in 1858, and has ever since resided there. In 1872 he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1876. Later he engaged in real-estate and banking business. He was a member of the lower house in the Thirty-third, and of the Senate in the Thirty-fifth, General Assembly, but before the expiration of his term in the latter, was elected Secretary of State, on the Republican ticket, in 1888. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, although, next to Governor Fifer, he received the largest vote cast for any candidate for a political office on the Republican State ticket.

PEARSON, John M., ex-Railway and Warehouse Commissioner, born at Newburyport, Mass., in 1832—the son of a ship-carpenter; was educated in his native State and came to Illinois in 1849, locating at the city of Alton, where he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In 1873 he was appointed a member of the first Railway and Warehouse Commission, serving four years; in 1878 was elected Representative in the Thirty-first General Assembly from Madison County, and was re-elected, successively, in 1880 and '82. He was appointed a member of the first Board of Live-Stock Commissioners in 1885, serving until 1893, for a considerable portion of the time as President of the Board. Mr. Pearson is a lifelong Republican and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. His present home is at Godfrey.

PEARSONS, Daniel K., M.D., real-estate operator and capitalist, was born at Bradfordton, Vt., April 14, 1820; began teaching at 16 years of age, and, at 21, entered Dartmouth College, taking a two years' course. He then studied medicine, and, after practicing a short time in his native State, removed to Chicopee, Mass., where he remained from 1843 to 1857. The latter year he came to Ogle County, Ill., and began operating in real estate, finally adding to this a loan business for Eastern parties, but discontinued this line in 1877. He owns extensive tracts of timber lands in Michigan, is a Director in the Chicago City Railway Company and American Exchange Bank, besides being interested in other financial institutions. He has been one of the most liberal supporters of the Chicago Historical Society, and a princely contributor to various benevolent and educational institutions. His gifts to colleges, in different parts of the country, aggregating over a million dollars.

PECATONICA, a town in Pecatonica Township, Winnebago County, on the Pecatonica River. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, midway between Freeport and Rockford, being 14 miles from each. It contains a carriage factory, machine shop, condensed milk factory, a bank, six churches, a graded school, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,059; (1900), 1,045.

PECATONICA RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which rise in Iowa County, Wis. They unite a little north of the Illinois State line, whence the river runs southeast to Freeport, then east and northeast, until it enters Rock River at Rockton. From the headwaters of either branch to the mouth of the river is about 50 miles.

PECK, Ebenezer, early lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine, May 22, 1805; received an academic education, studied law and was admitted to the bar in Canada in 1827. He was twice elected to the Provincial Parliament and made King's Counsel in 1833; came to Illinois in 1835, settling in Chicago; served in the State Senate (1838-40), and in the House (1840-42 and 1858-60); was also Clerk of the Supreme Court (1841-45), Reporter of Supreme Court decisions (1849-63), and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Mr. Peck was an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, by whom he was appointed a member of the Court of Claims, at Washington, serving until 1875. Died, May 25, 1881.

PECK, Ferdinand Wythe, lawyer and financier, was born in Chicago, July 15, 1848—the son of Philip F. W. Peck, a pioneer and early merchant of the metropolis of Illinois; was educated in the public schools, the Chicago University and Union College of Law, graduating from both of the last named institutions, and being admitted to the bar in 1869. For a time he engaged in practice, but his father having died in 1871, the responsibility of caring for a large estate devolved upon him and has since occupied his time, though he has given much attention to the amelioration of the condition of the poor of his native city, and works of practical benevolence and public interest. He is one of the founders of the Illinois Humane Society, has been President and a member of the Board of Control of the Chicago Athenæum, member of the Board of Education, President of the Chicago Union League, and was an influential factor in securing the success of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, serving as First Vice-President of the Chicago Board of Directors, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and member of the Board of Reference and Control. Of late years, Mr. Peck has been connected with several important building enterprises of a semi-public character, which have added to the reputation of Chicago, including the Auditorium, Stock Exchange Building and others in which he is a leading stockholder, and in the erection of which he has been a chief promoter. In 1898 he was appointed, by President McKinley, the United States Commissioner to the International Exposition at Paris of 1900, as successor to the late Maj. M. P. Handy, and the success which has followed his discharge of the duties of that position, has demonstrated the fitness of his selection.

PECK, George R., railway attorney, born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1843; was early taken to Wisconsin, where he assisted in clearing his father's farm; at 16 became a country school-teacher to aid in freeing the same farm from debt; enlisted at 19 in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, later becoming a Captain in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, with which he joined in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Returning home at the close of the war, he began the study of law at Janesville, spending six years there as a student, Clerk of the Circuit Court and in practice. From there he went to Kansas and, between 1871 and '74, practiced his profession at Independence, when he was appointed by President Grant United States District Attorney for the Kansas District, but resigned this position, in 1879, to return to general practice. In 1881 he became General Solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, removing to Chicago in 1893. In 1895 he resigned his position with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to accept a similar position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which (1898) he still holds. Mr. Peck is recognized as one of the most gifted orators in the West, and, in 1897, was chosen to deliver the principal address at the unveiling of the Logan equestrian statue in Lake Front Park, Chicago; has also officiated as orator on a number of other important public occasions, always acquitting himself with distinction.

PECK, John Mason, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 31, 1789; removed to Greene County, N. Y., in 1811, where he united with the Baptist Church, the same year entering on pastoral work, while prosecuting his studies and supporting himself by teaching. In 1814 he became pastor of a church at Amenia, N. Y., and, in 1817, was sent west as a missionary, arriving in St. Louis in the latter part of the same year. During the next nine years he traveled extensively through Missouri and Illinois, as an itinerant preacher and teacher, finally locating at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, where, in 1826, he established the Rock Spring Seminary for the education of teachers and ministers. Out of this grew Shurtleff College, founded at Upper Alton in 1835, in securing the endowment of which Dr. Peck traveled many thousands of miles and collected $20,000, and of which he served as Trustee for many years. Up to 1843 he devoted much time to aiding in the establishment of a theological institution at Covington, Ky., and, for two years following, was Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the American Baptist Publication Society, with headquarters in Philadelphia. Returning to the West, he served as pastor of several important churches in Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky. A man of indomitable will, unflagging industry and thoroughly upright in conduct, for a period of a quarter of a century, in the early history of the State, probably no man exerted a larger influence for good and the advancement of the cause of education, among the pioneer citizens of all classes, than Dr. Peck. Though giving his attention so constantly to preaching and teaching, he found time to write much, not only for the various publications with which he was, from time to time, connected, but also for other periodicals, besides publishing "A Guide for Emigrants" (1831), of which a new edition appeared in 1836, and a "Gazetteer of Illinois" (Jacksonville, 1834, and Boston, 1837), which continue to be valued for the information they contain of the condition of the country at that time. He was an industrious collector of historical records in the form of newspapers and pamphlets, which were unfortunately destroyed by fire a few years before his death. In 1852 he received the degree of D. D. from Harvard University. Died, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, March 15, 1858.

PECK, Philip F. W., pioneer merchant, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1809, the son of a wholesale merchant who had lost his fortune by indorsing for a friend. After some years spent in a mercantile house in New York, he came to Chicago on a prospecting tour, in 1830; the following year brought a stock of goods to the embryo emporium of the Northwest—then a small backwoods hamlet—and, by trade and fortunate investments in real estate, laid the foundation of what afterwards became a large fortune. He died, Oct. 23, 1871, as the result of an accident occurring about the time of the great fire of two weeks previous, from which he was a heavy sufferer pecuniarily. Three of his sons, Walter L., Clarence I. and Ferdinand W. Peck, are among Chicago's most substantial citizens.

PEKIN, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Tazewell County, and an important railway center, located on the Illinois River, 10 miles south of Peoria and 56 miles north of Springfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the chief occupations in the surrounding country, but the city itself is an important grain market with large general shipping interests. It has several distilleries, besides grain elevators, malt-houses, brick and tile works, lumber yards, planing mills, marble works, plow and wagon works, and a factory for corn products. Its banking facilities are adequate, and its religious and educational advantages are excellent. The city has a public library, park, steam-heating plant, three daily and four weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 6,347; (1900), 8,420.

PEKIN, LINCOLN & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway.)

PELL, Gilbert T., Representative in the Third Illinois General Assembly (1822) from Edwards County, and an opponent of the resolution for a State Convention adopted by the Legislature at that session, designed to open the door for the admission of slavery. Mr. Pell was a son-in-law of Morris Birkbeck, who was one of the leaders in opposition to the Convention scheme, and very naturally sympathized with his father-in-law. He was elected to the Legislature, for a second term, in 1828, but subsequently left the State, dying elsewhere, when his widow removed to Australia.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. As to operations of this corporation in Illinois, see Calumet River; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; South Chicago & Southern, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways. The whole number of miles owned, leased and operated by the Pennsylvania System, in 1898, was 1,987.21, of which only 61.34 miles were in Illinois. It owns, however, a controlling interest in the stock of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (which see).

PEORIA, the second largest city of the State and the county-seat of Peoria County, is 160 miles southwest of Chicago, and at the foot of an expansion of the Illinois River known as Peoria Lake. The site of the town occupies an elevated plateau, having a water frontage of four miles and extending back to a bluff, which rises 200 feet above the river level and about 120 feet above the highest point of the main site. It was settled in 1778 or '79, although, as generally believed, the French missionaries had a station there in 1711. There was certainly a settlement there as early as 1725, when Renault received a grant of lands at Pimitou, facing the lake then bearing the same name as the village. From that date until 1812, the place was continuously occupied as a French village, and is said to have been the most important point for trading in the Mississippi Valley. The original village was situated about a mile and a half above the foot of the lake; but later, the present site was occupied, at first receiving the name of "La Ville de Maillet," from a French Canadian who resided in Peoria, from 1765 to 1801 (the time of his death), and who commanded a company of volunteers in the Revolutionary War. The population of the old town removed to the new site, and the present name was given to the place by American settlers, from the Peoria Indians, who were the occupants of the country when it was first discovered, but who had followed their cognate tribes of the Illinois family to Cahokia and Kaskaskia, about a century before American occupation of this region. In 1812 the town is estimated to have contained about seventy dwellings, with a population of between 200 and 300, made up largely of French traders, hunters and voyageurs, with a considerable admixture of half-breeds and Indians, and a few Americans. Among the latter were Thomas Forsyth, Indian Agent and confidential adviser of Governor Edwards; Michael La Croix, son-in-law of Julian Dubuque, founder of the city of Dubuque; Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, and for whom Le Claire, Iowa, is named; William Arundel, afterwards Recorder of St. Clair County, and Isaac Darnielle, the second lawyer in Illinois.—In November, 1812, about half the town was burned, by order of Capt. Thomas E. Craig, who had been directed, by Governor Edwards, to proceed up the river in boats with materials to build a fort at Peoria. At the same time, the Governor himself was at the head of a force marching against Black Partridge's village, which he destroyed. Edwards had no communication with Craig, who appears to have acted solely on his own responsibility. That the latter's action was utterly unjustifiable, there can now be little doubt. He alleged, by way of excuse, that his boats had been fired upon from the shore, at night, by Indians or others, who were harbored by the citizens. The testimony of the French, however, is to the effect that it was an unprovoked and cowardly assault, instigated by wine which the soldiers had stolen from the cellars of the inhabitants. The bulk of those who remained after the fire were taken by Craig to a point below Alton and put ashore. This occurred in the beginning of winter, and the people, being left in a destitute condition, were subjected to great suffering. A Congressional investigation followed, and the French, having satisfactorily established the fact that they were not hostile, were restored to their possessions.—In 1813 a fort, designed for permanent occupancy, was erected and named Fort Clark, in honor of Col. George Rogers Clark. It had one (if not two) block-houses, with magazines and quarters for officers and men. It was finally evacuated in 1818, and was soon afterwards burned by the Indians. Although a trading-post had been maintained here, at intervals, after the affair of 1812, there was no attempt made to rebuild the town until 1819, when Americans began to arrive.—In 1824 a post of the American Fur Company was established here by John Hamlin, the company having already had, for five years, a station at Wesley City, three miles farther down the river. Hamlin also traded in pork and other products, and was the first to introduce keel-boats on the Illinois River. By transferring his cargo to lighter draft boats, when necessary, he made the trip from Peoria to Chicago entirely by water, going from the Des Plaines to Mud Lake, and thence to the South Branch of the Chicago River, without unloading. In 1834 the town had but seven frame houses and twenty-one log cabins. It was incorporated as a town in 1835 (Rudolph Rouse being the first President), and, as the City of Peoria, ten years later (Wm. Hale being the first Mayor).—Peoria is an important railway and business center, eleven railroad lines concentrating here. It presents many attractive features, such as handsome residences, fine views of river, bluff and valley scenery, with an elaborate system of parks and drives. An excellent school system is liberally supported, and its public buildings (national, county and city) are fine and costly. Its churches are elegant and well attended, the leading denominations being Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant and Reformed Episcopal, Lutheran, Evangelical and Roman Catholic. It is the seat of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, a young and flourishing scientific school affiliated with the University of Chicago, and richly endowed through the munificence of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, who devotes her whole estate, of at least a million dollars, to this object. Right Rev. John L. Spaulding, Bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Peoria, is erecting a handsome and costly building for the Spaulding Institute, a school for the higher education of young men.—At Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria, on an elevation commanding a magnificent view of the Illinois River valley for many miles, the State has located an asylum for the incurable insane. It is now in process of erection, and is intended to be one of the most complete of its kind in the world. Peoria lies in a corn and coal region, is noted for the number and extent of its distilleries, and, in 1890, ranked eighth among the grain markets of the country. It also has an extensive commerce with Chicago, St. Louis and other important cities; was credited, by the census of 1890, with 554 manufacturing establishments, representing 90 different branches of industry, with a capital of $15,072,567 and an estimated annual product of $55,504,523. Its leading industries are the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, agricultural implements, glucose and machine-shop products. Its contributions to the internal revenue of the country are second only to those of the New York district. Population (1870), 22,849; (1880), 29,259; (1890), 41,024; (1900), 56,100.

PEORIA COUNTY, originally a part of Fulton County, but cut off in 1825. It took its name from the Peoria Indians, who occupied that region when it was first discovered. As first organized, it included the present counties of Jo Daviess and Cook, with many others in the northern part of the State. At that time there were less than 1,500 inhabitants in the entire region; and John Hamlin, a Justice of the Peace, on his return from Green Bay (whither he had accompanied William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, with a drove of cattle for the fort there), solemnized, at Chicago, the marriage of Alexander Wolcott, then Indian Agent, with a daughter of John Kinzie. The original Peoria County has been subdivided into thirty counties, among them being some of the largest and richest in the State. The first county officer was Norman Hyde, who was elected Judge of the Probate Court by the Legislature in January, 1825. His commission from Governor Coles was dated on the eighteenth of that month, but he did not qualify until June 4, following, when he took the oath of office before John Dixon, Circuit Clerk, who founded the city that bears his name. Meanwhile, Mr. Hyde had been appointed the first Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and served in that capacity until entering upon his duties as Probate Judge. The first election of county officers was held, March 7, 1825, at the house of William Eads. Nathan Dillon, Joseph Smith, and William Holland were chosen Commissioners; Samuel Fulton Sheriff, and William Phillips Coroner. The first County Treasurer was Aaron Hawley, and the first general election of officers took place in 1826. The first court house was a log cabin, and the first term of the Circuit Court began Nov. 14, 1825, John York Sawyer sitting on the bench, with John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff; and John Twiney, the Attorney-General, present. Peoria County is, at present, one of the wealthiest and most populous counties in the State. Its soil is fertile and its manufactures numerous, especially at Peoria, the county-seat and principal city (which see). The area of the county is 615 square miles, and its population (1880), 55,353; (1890), 70,378; (1900), 88,608.

PEORIA LAKE, an expansion of the Illinois River, forming the eastern boundary of Peoria County, which it separates from the counties of Woodford and Tazewell. It is about 20 miles long and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles broad at the widest part.

PEORIA, ATLANTA & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PEORIA, DECATUR & EVANSVILLE RAILWAY. The total length of this line, extending from Peoria, Ill., to Evansville, Ind., is 330.87 miles, all owned by the company, of which 273 miles are in Illinois. It extends from Pekin, southeast to Grayville, on the Wabash River—is single track, unballasted, and of standard gauge. Between Pekin and Peoria the company uses the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway, of which it is one-fourth owner. Between Hervey City and Midland Junction it has trackage privileges over the line owned jointly by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville and the Terre Haute & Peoria Companies (7.5 miles). Between Midland Junction and Decatur (2.4 miles) the tracks of the Illinois Central are used, the two lines having terminal facilities at Decatur in common. The rails are of fifty-two and sixty-pound steel.—(HISTORY.) The main line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway is the result of the consolidation of several lines built under separate charters. (1) The Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1867, built in 1869-71, and operated the latter year, was leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway, but sold to representatives of the bond-holders, on account of default on interest, in 1876, and reorganized as the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway. (2) The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, (projected from Decatur to Mattoon), was incorporated in 1871, completed from Mattoon to Hervey City, in 1872, and, the same year, consolidated with the Chicago & Great Southern; in January, 1874, the Decatur line passed into the hands of a receiver, and, in 1877, having been sold under foreclosure, was reorganized as the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern Railroad. In 1879 it was placed in the hands of trustees, but the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway having acquired a controlling interest during the same year, the two lines were consolidated under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company. (3) The Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, chartered in 1857, was consolidated in 1872 with the Mount Vernon & Grayville Railroad (projected), the new corporation taking the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern (already mentioned). In 1872 the latter corporation was consolidated with the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, under the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern Railway. Both consolidations, however, were set aside by decree of the United States District Court, in 1876, and the partially graded road and franchises of the Grayville & Mattoon lines sold, under foreclosure, to the contractors for the construction; 20 miles of the line from Olney to Newton, were completed during the month of September of that year, and the entire line, from Grayville to Mattoon, in 1878. In 1880 this line was sold, under decree of foreclosure, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company, which had already acquired the Decatur & Mattoon Division—thus placing the entire line, from Peoria to Grayville, in the hands of one corporation. A line under the name of the Evansville & Peoria Railroad, chartered in Indiana in 1880, was consolidated, the same year, with the Illinois corporation under the name of the latter, and completed from Grayville to Evansville in 1882. (4) The Chicago & Ohio River Railroad—chartered, in 1869, as the Danville, Olney & Ohio River Railroad—was constructed, as a narrow-gauge line, from Kansas to West Liberty, in 1878-81; in the latter year was changed to standard gauge and completed, in 1883, from Sidell to Olney (86 miles). The same year it went into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, in February, 1886, and reorganized, in May following, as the Chicago & Ohio River Railroad; was consolidated with the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway, in 1893, and used as the Chicago Division of that line. The property and franchises of the entire line passed into the hands of receivers in 1894, and are still (1898) under their management.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEORIA & BUREAU VALLEY RAILROAD, a short line, 46.7 miles in length, operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, extending from Peoria to Bureau Junction, Ill. It was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1853, completed the following year, and leased to the Rock Island in perpetuity, April 14, 1854, the annual rental being $125,000. The par value of the capital stock is $1,500,000. Annual dividends of 8 per cent are guaranteed, payable semi-annually. (See Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.)

PEORIA & EASTERN RAILROAD. Of this line the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company is the lessee. Its total length is 250½ miles, 132 of which lie in Illinois—123 being owned by the Company. That portion within this State extends east from Pekin to the Indiana State line, in addition to which the Company has trackage facilities over the line of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway (9 miles) to Peoria. The gauge is standard. The track is single, laid with sixty and sixty-seven-pound steel rails and ballasted almost wholly with gravel. The capital stock is $10,000,000. In 1895 it had a bonded debt of $13,603,000 and a floating debt of $1,261,130, making a total capitalization of $24,864,130.—(HISTORY.) The original of this corporation was the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin Railroad, which was consolidated, in July, 1869, with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville & Danville Railroad—the new corporation taking the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western—and was opened to Pekin the same year. In 1874 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1879, and reorganized as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railway Company. The next change occurred in 1881, when it was consolidated with an Ohio corporation (the Ohio, Indiana & Pacific Railroad), again undergoing a slight change of name in its reorganization as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad Company. In 1886 it again got into financial straits, was placed in charge of a receiver and sold to a reorganization committee, and, in January, 1887, took the name of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railway Company. The final reorganization, under its present name, took place in February, 1890, when it was leased to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which it is operated. (See Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway.)

PEORIA & HANNIBAL RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & OQUAWKA RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & PEKIN UNION RAILWAY. A line connecting the cities of Peoria and Pekin, which are only 8 miles apart. It was chartered in 1880, and acquired, by purchase, the tracks of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville and the Peoria & Springfield Railroads, between the two cities named in its title, giving it control of two lines, which are used by nearly all the railroads entering both cities from the east side of the Illinois River. The mileage, including both divisions, is 18.14 miles, second tracks and sidings increasing the total to nearly 60 miles. The track is of standard gauge, about two-thirds being laid with steel rails. The total cost of construction was $4,350,987. Its total capitalization (1898) was $4,177,763, including $1,000,000 in stock, and a funded debt of $2,904,000. The capital stock is held in equal amounts (each 2,500 shares) by the Wabash, the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Peoria & Eastern companies, with 1,000 shares by the Lake Erie & Western. Terminal charges and annual rentals are also paid by the Terre Haute & Peoria and the Iowa Central Railways.

PEORIA & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEOTONE, a village of Will County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 41 miles south-southwest from Chicago; has some manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. The surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 717; (1900), 1,003.

PERCY, a village of Randolph County, at the intersection of the Wabash, Chesapeake & Western and the Mobile & Ohio Railways. Population (1890), 360; (1900), 660.

PERROT, Nicholas, a French explorer, who visited the valley of the Fox River (of Wisconsin) and the country around the great lakes, at various times between 1670 and 1690. He was present, as a guide and interpreter, at the celebrated conference held at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, which was attended by fifteen Frenchmen and representatives from seventeen Indian tribes, and at which the Sieur de Lusson took formal possession of Lakes Huron and Superior, with the surrounding region and "all the country southward to the sea," in the name of Louis XIV. of France. Perrot was the first to discover lead in the West, and, for several years, was Commandant in the Green Bay district. As a chronicler he was intelligent, interesting and accurate. His writings were not published until 1864, but have always been highly prized as authority.

PERRY, a town of Pike County; has a bank and a newspaper. Population (1880), 770; (1890), 705; (1900), 642.

PERRY COUNTY, lies in the southwest quarter of the State, with an area of 440 square miles and a population (1900) of 19,830. It was organized as a county in 1827, and named for Com. Oliver H. Perry. The general surface is rolling, although flat prairies occupy a considerable portion, interspersed with "post-oak flats." Limestone is found in the southern, and sandstone in the northern, sections, but the chief mineral wealth of the county is coal, which is abundant, and, at several points, easily mined, some of it being of a superior quality. Salt is manufactured, to some extent, and the chief agricultural output is wheat. Pinckneyville, the county-seat, has a central position and a population of about 1,300. Duquoin is the largest city. Beaucoup Creek is the principal stream, and the county is crossed by several lines of railroad.

PERU, a city in La Salle County, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River, which is here spanned by a handsome bridge. It is distant 100 miles southwest from Chicago, and the same distance north-northeast from Springfield. It is connected by street cars with La Salle, one mile distant, which is the terminus of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is situated in a rich coal-mining region, is an important trade center, and has several manufacturing establishments, including zinc smelting works, rolling mills, nickeloïd factory, metal novelty works, gas engine factory, tile works, plow, scale and patent-pump factories, foundries and machine shops, flour and saw mills, clock factory, etc. Two national banks, with a combined capital of $200,000, are located at Peru, and one daily and one weekly paper. Population (1870), 3,650; (1880), 4,682; (1890), 5,550; (1900), 6,863.

PESOTUM, a village in Champaign County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 5 miles south of Tolono. Population (1890), 575.

PETERSBURG, a city of Menard County, and the county-seat, on the Sangamon River, at the intersection Chicago & Alton with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway; 23 miles northwest of Springfield and 28 miles northeast of Jackson-ville. The town was surveyed and platted by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, and is the seat of the "Old Salem" Chautauqua. It has machine shops, two banks, two weekly papers and nine churches. The manufactures include woolen goods, brick and drain-tile, bed-springs, mattresses, and canned goods. Pop. (1890), 2,342, (1900), 2,807.

PETERS, Onslow, lawyer and jurist, was born in Massachusetts, graduated at Brown University, and was admitted to the bar and practiced law in his native State until 1837, when he settled at Peoria, Ill. He served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, was elected to the bench of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit in 1853, and re-elected in 1855. Died, Feb. 28, 1856.

PHILLIPS, David L., journalist and politician, was born where the town of Marion, Williamson County, Ill., now stands, Oct. 28, 1823; came to St. Clair County in childhood, his father settling near Belleville; began teaching at an early age, and, when about 18, joined the Baptist Church, and, after a brief course with the distinguished Dr. Peck, at his Rock Spring Seminary, two years later entered the ministry, serving churches in Washington and other Southern Illinois counties, finally taking charge of a church at Jonesboro. Though originally a Democrat, his advanced views on slavery led to a disagreement with his church, and he withdrew; then accepted a position as paymaster in the construction department of the Illinois Central Railroad, finally being transferred to that of Land Agent for the Southern section, in this capacity visiting different parts of the State from one end of the main line to the other. About 1854 he became associated with the management of "The Jonesboro Gazette," a Democratic paper, which, during his connection with it (some two years), he made an earnest opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. At the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention (which see), held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, he was appointed a member of their State Central Committee, and, as such, joined in the call for the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in May following, where he served as Vice-President for his District, and was nominated for Presidential Elector on the Fremont ticket. Two years later (1858) he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in the Southern District, being defeated by John A. Logan; was again in the State Convention of 1860, and a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President the first time; was appointed by Mr. Lincoln United States Marshal for the Southern District in 1861, and re-appointed in 1863, but resigned after Andrew Johnson's defection in 1866. During 1862 Mr. Phillips became part proprietor of "The State Journal" at Springfield, retaining this relation until 1878, at intervals performing editorial service; also took a prominent part in organizing and equipping the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (sometimes called the "Phillips Regiment"), and, in 1865, was one of the committee of citizens sent to escort the remains of President Lincoln to Springfield. He joined in the Liberal Republican movement at Cincinnati in 1872, but, in 1876, was in line with his former party associates, and served in that year as an unsuccessful candidate for Congress, in the Springfield District, in opposition to William M. Springer, early the following year receiving the appointment of Postmaster for the city of Springfield from President Hayes. Died, at Springfield, June 19, 1880.

PHILLIPS, George S., author, was born at Peterborough, England, in January, 1816; graduated at Cambridge, and came to the United States, engaging in journalism. In 1845 he returned to England, and, for a time, was editor of "The Leeds Times," still later being Principal of the People's College at Huddersfield. Returning to the United States, he came to Cook County, and, about 1866-68, was a writer of sketches over the nom de plume of "January Searle" for "The Chicago Republican"—later was literary editor of "The New York Sun" for several years. His mind becoming impaired, he was placed in an asylum at Trenton, N. J., finally dying at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889. Mr. Phillips was the author of several volumes, chiefly sketches of travel and biography.

PHILLIPS, Jesse J., lawyer, soldier and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., May 22, 1837. Shortly after graduating from the Hillsboro Academy, he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1861 he organized a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was attached to the Ninth Illinois Infantry. Captain Phillips was successively advanced to the rank of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; resigned on account of disability, in August, 1864, but was brevetted Brigadier-General at the close of the war. His military record was exceptionally brilliant. He was wounded three times at Shiloh, and was personally thanked and complimented by Generals Grant and Oglesby for gallantry and efficient service. At the termination of the struggle he returned to Hillsboro and engaged in practice. In 1866, and again in 1868, he was the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but was both times defeated. In 1879 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1885. In 1890 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Fourth District, and, in 1893, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice John M. Scholfield, his term expiring in 1897, when he was re-elected to succeed himself. Judge Phillips' present term will expire in 1906.

PHILLIPS, Joseph, early jurist, was born in Tennessee, received a classical and legal education, and served as a Captain in the War of 1812; in 1816 was appointed Secretary of Illinois Territory, serving until the admission of Illinois as a State, when he became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, serving until July, 1822, when he resigned, being succeeded on the bench by John Reynolds, afterwards Governor. In 1822 he was a candidate for Governor in the interest of the advocates of a pro-slavery amendment of the State Constitution, but was defeated by Edward Coles, the leader of the anti-slavery party. (See Coles, Edward, and Slavery and Slave Laws.) He appears from the "Edwards Papers" to have been in Illinois as late as 1832, but is said eventually to have returned to Tennessee. The date of his death is unknown.

PIANKESHAW, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. Their name, like those of their brethren, underwent many mutations of orthography, the tribe being referred to, variously, as the "Pou-an-ke-kiahs," the "Pi-an-gie-shaws," the "Pi-an-qui-shaws," and the "Py-an-ke-shaws." They were less numerous than the Weas, their numerical strength ranking lowest among the bands of the Miamis. At the time La Salle planted his colony around Starved Rock, their warriors numbered 150. Subsequent to the dispersion of this colony they (alone of the Miamis) occupied portions of the present territory of Illinois, having villages on the Vermilion and Wabash Rivers. Their earliest inclinations toward the whites were friendly, the French traders having intermarried with women of the tribe soon after the advent of the first explorers. Col. George Rogers Clark experienced little difficulty in securing their allegiance to the new government which he proclaimed. In the sanguinary raids (usually followed by reprisals), which marked Western history during the years immediately succeeding the Revolution, the Piankeshaws took no part; yet the outrages, perpetrated upon peaceable colonists, had so stirred the settlers' blood, that all Indians were included in the general thirst for vengeance, and each was unceremoniously dispatched as soon as seen. The Piankeshaws appealed to Washington for protection, and the President issued a special proclamation in their behalf. After the cession of the last remnant of the Miami territory to the United States, the tribe was removed to a Kansas reservation, and its last remnant finally found a home in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Weas.)

"PIASA BIRD," LEGEND OF THE. When the French explorers first descended the Upper Mississippi River, they found some remarkable figures depicted upon the face of the bluff, just above the site of the present city of Alton, which excited their wonder and continued to attract interest long after the country was occupied by the whites. The account given of the discovery by Marquette, who descended the river from the mouth of the Wisconsin, in June, 1673, is as follows: "As we coasted along" (after passing the mouth of the Illinois) "rocks frightful for their height and length, we saw two monsters painted on one of the rocks, which startled us at first, and upon which the boldest Indian dare not gaze long. They are as large as a calf, with horns on the head like a deer, a frightful look, red eyes, bearded like a tiger, the face somewhat like a man's, the body covered with scales, and the tail so long that it twice makes the turn of the body, passing over the head and down between the legs, ending at last in a fish's tail. Green, red and black are the colors employed. On the whole, these two monsters are so well painted that we could not believe any Indian to have been the designer, as good painters in France would find it hard to do as well. Besides this, they are painted so high upon the rock that it is hard to get conveniently at them to paint them." As the Indians could give no account of the origin of these figures, but had their terror even more excited at the sight of them than Marquette himself, they are supposed to have been the work of some prehistoric race occupying the country long before the arrival of the aborigines whom Marquette and his companions found in Illinois. There was a tradition that the figures were intended to represent a creature, part beast and part bird, which destroyed immense numbers of the inhabitants by swooping down upon them from its abode upon the rocks. At last a chief is said to have offered himself a victim for his people, and when the monster made its appearance, twenty of his warriors, concealed near by, discharged their arrows at it, killing it just before it reached its prey. In this manner the life of the chief was saved and his people were preserved from further depredations; and it was to commemorate this event that the figure of the bird was painted on the face of the cliff on whose summit the chief stood. This story, told in a paper by Mr. John Russell, a pioneer author of Illinois, obtained wide circulation in this country and in Europe, about the close of the first quarter of the present century, as the genuine "Legend of the Piasa Bird." It is said, however, that Mr. Russell, who was a popular writer of fiction, acknowledged that it was drawn largely from his imagination. Many prehistoric relics and human remains are said, by the late William McAdams, the antiquarian of Alton, to have been found in caves in the vicinity, and it seems a well authenticated fact that the Indians, when passing the spot, were accustomed to discharge their arrows—and, later, their firearms—at the figure on the face of the cliff. Traces of this celebrated pictograph were visible as late as 1840 to 1845, but have since been entirely quarried away.

PIATT COUNTY, organized in 1841, consisting of parts of Macon and Dewitt Counties. Its area is 440 square miles; population (1900), 17,706. The first Commissioners were John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck. John Piatt, after whose family the county was named, was the first Sheriff. The North Fork of the Sangamon River flows centrally through the county from northeast to southwest, and several lines of railroad afford transportation for its products. Its resources and the occupation of the people are almost wholly agricultural, the surface being level prairie and the soil fertile. Monticello, the county-seat, has a population of about 1,700. Other leading towns are Cerro Gordo (939) and Bement (1,129).

PICKETT, Thomas Johnson, journalist, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 17, 1821; spent six years (1830-36) in St. Louis, when his family removed to Peoria; learned the printer's trade in the latter city, and, in 1840, began the publication of "The Peoria News," then sold out and established "The Republican" (afterwards "The Transcript"); was a member of the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, serving on the Committee on Resolutions, and being appointed on the State Central Committee, which called the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington, in May following, and was there appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia, which nominated General Fremont for President. Later, he published papers at Pekin and Rock Island, at the latter place being one of the first to name Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency; was elected State Senator in 1860, and, in 1862, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, being transferred, as Colonel, to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois (100-days' men), and serving at Camp Douglas during the "Conspiracy" excitement. After the war, Colonel Pickett removed to Paducah, Ky., published a paper there called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and, later, Clerk of the United States District Court, and was the Republican nominee for Congress, in that District, in 1874. Removing to Nebraska in 1879, he at different times conducted several papers in that State, residing for the most part at Lincoln. Died, at Ashland, Neb., Dec. 24, 1891.

PIERSON, David, pioneer banker, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., July 9, 1806; at the age of 13 removed west with his parents, arriving at St. Louis, June 3, 1820. The family soon after settled near Collinsville, Madison County, Ill., where the father having died, they removed to the vicinity of Carrollton, Greene County, in 1821. Here they opened a farm, but, in 1827, Mr. Pierson went to the lead mines at Galena, where he remained a year, then returning to Carrollton. In 1834, having sold his farm, he began merchandising, still later being engaged in the pork and grain trade at Alton. In 1854 he added the banking business to his dry-goods trade at Carrollton, also engaged in milling, and, in 1862-63, erected a woolen factory, which was destroyed by an incendiary fire in 1872. Originally an anti-slavery Clay Whig, Mr. Pierson became a Republican on the organization of that party in 1856, served for a time as Collector of Internal Revenue, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia in 1872, and a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor in 1876. Of high integrity and unswerving patriotism, Mr. Pierson was generous in his benefactions, being one of the most liberal contributors to the establishment of the Langston School for the Education of Freedmen at Holly Springs, Miss., soon after the war. He died at Carrollton, May 8, 1891.—Ornan (Pierson), a son of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the Thirty-second General Assembly (1881) from Greene County, and is present cashier of the Greene County National Bank at Carrollton.

PIGGOTT, Isaac N., early politician, was born about 1792; served as an itinerant Methodist preacher in Missouri and Illinois, between 1819 and 1824, but finally located southwest of Jerseyville and obtained a license to run a ferry between Grafton and Alton; in 1828 ran as a candidate for the State Senate against Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor); removed to St. Louis, in 1858, and died there in 1874.

PIKE COUNTY, situated in the western portion of the State, lying between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, having an area of 795 square miles—named in honor of the explorer, Capt. Zebulon Pike. The first American settlers came about 1820, and, in 1821, the county was organized, at first embracing all the country north and west of the Illinois River, including the present county of Cook. Out of this territory were finally organized about one fourth of the counties of the State. Coles' Grove (now Gilead, in Calhoun County) was the first county-seat, but the seat of justice was removed, in 1824, to Atlas, and to Pittsfield in 1833. The surface is undulating, in some portions is hilly, and diversified with prairies and hardwood timber. Live-stock, cereals and hay are the staple products, while coal and Niagara limestone are found in abundance. Population (1890), 31,000; (1900), 31,595.

PILLSBURY, Nathaniel Joy, lawyer and judge, was born in York County, Maine, Oct. 21, 1834; in 1855 removed to Illinois, and, in 1858, began farming in Livingston County. He began the study of law in 1863, and, after admission to the bar, commenced practice at Pontiac. He represented La Salle and Livingston Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1873, was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. He was re-elected in 1879 and again in 1885. He was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court in 1877, and again in 1879 and '85. He was severely wounded by a shot received from strikers on the line of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, near Chicago, in 1886, resulting in his being permanently disabled physically, in consequence of which he declined a re-election to the bench in 1891.

PINCKNEYVILLE, a city and the county-seat of Perry County, situated at the intersection of the Paducah Division Illinois Central and the Wabash, Chester & Western Railways, 10 miles west-northwest of Duquoin. Coal-mining is carried on in the immediate vicinity, and flour, carriages, plows and dressed lumber are among the manufactured products. Pinckneyville has two banks—one of which is national—two weekly newspapers, seven churches, a graded and a high school. Population (1880), 964; (1890), 1,298; (1900), 2,357.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD, one of the Pennsylvania Company's lines, operating 1,403 miles of road, of which 1,090 miles are owned and the remainder leased—length of line in Illinois, 28 miles. The Company is the outgrowth of a consolidation, in 1890, of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway with the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg, the Cincinnati & Richmond and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls the entire line through ownership of stock. Capital stock outstanding, in 1898, $47,791,601; funded debt, $48,433,000; floating debt, $2,214,703—total capital $98,500,584—(HISTORY.) The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburgh Railroad, embracing the Illinois division of this line, was made up of various corporations organized under the laws of Illinois and Indiana. One of its component parts was the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway, organized, in 1865, by consolidation of the Galena & Illinois River Railroad (chartered in 1857), the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway of Indiana, the Cincinnati & Chicago Air-Line (organized 1860), and the Cincinnati, Logansport & Chicago Railway. In 1869, the consolidated line was leased to the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and operated under the name of the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central between Bradford, Ohio, and Chicago, from 1869 until its consolidation, under the present name, in 1890. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY. The total length of this line is nearly 470 miles, but only a little over 16 miles are within Illinois. It was operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as lessee. The entire capitalization in 1898 was $52,549,990; and the earnings in Illinois, $472,228.—(HISTORY.) The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway is the result of the consolidation, August 1, 1856, of the Ohio & Pennsylvania, the Ohio & Indiana and the Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Companies, under the name of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1859; was sold under foreclosure in 1861; reorganized under its present title, in 1862, and leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for 999 years, from July 1, 1869. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSFIELD, the county-seat of Pike County, situated on the Hannibal & Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, about 40 miles southeast of Quincy, and about the same distance south of west from Jacksonville. Its public buildings include a handsome court house and graded and high school buildings. The city has an electric light plant, city water-works, a flour mill, a National and a State bank, nine churches, and four weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 2,295; (1900), 2,293.

PLAINFIELD, a village of Will County, on the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and an interurban electric line, 8 miles northwest of Joliet; is in a dairying section; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 852; (1900), 920.

PLANO, a city in Kendall County, situated near the Fox River, and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 14 miles west-southwest of Aurora. There are manufactories of agricultural implements and bedsteads. The city has banks, several churches, graded and high schools, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,825; (1900), 1,634; (1903, est.), 2,250.

PLEASANT PLAINS, a village of Sangamon County, on Springfield Division Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railroad, 16 miles northwest of Springfield; in rich farming region; has coal-shaft, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Population (1890), 518; (1900), 575.

PLEASANTS, George Washington, jurist, was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., Nov. 24, 1823; received a classical education at Williams College, Mass., graduating in 1842; studied law in New York City, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester, N. Y., in 1845, establishing himself in practice at Williamstown, Mass., where he remained until 1849. In 1851 he removed to Washington, D. C., and, after residing there two years, came to Illinois, locating at Rock Island, which has since been his home. In 1861 he was elected, as a Republican, to the State Constitutional Convention which met at Springfield in January following, and, in 1867, was chosen Judge for the Sixth (now Tenth) Judicial Circuit, having served by successive re-elections until June, 1897, retiring at the close of his fifth term—a record for length of service seldom paralleled in the judicial history of the State. The last twenty years of this period were spent on the Appellate bench. For several years past Judge Pleasants has been a sufferer from failing eyesight, but has been faithful in attendance on his judicial duties. As a judicial officer and a man, his reputation stands among the highest.

PLUMB, Ralph, soldier and ex-Congressman, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 29, 1816. After leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and was himself a merchant for eighteen years. From New York he removed to Ohio, where he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1855, later coming to Illinois. During the Civil War he served four years in the Union army as Captain and Quartermaster, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at its close. He made his home at Streator, where he was elected Mayor (1881-1883). There he engaged in coal-mining and has been connected with several important enterprises. From 1885 to 1889 he represented the Eighth Illinois District in Congress, after which he retired to private life.

PLYMOUTH, a village of Hancock County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 41 miles northeast of Quincy; is trade center of rich farming district; has two banks, electric lights, water-works, and one paper. Pop. (1900), 854.

POINTE DE SAIBLE, Jean Baptiste, a negro and Indian-trader, reputed to have been the first settler on the present site of the city of Chicago. He is said to have been a native of San Domingo, but is described by his contemporaries as "well educated and handsome," though dissipated. He appears to have been at the present site of Chicago as early as 1794, his house being located on the north side near the junction of the North and South branches of the Chicago River, where he carried on a considerable trade with the Indians. About 1796 he is said to have sold out to a French trader named Le Mai, and joined a countryman of his, named Glamorgan, at Peoria, where he died soon after. Glamorgan, who was the reputed owner of a large Spanish land-grant in the vicinity of St. Louis, is said to have been associated with Point de Saible in trade among the Peorias, before the latter came to Chicago.

POLO, a city in Ogle County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railways, 23 miles south of Freeport and 12 miles north of Dixon. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and Polo is a shipping point for large quantities of cattle and hogs. Agricultural implements (including harvesters) and buggies are manufactured here. The city has banks, one weekly and one semi weekly paper, seven churches, a graded public and high school, and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,728; (1900), 1,869.

PONTIAC, an Ottawa chief, born on the Ottawa River, in Canada, about 1720. While yet a young man he became the principal Chief of the allied Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomes. He was always a firm ally of the French, to whose interests he was devotedly attached, defending them at Detroit against an attack of the Northern tribes, and (it is generally believed) leading the Ottawas in the defeat of Braddock. He reluctantly acquiesced in the issue of the French and Indian War, although at first strongly disposed to dispute the progress of Major Rogers, the British officer sent to take possession of the western forts. In 1763 he dispatched emissaries to a large number of tribes, whom he desired to unite in a league for the extermination of the English. His proposals were favorably received, and thus was organized what is commonly spoken of as the "Conspiracy of Pontiac." He himself undertook to lead an assault upon Detroit. The garrison, however, was apprised of his intention, and made preparations accordingly. Pontiac thereupon laid siege to the fort, but was unable to prevent the ingress of provisions, the Canadian settlers furnishing supplies to both besieged and besiegers with absolute impartiality. Finally a boat-load of ammunition and supplies was landed at Detroit from Lake Erie, and the English made an unsuccessful sortie on July 31, 1763. After a desultory warfare, lasting for nearly three months, the Indians withdrew into Indiana, where Pontiac tried in vain to organize another movement. Although Detroit had not been taken, the Indians captured Forts Sandusky, St. Joseph, Miami, Ouintanon, LeBoeuf and Venango, besides the posts of Mackinaw and Presque Isle. The garrisons at all these points were massacred and innumerable outrages perpetrated elsewhere. Additional British troops were sent west, and the Indians finally brought under control. Pontiac was present at Osvego when a treaty was signed with Sir William Johnson, but remained implacable. His end was tragic. Broken in heart, but still proud in spirit and relentless in purpose, he applied to the former (and last) French Governor of Illinois, the younger St. Ange, who was then at St. Louis, for co-operation and support in another raid against the British. Being refused aid or countenance, according to a story long popularly received, he returned to the vicinity of Cahokia, where, in 1769, he was murdered by a Kaskaskia Indian in consideration of a barrel of liquor. N. Matson, author of several volumes bearing on early history in Illinois, citing Col. Joseph N. Bourassa, an educated half-breed of Kansas, as authority for his statement, asserts that the Indian killed at Cahokia was an impostor, and that the true Pontiac was assassinated by Kineboo, the Head Chief of the Illinois, in a council held on the Des Plaines River, near the present site of Joliet. So well convinced, it is said, was Pierre Chouteau, the St. Louis Indian trader, of the truth of this last story, that he caused a monument, which he had erected over the grave of the false Pontiac, to be removed. Out of the murder of Pontiac, whether occurring at Cahokia or Joliet, it is generally agreed, resulted the extermination of the Illinois and the tragedy of "Starved Rock." (See Starved Rock.)

of intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads. It is 33 miles north-northeast from Bloomington and 93 miles south-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture, stock-raising and coal-mining. Pontiac has four banks and four weekly newspapers (two issuing daily editions), numerous churches and good schools. Various kinds of manufacturing are conducted, among the principal establishments being flouring mills, three shoe factories, straw paper and candy factories and a foundry. The State Reformatory for Juvenile Offenders is located here. Pop. (1890), 2,784; (1900), 4,266.

POOL, Orval, merchant and banker, was born in Union County, Ky., near Shawneetown, Ill., Feb. 17, 1809, but lived in Shawneetown from seven years of age; in boyhood learned the saddler's trade, but, in 1843, engaged in the dry-goods business, J. McKee Peeples and Thomas S. Ridgway becoming his partners in 1846. In 1850 he retired from the dry-goods trade and became an extensive dealer in produce, pork and tobacco. In 1871 he established the Gallatin County National Bank, of which he was the first President. Died, June 30, 1871.

POOLE, William Frederick, bibliographer, librarian and historical writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 24, 1821, graduated from Yale College in 1849, and, at the close of his sophomore year, was appointed assistant librarian of his college society, which owned a library of 10,000 volumes. Here he prepared and published the first edition of his now famous "Index to Periodical Literature." A second and enlarged addition was published in 1853, and secured for its author wide fame, in both America and Europe. In 1852 he was made Librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, and, from 1856 to 1869, had charge of the Boston Athenæum, then one of the largest libraries in the United States, which he relinquished to engage in expert library work. He organized libraries in several New England cities and towns, at the United States Naval Academy, and the Cincinnati Public Library, finally becoming Librarian of the latter institution. In October, 1873, he assumed charge of the Chicago Public Library, then being organized, and, in 1887, became Librarian of the Newberry Library, organizing this institution and remaining at its head until his death, which occurred, March 1, 1894. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the Northwestern University in 1882. Dr. Poole took a prominent part in the organization of library associations, and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Conference of Librarians, held in London in 1871. His advice was much sought in relation to library architecture and management. He wrote much on topics connected with his profession and on historical subjects, frequently contributing to "The North American Review." In 1874-75 he edited a literary paper at Chicago, called "The Owl," and was later a constant contributor to "The Dial." He was President of the American Historical Society and member of State Historical Societies and of other kindred associations.

POPE, Nathaniel, first Territorial Secretary of Illinois, Delegate in Congress and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., in 1774; graduated with high honor from Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., read law with his brother, Senator John Pope, and, in 1804, emigrated to New Orleans, later living, for a time, at Ste. Genevieve, Mo. In 1808 he became a resident of Kaskaskia and, the next year, was appointed the first Territorial Secretary of Illinois. His native judgment was strong and profound and his intellect quick and far-reaching, while both were thoroughly trained and disciplined by study. In 1816 he was elected a Territorial Delegate to Congress, and proved himself, not only devoted to the interests of his constituents, but also a shrewd tactician. He was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the act authorizing the formation of a State government, and it was mainly through his efforts that the northern boundary of Illinois was fixed at lat. 42° 30' north, instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan. Upon the admission of Illinois into the Union, he was made United States Judge of the District, which then embraced the entire State. This office he filled with dignity, impartiality and acceptability until his death, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Yeatman, in St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1850. Pope County was named in his honor.—Gen. John (Pope), son of the preceding, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1822; graduated at the United States Military Academy, 1842, and appointed brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers; served in Florida (1842-44), on the northeast boundary survey, and in the Mexican War (1846-47), being promoted First Lieutenant for bravery at Monterey and Captain at Buena Vista. In 1849 he conducted an exploring expedition in Minnesota, was in charge of topographical engineering service in New Mexico (1851-53), and of the survey of a route for the Union Pacific Railway (1853-59), meanwhile experimenting on the feasibility of artesian wells on the "Staked Plains" in Northwestern Texas. He was a zealous friend of Abraham Lincoln in the political campaign of 1860, and was court-martialed for criticising the policy of President Buchanan, in a paper read before a literary society in Cincinnati, the proceedings being finally dropped on the recommendation of the (then) Secretary of War, Joseph Holt. In 1861 he was one of the officers detailed by the War Department to conduct Mr. Lincoln to the capital, and, in May following, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to command in Missouri, where he performed valuable service in protecting railroad communications and driving out guerrillas, gaining an important victory over Sterling Price at Blackwater, in December of that year; in 1862 had command of the land forces co-operating with Admiral Foote, in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10, resulting in the capture of that stronghold with 6,500 prisoners, 125 cannon and 7,000 small arms, thereby winning a Major-General's commission. Later, having participated in the operations against Corinth, he was transferred to command of the Army of Virginia, and soon after commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army. Here, being forced to meet a greatly superior force under General Lee, he was subjected to reverses which led to his falling back on Washington and a request to be relieved of his command. For failure to give him proper support, Gen. Fitzjohn Porter was tried by court-martial, and, having been convicted, was cashiered and declared forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States Government—although this verdict was finally set aside and Porter restored to the army as Colonel, by act of Congress, in August, 1886. General Pope's subsequent service was performed chiefly against the Indians in the Northwest, until 1865, when he took command of the military division of Missouri, and, in June following, of the Department of the Missouri, including all the Northwestern States and Territories, from which he was relieved early in 1866. Later, he held command, under the Reconstruction Acts, in Georgia, Alabama and Florida (1867-68); the Department of the Lakes (1868-70); Department of the Missouri (1870-84); and Department of the Pacific, from 1884 to his retirement, March 16, 1886. General Pope published "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande" and "Campaigns in Virginia" (1863). Died, at Sandusky, Ohio, Sept 23, 1892.

POPE COUNTY, lies on the southern border of the State, and contains an area of about 360 square miles—named in honor of Judge Nathaniel Pope. It was erected in 1816 (two years before the admission of Illinois as a State) from parts of Gallatin and Johnson Counties. The county-seat was first located at Sandsville, but later changed to Golconda. Robert Lacy, Benoni Lee and Thomas Ferguson were the first Commissioners; Hamlet Ferguson was chosen Sheriff; John Scott, Recorder; Thomas C. Browne, Prosecuting-Attorney, and Samuel Omelveney, Treasurer. The highest land in Southern Illinois is in the north-eastern part of this county, reaching an elevation of 1,046 feet. The bluffs along the Ohio River are bold in outline, and the ridges are surmounted by a thick growth of timber, notably oak and hickory. Portions of the bottom lands are submerged, at times, during a part of the year and are covered with cypress timber. The remains of Indian mounds and fortifications are found, and some interesting relics have been exhumed. Sandstone is quarried in abundance, and coal is found here and there. Mineral springs (with copperas as the chief ingredient) are numerous. Iron is found in limited quantities, among the rocks toward the south, while spar and kaolin clay are found in the north. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, corn and tobacco. Population (1890), 14,016; (1900), 13,585.

PORT BYRON, a village of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 16 miles above Rock Island; has lime kilns, grain elevator, two banks, academy, public schools, and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 732. The (Illinois) Western Hospital for the Insane is located at Watertown, twelve miles below Port Byron.

PORTER, (Rev.) Jeremiah, pioneer clergyman, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1804; graduated from Williams College in 1825, and studied theology at both Andover and Princeton seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1831. The same year he made the (then) long and perilous journey to Fort Brady, a military post at the Sault Ste. Marie, where he began his work as a missionary. In 1833 he came to Chicago, where he remained for two years, organizing the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago, with a membership of twenty-six persons. Afterwards he had pastoral charge of churches at Peoria and Farmington. While in Chicago he was married to Miss Eliza Chappell, one of the earliest teachers in Chicago. From 1840 to '58 he was located at Green Bay, Wis., accepting a call from a Chicago Church in the year last named. In 1861 he was commissioned Chaplain in the volunteer service by Governor Yates, and mustered out in 1865. The next five years were divided between labors at Brownsville, Tex., in the service of the Sanitary Commission, and a pastorate at Prairie du Chien. In 1870 he was commissioned Chaplain in the regular army, remaining in the service (with occasional leaves of absence) until 1882, when he was retired from active service on account of advanced age. His closing years were spent at the homes of his children in Detroit and Beloit; died at the latter city, July 25, 1893, at the age of 89 years.

POSEY, (Gen.) Thomas, Continental and Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia, July 9, 1750; in 1774 took part in Lord Dunmore's expedition against the Indians, and, later, in various engagements of the Revolutionary War, being part of the time under the immediate command of Washington; was with General Wayne in the assault on Stony Point and present at Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown; also served, after the war, with Wayne as a Brigadier-General in the Northwest Territory. Removing to Kentucky, he served in the State Senate, for a time being presiding officer and acting Lieutenant-Governor; later (1812), was elected United States Senator from Louisiana, and, from 1813 to '16, served as Territorial Governor of Indiana. Died, at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph M. Street, at Shawneetown, Ill., March 18, 1818, where he lies buried. At the time of his death General Posey was serving as Indian Agent.

POST, Joel S., lawyer and soldier of the Mexican War; was born in Ontario (now Wayne) County, N. Y., April 27, 1816; in 1828 removed with his father to Washtenaw County, Mich., remaining there until 1839, when he came to Macon County, Ill. The following year, he commenced the study of law with Judge Charles Emmerson, of Decatur, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican War, and served as Quartermaster of the Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's); in 1856 was elected to the State Senate, and, at the following session, was a leading supporter of the measures which resulted in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington. Capt. Post's later years were spent at Decatur, where he died, June 7, 1886.

POST, Philip Sidney, soldier and Congressman, was born at Florida, Orange County, N. Y., March 19, 1833; at the age of 22 graduated from Union College, studied law at Poughkeepsie Law School, and, removing to Illinois, was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He was a gallant, fearless soldier, and was repeatedly promoted for bravery and meritorious service, until he attained the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. He participated in many important battles and was severely wounded at Pea Ridge and Nashville. In 1865 he was in command in Western Texas. After the close of the war he entered the diplomatic service, being appointed Consul-General to Austria-Hungary in 1874, but resigned in 1879, and returned to his home in Galesburg. From 1882 to 1886 he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and, during 1886, was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R. He was elected to Congress from the Tenth District on the Republican ticket in 1886, serving continuously by reelection until his death, which occurred in Washington, Jan. 6, 1895.

POST, Truman Marcellus, D.D., clergyman, was born at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1810; graduated at Middlebury College in 1829, was Principal of Castleton Academy for a year, and a tutor at Middlebury two years, meanwhile studying law. After a winter spent in Washington, listening to the orators of the time in Congress and before the Supreme Court, including Clay, Webster, Wirt and their contemporaries, he went west in 1833, first visiting St. Louis, but finally settling at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar, but soon after accepted the Professorship of Classical Languages in Illinois College, and later that of History; then began the study of theology, was ordained in 1840, and assumed the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Jacksonville. In 1847 he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, and, in 1851, to the First Congregational Church, of which the former furnished the nucleus. For a year or two after removing to St. Louis, he continued his lectures on history at Illinois College for a short period each year; also held the professorship of Ancient and Modern History in Washington University, in St. Louis; in 1873-75 was Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Theological Seminary and, for several years, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Chicago Theological Seminary. His splendid diction and his noble style of oratory caused him to be much sought after as a public lecturer or platform speaker at college commencements, while his purity of life and refinement of character attracted to him all with whom he came in personal contact. He received the degree of D.D. from Middlebury College in 1855; was a frequent contributor to "The Biblical Repository" and other religious publications, and, besides numerous addresses, sermons and pamphlets, he was the author of a volume entitled "The Skeptical Era in Modern History" (New York, 1856). He resigned his pastorate in January, 1882, but continued to be a frequent speaker, either in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, nearly to the period of his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1886. For a quarter of a century he was one of the Trustees of Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., being, for a considerable portion of the time, President of the Board.

POTTAWATOMIES, THE, an Indian tribe, one of the three subdivisions of the Ojibwas (or Ojibbeways), who, in turn, constituted a numerous family of the Algonquins. The other branches were the Ottawa and the Chippewas. The latter, however, retained the family name, and hence some writers have regarded the "Ojibbeways" and the "Chippewas" as essentially identical. This interchanging of names has been a prolific source of error. Inherently, the distinction was analogous to that existing between genus and species, although a confusion of nomenclature has naturally resulted in errors more or less serious. These three tribes early separated, the Pottawatomes going south from Green Bay along the western shore of Lake Michigan. The meaning of the name is, "we are making a fire," and the word is a translation into the Pottawatomie language of the name first given to the tribe by the Miamis. These Indians were tall, fierce and haughty, and the tribe was divided into four branches, or clans, called by names which signify, respectively, the golden carp, the tortoise, the crab and the frog. According to the "Jesuit Relations," the Pottawatomes were first met by the French, on the north of Lake Huron, in 1639-40. More than a quarter of a century later (1666) Father Allouez speaks of them as dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. The same Father described them as idolatrous and polygamous, yet as possessing a rude civility and as being kindly disposed toward the French. This friendship continued unbroken until the expulsion of the latter from the Northwest. About 1678 they spread southward from Green Bay to the head of Lake Michigan, a portion of the tribe settling in Illinois as far south as the Kankakee and Illinois Rivers, crowding the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes on the west, and advancing, on the east, into the country of the Miamis as far as the Wabash and the Maumee. They fought on the side of the French in the French and Indian War, and later took part in the conspiracy of Pontiac to capture and reduce the British posts, and were so influenced by Tecumseh and the Prophet that a considerable number of their warriors fought against General Harrison at Tippecanoe. During the War of 1812 they actively supported the British. They were also prominent at the Chicago massacre. Schoolcraft says of them, "They were foremost at all treaties where lands were to be ceded, clamoring for the lion's share of all presents and annuities, particularly where these last were the price paid for the sale of other lands than their own." The Pottawatomes were parties to the treaties at Chicago in 1832 and 1833, and were among the last of the tribes to remove beyond the Mississippi, their final emigration not taking place until 1838. In 1846 the scattered fragments of this tribe coalesced with those of the Chippewas and Ottawas, and formed the Pottawatomie nation. They ceded all their lands, wherever located, to the United States, for $850,000, agreeing to accept 576,000 acres in Kansas in lieu of $87,000 of this amount. Through the rapacity and trespasses of white settlers, this reservation was soon dismembered, and the lands passed into other hands. In 1867, under an enabling act of Congress, 1,400 of the nation (then estimated at 2,500) became citizens. Their present location is in the southeastern part of Oklahoma.

POWELL, John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., geologist and anthropologist, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, the son of a Methodist itinerant preacher, passing his early life at various places in Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois; studied for a time in Illinois College (Jacksonville), and subsequently in Wheaton College, but, in 1854, began a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching at intervals in public schools. Having a predilection for the natural sciences, he spent much time in making collections, which he placed in various Illinois institutions. Entering the army in 1861 as a private of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, he later became a Captain of the Second Illinois Artillery, being finally promoted Major. He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh, but returned to his regiment as soon as sufficiently recovered, and continued in active service to the close of the war. In 1865 he became Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, but resigned to accept a similar position in the State Normal University. In 1867 he began his greatest work in connection with science by leading a class of pupils to the mountains of Colorado for the study of geology, which he followed, a year later, by a more thorough survey of the cañon of the Colorado River than had ever before been attempted. This led to provision by Congress, in 1870, for a topographical and geological survey of the Colorado and its tributaries, which was appropriately placed under his direction. Later, he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Ethnology in connection with the Smithsonian Institute, and, again in 1881, was assigned to the directorship of the United States Geological Survey, later becoming Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, in connection with the Smithsonian Institute in Washington City, where (1899) he still remains. In 1886 Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard the same year. He is also a member of the leading scientific associations of the country, while his reports and addresses fill numerous volumes issued by the Government.

POWELL, William Henry, soldier and manufacturer, was born in South Wales, May 10, 1825; came to America in 1830, was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and (1856-61) was manager of a manufacturing company at Iron-ton, Ohio; in 1861, became Captain of a West Virginia cavalry company, and was advanced through the grades of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded while leading a charge at Wytheville, Va., left on the field, captured and confined in Libby Prison six months. After exchange he led a cavalry division in the Army of the Shenandoah; was made Brigadier-General in October, 1864; after the war settled in West Virginia, and was a Republican Presidential Elector in 1868. He is now at the head of a nail mill and foundry in Belleville, and was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois during 1895-96.

PRAIRIE CITY, a village in McDonough County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 23 miles southwest from Galesburg and 17 miles northeast of Macomb; has a carriage factory, flour mill, elevators, lumber and stock yards, a nursery, a bank, four churches and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 812; (1900), 818.

PRAIRIE DU PONT, (in English, Bridge Prairie), an early French settlement, one mile south of Cahokia. It was commenced about 1760, located on the banks of a creek, on which was the first mill, operated by water-power, in that section, having been erected by missionaries from St. Sulpice, in 1754. In 1765 the village contained fourteen families. In 1844 it was inundated and nearly destroyed.

PRAIRIE du ROCHER, (in English, Prairie of the Rock), an early French village in what is now Monroe County, which began to spring up near Fort Chartres (see Fort Chartres), and by 1722 had grown to be a considerable settlement. It stood at the foot of the Mississippi bluffs, about four miles northeast of the fort. Like other French villages in Illinois, it had its church and priest, its common field and commons. Many of the houses were picturesque cottages built of limestone. The ancient village is now extinct; yet, near the outlet of a creek which runs through the bluff, may be seen the vestiges of a water mill, said to have been erected by the Jesuits during the days of French occupation.

PRENTICE, William S., Methodist Episcopal clergyman, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., in 1819; licensed as a Methodist preacher in 1849, and filled pastorates at Paris, Danville, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville and other places—the latter part of his life, serving as Presiding Elder; was a delegate to the General Conference of 1860, and regularly re-elected from 1872 to the end of his life. During the latter part of his life his home was in Springfield. Died, June 28, 1887.

PRENTISS, Benjamin Mayberry, soldier, was born at Belleville, Wood County, Va., Nov. 23, 1819; in 1835 accompanied his parents to Missouri, and, in 1841, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he learned a trade, afterwards embarking in the commission business. In 1844-45 he was Lieutenant of a company sent against the Mormons at Nauvoo, later serving as Captain of Volunteers in the Mexican War. In 1860 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress; at the outbreak of the Civil War tendered his services to Governor Yates, and was commissioned Colonel of the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, was almost immediately promoted to Brigadier-General and placed in command at Cairo, so continuing until relieved by General Grant, in September, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh, in April following, he was captured with most of his command, after a most vigorous fight with a superior rebel force, but, in 1862, was exchanged and brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. He was a member of the court-martial that tried Gen. Fitzjohn Porter, and, as commander at Helena, Ark., defeated the Confederate Generals Holmes and Price on July 3, 1863. He resigned his commission, Oct. 28, 1863. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Pension Agent at Quincy, serving four years. At present (1898) General Prentiss' residence is at Bethany, Mo., where he served as Postmaster, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and was reappointed by President McKinley. Died Feb. 8, 1901.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. (See Elections.)

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL, located at Chicago, was organized in 1883 by a number of wealthy and liberal Presbyterians, "for the purpose of affording medical and surgical aid to sick and disabled persons, and to provide them, while inmates of the hospital, with the ministrations of the gospel, agreeably to the doctrines and forms of the Presbyterian Church." Rush Medical College offered a portion of its ground as a site (see Rush Medical College), and through generous subscriptions, a well-planned building was erected, capable of accommodating about 250 patients. A corridor connects the college and hospital buildings. The medical staff comprises eighteen of Chicago's best known physicians and surgeons.

PRESBYTERIANS, THE. The first Presbyterian society in Illinois was organized by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky, in 1816, at Sharon, White County. Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith, also Presbyterians, had visited the State in 1814, as representatives of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, but had formed no society. The members of the Sharon church were almost all immigrants from the South, and were largely of Scotch-Irish extraction. Two other churches were established in 1819—one at Shoal Creek, Bond County, and the other at Edwardsville. In 1825 there were but three Presbyterian ministers in Illinois—Revs. Stephen Bliss, John Brich and B. F. Spilman. Ten years later there were 80 churches, with a membership of 2,500 and 60 ministers. In 1880 the number of churches had increased to 487; but, in 1890, (as shown by the United States census) there were less. In the latter year there were 405 ministers and 52,945 members. The Synod of Illinois is the highest ecclesiastical court of the denomination in the State, and, under its jurisdiction, the church maintains two seminaries: one (the McCormick) at Chicago, and the other (the Blackburn University) at Carlinville. The organ of the denomination is "The Interior," founded by Cyrus H. McCormick, and published weekly at Chicago, with William C. Gray as editor. The Illinois Synod embraced within its jurisdiction (1895) eleven Presbyteries, to which were attached 483 churches, 464 ministers and a membership of 63,247. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRICKETT, Abraham, pioneer merchant, was born near Lexington, Ky., came to Madison County, Ill., in 1808; was employed for a time in the drug business in St. Louis, then opened a store at Edwardsville, where, in 1813, he received from the first County Court of Madison County, a license to retail merchandise. In 1818, he served as one of the three Delegates from Madison County to the Convention which framed the first State Constitution, and, the same year, was elected a Representative in the First General Assembly; was also Postmaster of the town of Edwardsville for a number of years. In 1825 he removed to Adams County and laid out an addition to the city of Quincy; was also engaged there in trade with the Indians. In 1836, while engaged on a Government contract for the removal of snags and other obstructions to the navigation of Red River, he died at Natchitoches, La.—George W. (Prickett) a son of the preceding, and afterwards a citizen of Chicago, is said to have been the first white child born in Edwardsville.—Isaac (Prickett), a brother of Abraham, came to St. Louis in 1815, and to Edwardsville in 1818, where he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother and, later, on his own account. He held the offices of Postmaster, Public Administrator, Quartermaster-General of State Militia, Inspector of the State Penitentiary, and, from 1838 to '42, was Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville, dying in 1844.

PRICKETT, David, pioneer lawyer, was born in Franklin County, Ga., Sept. 21, 1800; in early childhood was taken by his parents to Kentucky and from there to Edwardsville, Ill. He graduated from Transylvania University, and, in 1821, began the practice of law; was the first Supreme Court Reporter of Illinois, Judge of the Madison County Probate Court, Representative in the General Assembly (1826-28), Aid-de-Camp to General Whiteside in the Black Hawk War, State's Attorney for Springfield Judicial Circuit (1837), Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners (1840), Director of the State Bank of Illinois (1842), Clerk of the House of Representatives for ten sessions and Assistant Clerk of the same at the time of his death, March 1, 1847.

PRINCE, David, physician and surgeon, was born in Brooklyn, Windham County, Conn., June 21, 1816; removed with his parents to Canandaigua, N. Y., and was educated in the academy there; began the study of medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, finishing at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, where he was associated, for a year and a half, with the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Muzzy. In 1843 he came to Jacksonville, Ill., and, for two years, was Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Illinois College; later, spent five years practicing in St. Louis, and lecturing on surgery in the St. Louis Medical College, when, returning to Jacksonville in 1852, he established himself in practice there, devoting special attention to surgery, in which he had already won a wide reputation. During the latter part of the Civil War he served, for fourteen months, as Brigade Surgeon in the Army of the Potomac, and, on the capture of a portion of his brigade, voluntarily surrendered himself that he might attend the captives of his command in Libby Prison. After the close of the war he was employed for some months, by the Sanitary Commission, in writing a medical history of the war. He visited Europe twice, first in 1881 as a delegate to the International Medical Congress in London, and again as a member of the Copenhagen Congress of 1884—at each visit making careful inspection of the hospitals in London, Paris, and Berlin. About 1867 he established a Sanitarium in Jacksonville for the treatment of surgical cases and chronic diseases, to which he gave the closing years of his life. Thoroughly devoted to his profession, liberal, public-spirited and sagacious in the adoption of new methods, he stood in the front rank of his profession, and his death was mourned by large numbers who had received the benefit of his ministrations without money and without price. He was member of a number of leading professional associations, besides local literary and social organizations. Died, at Jacksonville, Dec. 19, 1889.

PRINCE, Edward, lawyer, was born at West Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1832; attended school at Payson, Ill., and Illinois College, Jacksonville, graduating from the latter in 1852; studied law at Quincy, and after admission to the bar in 1853, began dealing in real estate. In 1861 he offered his services to Governor Yates, was made Captain and Drill-master of cavalry and, a few months later, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, taking part, as second in command, in the celebrated "Grierson raid" through Mississippi, in 1863, serving until discharged with the rank of Colonel of his regiment, in 1864. After the war he gave considerable attention to engineering and the construction of a system of water-works for the city of Quincy, where he now resides.

PRINCE, George W., lawyer and Congressman, born in Tazewell County, Ill., March 4, 1854; was educated in the public schools and at Knox College, graduating from the latter in 1878. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1880; was elected City Attorney of Galesburg the following year; served as chairman of the Knox County Republican Central Committee in 1884, and, in 1888, was elected Representative in the General Assembly and re-elected two years later. In 1893 he was the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, but was defeated with the rest of the State ticket; at a special election, held in April, 1895, he was chosen Representative in Congress from the Tenth District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Philip Sidney Post, which had occurred in January preceding. In common with a majority of his colleagues, Mr. Prince was re-elected in 1896, receiving a plurality of nearly 16,000 votes, and was elected for a third term in November, 1898.

PRINCETON, a city and the county-seat of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 22 miles west-southwest of Mendota, and 104 miles west-southwest of Chicago; has a court house, gas-works, electric lights, graded and high schools, numerous churches, three newspapers and several banks. Coal is mined five miles east, and the manufactures include flour, carriages and farm implements. Pop. (1890), 3,396; (1900), 4,023. Princeton is populated with one of the most intelligent and progressive communities in the State. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy during the greater part of his life in Illinois.

PRINCETON & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railway.)

PRINCEVILLE, a village of Peoria County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Rock Island & Peoria Railways, 22 miles northwest of Peoria; is a trade center for a prosperous agricultural region. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 735.

PROPHETSTOWN, a town in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Fulton Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 45 miles northwest of Mendota; has some manufactures, three banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 694; (1900), 1,143.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION. (See Minority Representation.)

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The pioneer Episcopal clergyman in this State was the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, who was made Bishop of Illinois in 1835, and was the founder of Jubilee College. (See Chase, Rev. Philander.) The State at present is organized under the provincial system, the province comprising the dioceses of Chicago, Quincy and Springfield. At its head (1898) is the Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Bishop of Chicago. Rev. George F. Seymour of Springfield is Bishop of the Springfield Diocese, with C. R. Hale, Coadjutor at Cairo, and Rev. Alexander Burgess, Bishop of the Quincy Diocese, with residence at Peoria. The numerical strength of the church in Illinois is not great, although between 1880 and 1890 its membership was almost doubled. In 1840 there were but eighteen parishes, with thirteen clergymen and a membership of 267. By 1880 the number of parishes had increased to 89, there being 127 ministers and 9,842 communicants. The United States Census of 1890 showed the following figures: Parishes, 197; clergymen, 150, membership, 18,609. Total contributions (1890) for general church and mission work, $373,798. The chief educational institution of the denomination in the West is the Western Theological Seminary at Chicago. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRYOR, Joseph Everett, pioneer and early steamboat captain, was born in Virginia, August 10, 1787—the son of a non-commissioned officer of the Revolution, who emigrated to Kentucky about 1790 and settled near Louisville, which was then a fort with some twenty log cabins. In 1813 the son located where Golconda, Pope County, now stands, and early in life adopted the calling of a boatman, which he pursued some forty years. At this time he held a commission as a "Falls Pilot," and piloted the first steamer that ascended the Ohio River from New Orleans. During his long service no accident happened to any steamer for which he was responsible, although the Mississippi then bristled with snags. He owned and commanded the steamer Telegraph, which was sunk, in 1835, by collision with the Duke of Orleans on the Mississippi, but, owing to his presence of mind and the good discipline of his crew, no lives were lost. The salient features of his character were a boundless benevolence manifested to others, and his dauntless courage, displayed not only in the face of dangers met in his career as a boatman, but in his encounters with robbers who then infested portions of Southern Illinois. He had a reputation as a skillful pilot and popular commander not excelled by any of his contemporaries. He died, at his home in Pope County, Oct. 5, 1851, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Cornelia P. Bozman, of Cairo, Ill.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, SUPERINTENDENTS OF. (See Superintendents of Public Instruction.)

PUGH, Isaac C., soldier, was born in Christian County, Ky., Nov. 23, 1805; came to Illinois, in 1821, with his father, who first settled in Shelby County, but, in 1829, removed to Macon County, where the subject of this sketch resided until his death, at Decatur, Nov. 14, 1874. General Pugh served in three wars—first in the Black Hawk War of 1832; then, with the rank of Captain and Field Officer in the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) in the war with Mexico, and, during the Civil War, entering upon the latter as Colonel of the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in September, 1861, and being mustered out with the rank of full Brigadier-General in August, 1864, when his regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-third. He took part with his regiment in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the operations around Vicksburg, being wounded at the latter. In the year of his retirement from the army (1864) he was elected a Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly, and, the following year, was chosen County-Clerk of Macon County, serving four years.

PUGH, Jonathan H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Bath County, Ky., came to Bond County, Ill., finally locating at Springfield in 1823, and being the second lawyer to establish himself in practice in that city. He served in the Third, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies, and was defeated for Congress by Joseph Duncan (afterwards Governor), in 1831. Died, in 1833. Mr. Pugh is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, an able lawyer and a great wit.

PULASKI COUNTY, an extreme southern county and one of the smallest in the State, bordering on the Ohio River and having an area of 190 square miles and a population (1900), of 14,554. It was cut off from Alexander County in 1843, and named in honor of a Polish patriot who had aided the Americans during the Revolution. The soil is generally rich, and the surface varied with much low land along the Cache and the Ohio Rivers. Wheat, corn and fruit are the principal crops, while considerable timber is cut upon the bottom lands. Mound City is the county-seat and was conceded a population, by the census of 1890, of 2,550. Only the lowest, barren portion of the carboniferous formation extends under the soil, the coal measures being absent. Traces of iron have been found and sulphur and copperas springs abound.

PULLMAN, a former suburb (now a part of the South Division) of the city of Chicago, 13.8 miles south of the initial station of the Illinois Central Railroad. The Pullman Palace Car Company began the erection of buildings here in 1880, and, on the 1st of January, 1881, the first family settled in the future manufacturing city. Within the next few years, it became the center of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, including the Pullman Car Works, the Allen Paper Car Wheel Works and extensive steel forging works, employing thousands of mechanics. Large numbers of sleeping and dining cars, besides ordinary passenger coaches and freight cars, were manufactured here every year, not only for use on the railroads of the United States, but for foreign countries as well. The town was named for the late George M. Pullman, the founder of the car-works, and was regarded as a model city, made up of comfortable homes erected by the Palace Car Company for the use of its employés. It was well supplied with school-houses, and churches, and a public library was established there and opened to the public in 1883. The town was annexed to the city of Chicago in 1890.

PULLMAN, George Mortimer, founder of the Pullman Palace Car Company, was born at Brocton, N. Y., March 3, 1831, enjoyed ordinary educational advantages in his boyhood and, at fourteen years of age, obtained employment as a clerk, but a year later joined his brother in the cabinet-making business at Albion. His father, who was a house-builder and house-mover, having died in 1853, young Pullman assumed the responsibility of caring for the family and, having secured a contract for raising a number of buildings along the Erie Canal, made necessary by the enlargement of that thoroughfare, in this way acquired some capital and experience which was most valuable to him in after years. Coming to Chicago in 1859, when the work of raising the grade of the streets in the business portion of the city had been in progress for a year or two, he found a new field for the exercise of his inventive skill, achieving some marvelous transformations in a number of the principal business blocks in that part of the city. As early as 1858, Mr. Pullman had had his attention turned to devising some means for increasing the comforts of night-travel upon railways, and, in 1859, he remodeled two old day-coaches into a species of sleeping-cars, which were used upon the Alton Road. From 1860 to 1863 he spent in Colorado devoting his engineering skill to mining; but returning to Chicago the latter year, entered upon his great work of developing the idea of the sleeping-car into practical reality. The first car was completed and received the name of the "Pioneer." This car constituted a part of the funeral train which took the remains of Abraham Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., after his assassination in April, 1865. The development of the "Pullman palace sleeping-car," the invention of the dining-car, and of vestibule trains, and the building up of the great industrial town which bears his name, and is now a part of the city of Chicago, constituted a work of gradual development which resulted in some of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the nineteenth century, both in a business sense and in promoting the comfort and safety of the traveling public, as well as in bettering the conditions of workmen. He lived to see the results of his inventive genius and manufacturing skill in use upon the principal railroads of the United States and introduced upon a number of important lines in Europe also. Mr. Pullman was identified with a number of other enterprises more or less closely related to the transportation business, but the Pullman Palace Car Company was the one with which he was most closely connected, and by which he will be longest remembered. He was also associated with some of the leading educational and benevolent enterprises about the city of Chicago, to which he contributed in a liberal manner during his life and in his will. His death occurred suddenly, from heart disease, at his home in Chicago, Oct. 19, 1897.

PURPLE, Norman H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., read law and was admitted to the bar in Tioga County, Pa., settled at Peoria, Ill., in 1836, and the following year was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, which then embraced the greater portion of the State east of Peoria. In 1844 he was a Presidential Elector, and, in 1845, Governor Ford appointed him a Justice of the Supreme Court, vice Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., who had resigned. As required by law, he at the same time served as Circuit Judge, his district embracing all the counties west of Peoria, and his home being at Quincy. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he returned to Peoria and resumed practice. He compiled the Illinois Statutes relating to real property, and, in 1857, made a compilation of the general laws, generally known to the legal profession as the "Purple Statutes." He subsequently undertook to compile and arrange the laws passed from 1857 to '63, and was engaged on this work when overtaken by death, at Chicago, Aug. 9, 1863. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, during the last ten years of his life, prominent at the Chicago bar.

PUTERBAUGH, Sabin D., judge and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1834; at 8 years of age removed with his parents to Tazewell County, Ill.; settled in Pekin in 1853, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Major of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and took part in numerous engagements in Western Tennessee and Mississippi, including the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. Resigning his commission in 1862, he took up his residence at Peoria, where he resumed practice and began the preparation of his first legal work—"Common Law Pleading and Practice." In 1864 he formed a partnership with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Circuit Court Judge. He retired from the bench in 1873 to resume private practice and pursue his work as an author. His first work, having already run through three editions, was followed by "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleading and Practice," the first edition of which appeared in 1874, and "Michigan Chancery Practice," which appeared in 1881. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Died, Sept. 25, 1892. Leslie D. (Puterbaugh), a son of Judge Puterbaugh, is Judge of the Circuit Court of the Peoria Circuit.

PUTNAM COUNTY, the smallest county in the State, both as to area and population, containing only 170 square miles; population (1900), 4,746. It lies near the center of the north half of the State, and was named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam. The first American to erect a cabin within its limits was Gurdon S. Hubbard, who was in business there, as a fur-trader, as early as 1825, but afterwards became a prominent citizen of Chicago. The county was created by act of the Legislature in 1825, although a local government was not organized until some years later. Since that date, Bureau, Marshall and Stark Counties have been erected therefrom. It is crossed and drained by the Illinois River. The surface is moderately undulating and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief staple, although wheat and oats are extensively cultivated. Coal is mined and exported. Hennepin is the county-seat.

QUINCY, the principal city of Western Illinois, and the county-seat of Adams County. It was founded in 1822—the late Gov. John Wood erecting the first log-cabin there—and was incorporated in 1839. The site is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State, the principal part of the city being built on a limestone bluff having an elevation of 125 to 150 feet, and overlooking the Mississippi for a long distance. Its location is 112 miles west of Springfield and 264 miles southwest of Chicago. Besides being a principal shipping point for the river trade north of St. Louis, it is the converging point of several important railway lines, including the Wabash, four branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, giving east and west, as well as north and south, connections. At the present time (1904) several important lines, or extensions of railroads already constructed, are in contemplation, which, when completed, will add largely to the commercial importance of the city. The city is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and being lighted with gas and electricity. Water is obtained from the Mississippi. There are several electric railway lines, four public parks, a fine railway bridge across the Mississippi, to which a wagon bridge has been added within the past two years; two fine railway depots, and several elegant public buildings, including a handsome county court-house, a Government building for the use of the Post-office and the United States District Court. The Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is located here, embracing a large group of cottages occupied by veterans of the Civil War, besides hospital and administration buildings for the use of the officers. The city has more than thirty churches, three libraries (one free-public and two college), with excellent schools and other educational advantages. Among the higher institutions of learning are the Chaddock College (Methodist Episcopal) and the St. Francis Solanus College (Roman Catholic). There are two or three national banks, a State bank with a capital of $300,000, beside two private banks, four or five daily papers, with several weekly and one or two monthly publications. Its advantages as a shipping point by river and railroad have made it one of the most important manufacturing centers west of Chicago. The census of 1890 showed a total of 374 manufacturing establishments, having an aggregate capital of $6,187,845, employing 5,958 persons, and turning out an annual product valued at $10,160,492. The cost of material used was $5,597,990, and the wages paid $2,383,571. The number of different industries reported aggregated seventy-six, the more important being foundries, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural implement works, cigar and tobacco factories, flour-mills, breweries, brick-yards, lime works, saddle and harness shops, paper mills, furniture factories, organ works, and artificial-ice factories. Population (1880), 27,268; (1890), 31,494; (1900), 36,252.

RAAB, Henry, ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born in Wetzlar, Rhenish Prussia, June 20, 1837; learned the trade of a currier with his father and came to the United States in 1853, finally locating at Belleville, Ill., where, in 1857, he became a teacher in the public schools; in 1873 was made Superintendent of schools for that city, and, in 1882, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the Democratic ticket, declined a renomination in 1886; was nominated a second time in 1890, and re-elected, but defeated by S. M. Inglis in 1894. In the administration of his office, Professor Raab showed a commendable freedom from partisanship. After retiring from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed a position in connection with the public schools of Belleville.

RADISSON, Pierre Esprit, an early French traveler and trader, who is said to have reached the Upper Mississippi on his third voyage to the West in 1658-59. The period of his explorations extended from 1652 to 1684, of which he prepared a narrative which was published by the Prince Society of Boston in 1885, under the title of "Radisson's Voyages." He and his brother-in-law, Medard Chouart, first conceived the idea of planting a settlement at Hudson's Bay. (See Chouart, Medard.)

RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION, a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the executive (by and with the advice and consent of the Senate), under authority of an act approved, April 13, 1871, for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and laws in relation to railroads and warehouses. The Commission's powers are partly judicial, partly executive. The following is a summary of its powers and duties: To establish a schedule of maximum rates, equitable to shipper and carrier alike; to require yearly reports from railroads and warehouses; to hear and pass upon complaints of extortion and unjust discrimination, and (if necessary) enforce prosecutions therefor; to secure the safe condition of railway road-beds, bridges and trestles; to hear and decide all manner of complaints relative to intersections and to protect grade-crossings; to insure the adoption of a safe interlocking system, to be approved by the Commission; to enforce proper rules for the inspection and registration of grain throughout the State. The principal offices of the Commission are at the State capital, where monthly sessions are held. For the purpose of properly conducting the grain inspection department, monthly meetings are also held at Chicago, where the offices of a Grain Inspector, appointed by the Board, are located. Here all business relating to this department is discussed and necessary special meetings are held. The inspection department has no revenue outside of fees, but the latter are ample for its maintenance. Fees for inspection on arrival ("inspection in") are twenty-five cents per car-load, ten cents per wagon-load, and forty cents per 1,000 bushels from canal-boat or vessels. For inspection from store ("inspected out") the fees are fifty cents per 1,000 bushels to vessels; thirty-five cents per car-load, and ten cents per wagon-load to teams. While there are never wanting some cases of friction between the transportation companies and warehousemen on the one hand, and the Commission on the other, there can be no question that the formation of the latter has been of great value to the receivers, shippers, forwarders and tax-payers of the State generally. Similar regulations in regard to the inspection of grain in warehouses, at East St. Louis and Peoria, are also in force. The first Board, created under the act of 1871, consisted of Gustavus Koerner, Richard P. Morgan and David S. Hammond, holding office until 1873. Other Boards have been as follows: 1873-77—Henry D. Cook (deceased 1873, and succeeded by James Steele), David A. Brown and John M. Pearson; 1877-83—William M. Smith, George M. Bogue and John H. Oberly (retired 1881 and succeeded by William H. Robinson); 1883-85—Wm. N. Brainard, E. C. Lewis and Charles T. Stratton; 1885-89—John I. Rinaker, Benjamin F. Marsh and Wm. T. Johnson (retired in 1887 and succeeded by Jason Rogers); 1889-93—John R. Wheeler, Isaac N. Phillips and W. S. Crim (succeeded, 1891, by John R. Tanner); 1893-97—W. S. Cantrell, Thomas F. Gahan and Charles F. Lape (succeeded, 1895, by George W. Fithian); 1897-99—Cicero J. Lindley, Charles S. Rannels and James E. Bidwell. (See also Grain Inspection.)

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME, WILMINGTON.

RAILROADS (IN GENERAL). The existing railroad system of Illinois had its inception in the mania for internal improvement which swept over the country in 1836-37, the basis of the plan adopted in Illinois (as in the Eastern States) being that the State should construct, maintain, own and operate an elaborate system. Lines were to be constructed from Cairo to Galena, from Alton to Mount Carmel, from Peoria to Warsaw, from Alton to the Central Railroad, from Belleville to Mount Carmel, from Bloomington to Mackinaw Town, and from Meredosia to Springfield. The experiment proved extremely unfortunate to the financial interests of the State, and laid the foundation of an immense debt under which it staggered for many years. The Northern Cross Railroad, extending from Meredosia to Springfield, was the only one so far completed as to be in operation. It was sold, in 1847, to Nicholas H. Ridgely, of Springfield for $21,100, he being the highest bidder. This line formed a nucleus of the existing Wabash system. The first road to be operated by private parties (outside of a primitive tramway in St. Clair County, designed for the transportation of coal to St. Louis) was the Galena & Chicago Union, chartered in 1836. This was the second line completed in the State, and the first to run from Chicago. The subsequent development of the railway system of Illinois was at first gradual, then steady and finally rapid. A succinct description of the various lines now in operation in the State may be found under appropriate headings. At present Illinois leads all the States of the Union in the extent of railways in operation, the total mileage (1897) of main track being 10,785.43—or 19 miles for each 100 square miles of territory and 25 miles for each 10,000 inhabitants—estimating the population (1898) at four and a quarter millions. Every one of the 102 counties of the State is traversed by at least one railroad except three—Calhoun, Hardin and Pope. The entire capitalization of the 111 companies doing business in the State in 1896, (including capital stock, funded debt and current liabilities), was $2,669,164.14—equal to $67,556 per mile. In 1894, fifteen owned and ten leased lines paid dividends of from four to eight per cent on common, and from four to ten per cent on preferred, stock—the total amount thus paid aggregating $25,321,752. The total earnings and income, in Illinois, of all lines operated in the State, aggregated $77,508,537, while the total expenditure within the State was $71,463,367. Of the 58,263,860 tons of freight carried, 11,611,798 were of agricultural products and 17,179,366 mineral products. The number of passengers (earning revenue) carried during the year, was 83,281,655. The total number of railroad employes (of all classes) was 61,200. The entire amount of taxes paid by railroad companies for the year was $3,846,379. From 1836, when the first special charter was granted for the construction of a railroad in Illinois, until 1869—after which all corporations of this character came under the general incorporation laws of the State in accordance with the Constitution of 1870—293 special charters for the construction of railroads were granted by the Legislature, besides numerous amendments of charters already in existence. (For the history of important individual lines see each road under its corporate name.)

RALSTON, Virgil Young, editor and soldier, was born, July 16, 1828, at Vanceburg, Ky.; was a student in Illinois College one year (1846-47), after which he studied law in Quincy and practiced for a time; also resided some time in California; 1855-57 was one of the editors of "The Quincy Whig," and represented that paper in the Editorial Convention at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) In 1861, he was commissioned a Captain in the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, but soon resigned on account of ill-health; later, enlisted in an Iowa regiment, but died in hospital at St. Louis, from wounds and exposure, April 19, 1864.

RAMSAY, Rufus N., State Treasurer, was born on a farm in Clinton County, Ill., May 20, 1838; received a collegiate education at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, and at Indiana State University; studied law with ex-Gov. A. C. French, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, but soon abandoned the law for banking, in which he was engaged both at Lebanon and Carlyle, limiting his business to the latter place about 1890. He served one term (from 1865) as County Clerk, and two terms (1889 and '91) as Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1892, was nominated as a Democrat and elected State Treasurer. Died in office, at Carlyle, Nov. 11, 1894.

RAMSEY, a village of Fayette County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 12 miles north of Vandalia; the district is agricultural; has one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 598; (1900), 747.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, lies in the southwest section of the State, and borders on the Mississippi River; area 560 square miles; named for Beverly Randolph. It was set off from St. Clair County in 1795, being the second county organized in the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois. From the earliest period of Illinois history, Randolph County has been a pivotal point. In the autumn of 1700 a French and Indian settlement was established at Kaskaskia, which subsequently became the center of French influence in the Mississippi Valley. In 1722 Prairie du Rocher was founded by the French. It was in Randolph County that Fort Chartres was built, in 1720, and it was here that Col. George Rogers Clark's expedition for the seizure of the "Illinois Country" met with success in the capture of Kaskaskia. American immigration began with the close of the Revolutionary War. Among the early settlers were the Cranes (Ichabod and George), Gen. John Edgar, the Dodge family, the Morrisons, and John Rice Jones. Toward the close of the century came Shadrach Bond (afterwards the first Governor of the State) with his uncle of the same name, and the Menards (Pierre and Hippolyte), the first of whom subsequently became Lieutenant-Governor. (See Bond, Shadrach; Menard, Pierre.) In outline, Randolph County is triangular, while its surface is diversified. Timber and building stone are abundant, and coal underlies a considerable area. Chester, the county-seat, a city of 3,000 inhabitants, is a place of considerable trade and the seat of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary. The county is crossed by several railroad lines, and transportation facilities are excellent. Population (1890), 25,049; (1900), 28,001.

RANSOM, (Gen.) Thomas Edward Greenfield, soldier, was born at Norwich, Vt., Nov. 29, 1834; educated at Norwich University, an institution under charge of his father, who was later an officer of the Mexican War and killed at Chapultepec. Having learned civil engineering, he entered on his profession at Peru, Ill., in 1851; in 1855 became a member of the real-estate firm of A. J. Galloway & Co., Chicago, soon after removing to Fayette County, where he acted as agent of the Illinois Central Railroad. Under the first call for volunteers, in April, 1861, he organized a company, which having been incorporated in the Eleventh Illinois, he was elected Major, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, in this capacity having command of his regiment at Fort Donelson, where he was severely wounded and won deserved promotion to a colonely, as successor to Gen. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards killed at Shiloh. Here Colonel Ransom again distinguished himself by his bravery, and though again wounded while leading his regiment, remained in command through the day. His service was recognized by promotion as Brigadier-General. He bore a prominent part in the siege of Vicksburg and in the Red River campaign, and, later, commanded the Seventh Army Corps in the operations about Atlanta, but finally fell a victim to disease and his numerous wounds, dying in Chicago, Oct. 29, 1864, having previously received the brevet rank of Major-General. General Ransom was confessedly one of the most brilliant officers contributed by Illinois to the War for the Union, and was pronounced, by both Grant and Sherman, one of the ablest volunteer generals in their commands.

RANTOUL, a city in Champaign County, at the junction of the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, with its West Lebanon and Leroy branch, 14 miles north-northeast of Champaign and 114 miles south by west of Chicago. It has a national bank, seven churches, opera house, graded school, two weekly papers, machine shops, flouring and flax mills, tile factories, and many handsome residences. Pop. (1900), 1,207.

RASLE, Sebastian, a Jesuit missionary, born in France, in 1658; at his own request was attached to the French missions in Canada in 1689, and, about 1691 or '92, was sent to the Illinois Country, where he labored for two years, traveling much and making a careful study of the Indian dialects. He left many manuscripts descriptive of his journeyings and of the mode of life and character of the aborigines. From Illinois he was transferred to Norridgewock, Maine, where he prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language in three volumes, which is now preserved in the library of Harvard College. His influence over his Indian parishioners was great, and his use of it, during the French and Indian War, so incensed the English colonists in Massachusetts that the Governor set a price upon his head. On August 12, 1724, he was slain, with seven Indian chiefs who were seeking to aid his escape, during a night attack upon Norridgewock by a force of English soldiers from Fort Richmond, his mutilated body being interred the next day by the Indians. In 1833, the citizens of Norridgewock erected a monument to his memory on the spot where he fell.

RANSTER, Herman, journalist, was born in Germany in 1828; entered journalism and came to America in 1851, being employed on German papers in Buffalo and New York City; in 1867 accepted the position of editor-in-chief of "The Chicago Staats Zeitung," which he continued to fill until June, 1890, when he went to Europe for the benefit of his health, dying at Dresden, July 24, 1891. While employed on papers in this country during the Civil War, he acted as the American correspondent of papers at Berlin, Bremen, Vienna, and other cities of Central Europe. He served as delegate to both State and National Conventions of the Republican party, and, in 1869, received from President Grant the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District, but, during the later years of his life, coöperated with the Democratic party.

RAUCH, John Henry, physician and sanitary expert, born in Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 4, 1828, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1849. The following year he removed to Iowa, settling at Burlington. He was an active member of the Iowa State Medical Society, and, in 1851, prepared and published a "Report on the Medical and Economic Botany of Iowa," and, later, made a collection of ichthyologic remains of the Upper Mississippi and Missouri for Professor Agassiz. From 1857 to 1860 he filled the chair of Materia Medica and Medical Botany at Rush Medical College, Chicago, occupying the same position in 1859 in the Chicago College of Pharmacy, of which he was one of the organizers. During the Civil War he served, until 1864, as Assistant Medical Director, first in the Army of the Potomac, and later in Louisiana, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at the close of the struggle. Returning to Chicago, he aided in reorganizing the city's health service, and, in 1867, was appointed a member of the new Board of Health and Sanitary Inspector, serving until 1876. The latter year he was chosen President of the American Public Health Association, and, in 1877, a member of the newly created State Board of Health of Illinois, and elected its first President. Later, he became Secretary, and continued in that office during his connection with the Board. In 1878-79 he devoted much attention to the yellow-fever epidemic, and was instrumental in the formation of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi, and in securing the adoption of a system of river inspection by the National Board of Health. He was a member of many scientific bodies, and the author of numerous monographs and printed addresses, chiefly in the domain of sanitary science and preventive medicine. Among them may be noticed "Intramural Interments and Their Influence on Health and Epidemics," "Sanitary Problems of Chicago," "Prevention of Asiatic Cholera in North America," and a series of reports as Secretary of the State Board of Health. Died, at Lebanon, Pa., March 24, 1894.

RAUM, (Gen.) Green Berry, soldier and author, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1829, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1853, but, three years later, removed with his family to Kansas. His Free-State proclivities rendering him obnoxious to the pro-slavery party there, he returned to Illinois in 1857, settling at Harrisburg, Saline County. Early in the Civil War he was commissioned a Major in the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, was subsequently promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and, later, advanced to a Brigadier-Generalship, resigning his commission at the close of the war (May 6, 1865). He was with Rosecrans in the Mississippi campaign of 1862, took a conspicuous part in the battle of Corinth, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded at Missionary Ridge. He also rendered valuable service during the Atlanta campaign, keeping lines of communication open, re-enforcing Resaca and repulsing an attack by General Hood. He was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and with Hancock, in the Shenandoah Valley, when the war closed. In 1866 General Raum became President of the projected Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, an enterprise of which he had been an active promoter. He was elected to Congress in 1866 from the Southern Illinois District (then the Thirteenth), serving one term, and the same year presided over the Republican State Convention, as he did again in 1876 and in 1890—was also a delegate to the National Conventions at Cincinnati and Chicago the last two years just mentioned. From August 2, 1876, to May 31, 1883, General Raum served as Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in that time having superintended the collection of $800,000,000 of revenue, and the disbursement of $30,000,000. After retiring from the Commissionership, he resumed the practice of law in Washington. In 1889 he was appointed Commissioner of Pensions, remaining to the close of President Harrison's administration, when he removed to Chicago and again engaged in practice. During the various political campaigns of the past thirty years, his services have been in frequent request as a campaign speaker, and he has canvassed a number of States in the interest of the Republican party. Besides his official reports, he is author of "The Existing Conflict Between Republican Government and Southern Oligarchy" (Washington, 1884), and a number of magazine articles.

RAUM, John, pioneer and early legislator, was born in Hummelstown, Pa., July 14, 1793, and died at Golconda, Ill., March 14, 1869. Having received a liberal education in his native State, the subject of this sketch settled at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1823, but removed to Golconda, Pope County, in 1826. He had previously served three years in the War of 1812, as First Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, and, while a resident of Illinois, served in the Black Hawk War of 1832 as Brigade Major. He was also elected Senator from the District composed of Pope and Johnson Counties in the Eighth General Assembly (1833), as successor to Samuel Alexander, who had resigned. The following year he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pope County, and was also elected Clerk of the County Court the same year, holding both offices for many years, and retaining the County Clerkship up to his death, a period of thirty-five years. He was married March 22, 1827, to Juliet C. Field, and was father of Brig.-Gen. Green B. Raum, and Maj. John M. Raum, both of whom served in the volunteer army from Illinois during the Civil War.

RAWLINS, John Aaron, soldier, Secretary of War, was born at East Galena, Feb. 13, 1831, the son of a small farmer, who was also a charcoal-burner. The son, after irregular attendance on the district schools and a year passed at Mount Morris Academy, began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Galena in 1854, and at once began practice. In 1857 he was elected City Attorney of Galena, and nominated on the Douglas electoral ticket in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he favored, and publicly advocated, coercive measures, and it is said that it was partly through his influence that General Grant early tendered his services to the Government. He served on the staff of the latter from the time General Grant was given command of a brigade until the close of the war, most of the time being its chief, and rising in rank, step by step, until, in 1863, he became a Brigadier-General, and, in 1865, a Major-General. His long service on the staff of General Grant indicates the estimation in which he was held by his chief. Promptly on the assumption of the Presidency by General Grant, in March, 1869, he was appointed Secretary of War, but consumption had already obtained a hold upon his constitution, and he survived only six months, dying in office, Sept. 6, 1869.

RAY, Charles H., journalist, was born at Norwich, Chenango County, N. Y., March 12, 1821; came west in 1843, studied medicine and began practice at Muscatine, Iowa, afterwards locating in Tazewell County, Ill., also being associated, for a time, with the publication of a temperance paper at Springfield. In 1847 he removed to Galena, soon after becoming editor of "The Galena Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper, with which he remained until 1854. He took strong ground against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, and, at the session of the Legislature of 1855, served as Secretary of the Senate, also acting as correspondent of "The New York Tribune"; a few months later became associated with Joseph Medill and John C. Vaughan in the purchase and management of "The Chicago Tribune," Dr. Ray assuming the position of editor-in-chief. Dr. Ray was one of the most trenchant and powerful writers ever connected with the Illinois press, and his articles exerted a wide influence during the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which he was an influential factor. He was a member of the Convention of Anti-Nebraska editors held at Decatur, Feb. 23, 1856, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) At the State Republican Convention held at Bloomington, in May following, he was appointed a member of the State Central Committee for that year; was also Canal Trustee by appointment of Governor Bissell, serving from 1857 to 1861. In November, 1863, he severed his connection with "The Tribune" and engaged in oil speculations in Canada which proved financially disastrous. In 1865 he returned to the paper as an editorial writer, remaining only for a short time. In 1868 he assumed the management of "The Chicago Evening Post," with which he remained identified until his death, Sept. 23, 1870.

RAY, Lyman Beecher, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Crittenden County, Vt., August 17, 1831; removed to Illinois in 1852, and has since been engaged in mercantile business in this State. After filling several local offices he was elected to represent Grundy County in the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872), and, ten years later, was chosen State Senator, serving from 1883 to 1887, and being one of the recognized party leaders on the floor. In 1888, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket, his term expiring in 1893. His home is at Morris, Grundy County.

RAY, William H., Congressman, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1812; grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a limited education; in 1834 removed to Rushville, Ill., engaging in business as a merchant and, later, as a banker; was a member of the first State Board of Equalization (1867-69), and, in 1872, was elected to Congress as a Republican, representing his District from 1873 to 1875. Died, Jan. 25, 1881.

RAYMOND, a village of Montgomery County, on the St. Louis Division of the Wabash Railway, 50 miles southwest of Decatur; has electric lights, some manufactures and a weekly paper. Considerable coal is mined here and grain and fruit grown in the surrounding country. Population (1880), 543; (1890), 841; (1900), 906.

RAYMOND, (Rev.) Miner, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in New York City, August 29, 1811, being descended from a family of Huguenots (known by the name of "Raimonde"), who were expelled from France on account of their religion. In his youth he learned the trade of a shoemaker with his father, at Rensselaerville, N. Y. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of 17, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he afterwards became a teacher. In 1838 he joined the New England Conference and, three years later, began pastoral work at Worcester, subsequently occupying pulpits in Boston and Westfield. In 1848, on the resignation of Dr. Robert Allyn (afterwards President of McKendree College and of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale), Dr. Raymond succeeded to the principalship of the Academy at Wilbraham, remaining there until 1864, when he was elected to the chair of systematic theology in the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., his connection with the latter institution continuing until 1895, when he resigned. For some three years of this period he served as pastor of the First Methodist Church at Evanston. His death occurred, Nov. 25, 1897.

REAVIS, Logan Uriah, journalist, was born in the Sangamon Bottom, Mason County, Ill., March 26, 1831; in 1855 entered the office of "The Beardstown Gazette," later purchased an interest in the paper and continued its publication under the name of "The Central Illinoian," until 1857, when he sold out and went to Nebraska. Returning, in 1860, he repurchased his old paper and conducted it until 1866, when he sold out for the last time. The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to advocating the removal of the National Capital to St. Louis, which he did by lectures and the publication of pamphlets and books on the subject; also published a "Life of Horace Greeley," another of General Harney, and two or three other volumes. Died in St. Louis, April 25, 1889.

RECTOR, the name of a prominent and influential family who lived at Kaskaskia in Territorial days. According to Governor Reynolds, who has left the most detailed account of them in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," they consisted of nine brothers and four daughters, all of whom were born in Fauquier County, Va., some of them emigrating to Ohio, while others came to Illinois, arriving at Kaskaskia in 1806. Reynolds describes them as passionate and impulsive, but possessed of a high standard of integrity and a chivalrous and patriotic spirit.—William, the oldest brother, and regarded as the head of the family, became a Deputy Surveyor soon after coming to Illinois, and took part in the Indian campaigns between 1812 and 1814. In 1816 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and afterwards removed to St. Louis.—Stephen, another of the brothers, was a Lieutenant in Captain Moore's Company of Rangers in the War of 1812, while Charles commanded one of the two regiments organized by Governor Edwards, in 1812, for the expedition against the Indians at the head of Peoria Lake.—Nelson, still another brother, served in the same expedition on the staff of Governor Edwards. Stephen, already mentioned, was a member of the expedition sent to strengthen Prairie du Chien in 1814, and showed great courage in a fight with the Indians at Rock Island. During the same year Nelson Rector and Captain Samuel Whiteside joined Col. Zachary Taylor (afterwards President) in an expedition on the Upper Mississippi, in which they came in conflict with the British and Indians at Rock Island, in which Captain Rector again displayed the courage so characteristic of his family. On the 1st of March, 1814, while in charge of a surveying party on Saline Creek, in Gallatin County, according to Reynolds, Nelson was ambushed by the Indians and, though severely wounded, was carried away by his horse, and recovered.—Elias, another member of the family, was Governor Edwards' first Adjutant-General, serving a few months in 1809, when he gave place to Robert Morrison, but was reappointed in 1810, serving for more than three years.—Thomas, one of the younger members, had a duel with Joshua Barton on "Bloody Island," sometime between 1812 and 1814, in which he killed his antagonist. (See Duels.) A portion of this historic family drifted into Arkansas, where they became prominent, one of their descendants serving as Governor of that State during the Civil War period.

RED BUD, a city in Randolph County, on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, some 37 miles south-southeast of St. Louis, and 21 miles south of Belleville; has a carriage factory and two flouring mills, electric lights, a hospital, two banks, five churches, a graded school and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,176; (1900), 1,169.

REEVES, Owen T., lawyer and jurist, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1829; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, in 1850, afterwards serving as a tutor in that institution and as Principal of a High School at Chillicothe. In 1854 he came to Bloomington, Ill., and, as a member of the School Board, assisted in reorganizing the school system of that city; also has served continuously, for over 40 years, as one of the Trustees of the Illinois Wesleyan University, being a part of the time President of the Board. In the meantime, he had begun the practice of law, served as City Attorney and member of the Board of Supervisors. July 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Seventieth Illinois Volunteers (a 100-days' emergency regiment), was elected Colonel and mustered out, with his command, in October, 1862. Colonel Reeves was subsequently connected with the construction of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad (now a part of the Illinois Central), and was also one of the founders of the Law Department of the Wesleyan University. In 1877 he was elected to the Circuit bench, serving continuously, by repeated re-elections, until 1891—during the latter part of his incumbency being upon the Appellate bench.

REEVES, Walter, Member of Congress and lawyer, was born near Brownsville, Pa., Sept. 25, 1848; removed to Illinois at 8 years of age and was reared on a farm; later became a teacher and lawyer, following his profession at Streator; in 1894 he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh District for Congress, as successor to the Hon. Thomas J. Henderson, and was elected, receiving a majority over three competitors. Mr. Reeves was re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898.

REFORMATORY, ILLINOIS STATE, a prison for the incarceration of male offenders under 21 years of age, who are believed to be susceptible of reformation. It is the successor of the "State Reform School," which was created by act of the Legislature of 1867, but not opened for the admission of inmates until 1871. It is located at Pontiac. The number of inmates, in 1872, was 165, which was increased to 324 in 1890. The results, while moderately successful, were not altogether satisfactory. The appropriations made for construction, maintenance, etc., were not upon a scale adequate to accomplish what was desired, and, in 1891, a radical change was effected. Previous to that date the limit, as to age, was 16 years. The law establishing the present reformatory provides for a system of indeterminate sentences, and a release upon parole, of inmates who, in the opinion of the Board of Managers, may be safely granted conditional liberation. The inmates are divided into two classes, (1) those between the ages of 10 and 16, and (2) those between 16 and 21. The Board of Managers is composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be of the same party, their term of office to be for ten years. The course of treatment is educational (intellectually, morally and industrially), schools being conducted, trades taught, and the inmates constantly impressed with the conviction that, only through genuine and unmistakable evidence of improvement, can they regain their freedom. The reformatory influence of the institution may be best inferred from the results of one year's operation. Of 146 inmates paroled, 15 violated their parole and became fugitives, 6 were returned to the Reformatory, 1 died, and 124 remained in employment and regularly reporting. Among the industries carried on are painting and glazing, masonry and plastering, gardening, knitting, chair-caning, broom-making, carpentering, tailoring and blacksmithing. The grounds of the Reformatory contain a vein of excellent coal, which it is proposed to mine, utilizing the clay, thus obtained, in the manufacture of brick, which can be employed in the construction of additional needed buildings. The average number of inmates is about 800, and the crimes for which they are sentenced range, in gravity, from simple assault, or petit larceny, to the most serious offenses known to the criminal code, with the exception of homicide. The number of inmates, at the beginning of the year 1895, was 812. An institution of a similar character, for the confinement of juvenile female offenders, was established under an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1893, and located at Geneva, Kane County. (See Home for Juvenile Female Offenders.)

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. The State constitution contains the familiar guaranty of absolute freedom of conscience. The chief denominations have grown in like ratio with the population, as may be seen from figures given below. The earliest Christian services held were conducted by Catholic missionaries, who attested the sincerity of their convictions (in many instances) by the sacrifice of their lives, either through violence or exposure. The aborigines, however, were not easily Christianized; and, shortly after the cession of Illinois by France to Great Britain, the Catholic missions, being generally withdrawn, ceased to exert much influence upon the red men, although the French, who remained in the ceded territory, continued to adhere to their ancient faith. (See Early Missionaries.) One of the first Protestant sects to hold service in Illinois, was the Methodist Episcopal; Rev. Joseph Lillard coming to Illinois in 1793, and Rev. Hosea Riggs settling in the American Bottom in 1796. (For history of Methodism in Illinois, see Methodist Episcopal Church.) The pioneer Protestant preacher, however, was a Baptist—Elder James Smith—who came to New Design in 1787. Revs. David Badgley and Joseph Chance followed him in 1796, and the first denominational association was formed in 1807. (As to inception and growth of this denomination in Illinois, see also Baptists.) In 1814 the Massachusetts Missionary Society sent two missionaries to Illinois—Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith. Two years later (1816), the First Presbyterian Church was organized at Sharon, by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky. (See also Presbyterians.) The Congregationalists began to arrive with the tide of immigration that set in from the Eastern States, early in the '30's. Four churches were organized in 1833, and the subsequent growth of the denomination in the State, if gradual, has been steady. (See Congregationalists.) About the same time came the Disciples of Christ (sometimes called, from their founder, "Campbellites"). They encouraged free discussion, were liberal and warm hearted, and did not require belief in any particular creed as a condition of membership. The sect grew rapidly in numerical strength. (See Disciples of Christ.) The Protestant Episcopalians obtained their first foothold in Illinois, in 1835, when Rev. Philander Chase (afterward consecrated Bishop) immigrated to the State from the East. (See Protestant Episcopal Church.) The Lutherans in Illinois are chiefly of German or Scandinavian birth or descent, as may be inferred from the fact that, out of sixty-four churches in Chicago under care of the Missouri Synod, only four use the English language. They are the only Protestant sect maintaining (whenever possible) a system of parochial schools. (See Lutherans.) There are twenty-six other religious bodies in the State, exclusive of the Jews, who have twelve synagogues and nine rabbis. According to the census statistics of 1890, these twenty-six sects, with their numerical strength, number of buildings, ministers, etc., are as follows: Anti-Mission Baptists, 2,800 members, 78 churches and 63 ministers; Church of God, 1,200 members, 39 churches, 34 ministers; Dunkards, 121,000 members, 155 churches, 83 ministers; Friends ("Quakers") 2,655 members, 25 churches; Free Methodists, 1,805 members, 38 churches, 84 ministers; Free-Will Baptists, 4,694 members, 107 churches, 72 ministers; Evangelical Association, 15,904 members, 143 churches, 152 ministers; Cumberland Presbyterians, 11,804 members, 198 churches, 149 ministers; Methodist Episcopal (South) 3,927 members, 34 churches, 33 ministers; Moravians, 720 members, 3 churches, 3 ministers; New Jerusalem Church (Swedenborgians), 662 members, 14 churches, 8 ministers; Primitive Methodist, 230 members, 2 churches, 2 ministers; Protestant Methodist, 5,000 members, 91 churches, 106 ministers; Reformed Church in United States, 4,100 members, 34 churches, 19 ministers; Reformed Church of America, 2,200 members, 24 churches, 23 ministers; Reformed Episcopalians, 2,150 members, 13 churches, 11 ministers; Reformed Presbyterians, 1,400 members, 7 churches, 6 ministers; Salvation Army, 1,980 members; Second Adventists, 4,500 members, 64 churches, 35 ministers; Seventh Day Baptists, 320 members, 7 churches, 11 ministers; Universalists, 3,160 members, 45 churches, 37 ministers; Unitarians, 1,325 members, 19 churches, 14 ministers; United Evangelical, 30,000 members, 129 churches, 108 ministers; United Brethren, 16,500 members, 275 churches, 260 ministers; United Presbyterians, 11,250 members, 203 churches, 199 ministers; Wesleyan Methodists, 1,100 members, 16 churches, 33 ministers. (See various Churches under their proper names; also Roman Catholic Church.)

REND, William Patrick, soldier, capitalist, and coal-operator, was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1840, brought to Lowell, Mass., in boyhood, and graduated from the high school there at 17; taught for a time near New York City and later in Maryland, where he began a course of classical study. The Civil War coming on, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, serving most of the time as a non-commissioned officer, and participating in the battles of the second Bull Run, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Frederickburg and Chancellorsville. After the war he came to Chicago and secured employment in a railway surveyor's office, later acting as foreman of the Northwestern freight depot, and finally embarking in the coal business, which was conducted with such success that he became the owner of some of the most valuable mining properties in the country. Meanwhile he has taken a deep interest in the welfare of miners and other classes of laborers, and has sought to promote arbitration and conciliation between employers and employed, as a means of averting disastrous strikes. He was especially active during the long strike of 1897, in efforts to bring about an understanding between the miners and the operators. For several years he held a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Illinois National Guard until compelled, by the demands of his private business, to tender his resignation.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

REYNOLDS, John, Justice of Supreme Court and fourth Governor of Illinois, was born of Irish ancestry, in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 26, 1789, and brought by his parents to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1800, spending the first nine years of his life in Illinois on a farm. After receiving a common school education, and a two years' course of study in a college at Knoxville, Tenn., he studied law and began practice. In 1812-13 he served as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians, winning for himself the title, in after life, of "The Old Ranger." Afterwards he removed to Cahokia, where he began the practice of law, and, in 1818, became Associate Justice of the first Supreme Court of the new State. Retiring from the bench in 1825, he served two terms in the Legislature, and was elected Governor in 1830, in 1832 personally commanding the State volunteers called for service in the Black Hawk War. Two weeks before the expiration of his term (1834), he resigned to accept a seat in Congress, to which he had been elected as the successor of Charles Slade, who had died in office, and was again elected in 1838, always as a Democrat. He also served as Representative in the Fifteenth General Assembly, and again in the Eighteenth (1852-54), being chosen Speaker of the latter. In 1858 he was the administration (or Buchanan) Democratic candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, as opposed to the Republican and regular (or Douglas) Democratic candidates. For some years he edited a daily paper called "The Eagle," which was published at Belleville. While Governor Reynolds acquired some reputation as a "classical scholar," from the time spent in a Tennessee College at that early day, this was not sustained by either his colloquial or written style. He was an ardent champion of slavery, and, in the early days of the Rebellion, gained unfavorable notoriety in consequence of a letter written to Jefferson Davis expressing sympathy with the cause of "secession." Nevertheless, in spite of intense prejudice and bitter partisanship on some questions, he possessed many amiable qualities, as shown by his devotion to temperance, and his popularity among persons of opposite political opinions. Although at times crude in style, and not always reliable in his statement of historical facts and events, Governor Reynolds has rendered a valuable service to posterity by his writings relating to the early history of the State, especially those connected with his own times. His best known works are: "Pioneer History of Illinois" (Belleville, 1848); "A Glance at the Crystal Palace, and Sketches of Travel" (1854); and "My Life and Times" (1855). His death occurred at Belleville, May 8, 1865.

REYNOLDS, John Parker, Secretary and President of State Board of Agriculture, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, March 1, 1820, and graduated from the Miami University at the age of 18. In 1840 he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and soon afterward began practice. He removed to Illinois in 1854, settling first in Winnebago County, later, successively in Marion County, in Springfield and in Chicago. From 1860 to 1870 he was Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, and, upon the creation of the State Board of Agriculture in 1871, was elected its President, filling that position until 1888, when he resigned. He has also occupied numerous other posts of honor and of trust of a public or semi-public character, having been President of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission during the War of the Rebellion, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1867, Chief Grain Inspector from 1878 to 1882, and Secretary of the Inter-State Industrial Exposition Company of Chicago, from the date of its organization (1873) until its final dissolution. His most important public service, in recent years, was rendered as Director-in-Chief of the Illinois exhibit in the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

REYNOLDS, Joseph Smith, soldier and legislator, was born at New Lenox, Ill., Dec. 3, 1839; at 17 years of age went to Chicago, was educated in the high school there, within a month after graduation enlisting as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers. From the ranks he rose to a colonelcy through the gradations of Second-Lieutenant and Captain, and, in July, 1865, was brevetted Brigadier-General. He was a gallant soldier, and was thrice wounded. On his return home after nearly four years' service, he entered the law department of the Chicago University, graduating therefrom and beginning practice in 1866. General Reynolds has been prominent in public life, having served as a member of both branches of the General Assembly, and having been a State Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition of 1873. He is a member of the G. A. R., and, in 1875, was elected Senior Vice-Commander of the order for the United States.

REYNOLDS, William Morton, clergyman, was born in Fayette County, Pa., March 4, 1812; after graduating at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1832, was connected with various institutions in that State, as well as President of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio; then, coming to Illinois, was President of the Illinois State University at Springfield, 1857-60, after which he became Principal of a female seminary in Chicago. Previously a Lutheran, he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1864, and served several parishes until his death. In his early life he founded, and, for a time, conducted several religious publications at Gettysburg, Pa., besides issuing a number of printed addresses and other published works. Died at Oak Park, near Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876.

RHOADS, (Col.) Franklin Lawrence, soldier and steamboat captain, was born in Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 11, 1824; brought to Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., in 1836, where he learned the printer's trade, and, on the breaking out of the Mexican War, enlisted, serving to the close. Returning home he engaged in the river trade, and, for fifteen years, commanded steamboats on the Illinois, Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In April, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of a company of three months' men attached to the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, soon after being promoted to the colonelcy, as successor to Col. Richard J. Oglesby, who had been promoted Brigadier-General. After serving through the spring campaign of 1862 in Western Kentucky and Tennessee, he was compelled by rapidly declining health to resign, when he located in Shawneetown, retiring in 1874 to his farm near that city. During the latter years of his life he was a confirmed invalid, dying at Shawneetown, Jan. 6, 1879.

RHOADS, Joshua, M.D., A.M., physician and educator, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1806; studied medicine and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M.D., also receiving the degree of A.M., from Princeton; after several years spent in practice as a physician, and as Principal in some of the public schools of Philadelphia, in 1839 he was elected Principal of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, and, in 1850, took charge of the State Institution for the Blind at Jacksonville, Ill., then in its infancy. Here he remained until 1874, when he retired. Died, February 1, 1876.

RICE, Edward Y., lawyer and jurist, born in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1820, was educated in the common schools and at Shurtleff College, after which he read law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to practice, in 1845, at Hillsboro; in 1847 was elected County Recorder of Montgomery County, and, in 1848, to the Sixteenth General Assembly, serving one term. Later he was elected County Judge of Montgomery County, was Master in Chancery from 1853 to 1857, and the latter year was elected Judge of the Eighteenth Circuit, being re-elected in 1861 and again in 1867. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, at the election of the latter year, was chosen Representative in the Forty-second Congress as a Democrat. Died, April 16, 1883.

RICE, John B., theatrical manager, Mayor of Chicago, and Congressman, was born at Easton, Md., in 1809. By profession he was an actor, and, coming to Chicago in 1847, built and opened there the first theater. In 1857 he retired from the stage, and, in 1865, was elected Mayor of Chicago, the city of his adoption, and re-elected in 1867. He was also prominent in the early stages of the Civil War in the measures taken to raise troops in Chicago. In 1872 he was elected to the Forty-third Congress as a Republican, but, before the expiration of his term, died, at Norfolk, Va., on Dec. 6, 1874. At a special election to fill the vacancy, Bernard G. Caulfield was chosen to succeed him.

RICHARDSON, William A., lawyer and politician, born in Fayette County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1811, was educated at Transylvania University, came to the bar at 19, and settled in Schuyler County, Ill., becoming State's Attorney in 1835; was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1836, to the Senate in 1838, and to the House again in 1844, from Adams County—the latter year being also chosen Presidential Elector on the Polk and Dallas ticket, and, at the succeeding session of the General Assembly, serving as Speaker of the House. He entered the Mexican War as Captain, and won a Majority through gallantry at Buena Vista. From 1847 to 1856 (when he resigned to become a candidate for Governor), he was a Democratic Representative in Congress from the Quincy District; re-entered Congress in 1861, and, in 1863, was chosen United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Stephen A. Douglas. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1868, but after that retired to private life, acting, for a short time, as editor of "The Quincy Herald." Died, at Quincy, Dec. 27, 1875.

RICHLAND COUNTY, situated in the southeast quarter of the State, and has an area of 361 square miles. It was organized from Edwards County in 1841. Among the early pioneers may be mentioned the Evans brothers, Thaddeus Morehouse, Hugh Calhoun and son, Thomas Gardner, James Parker, Cornelius De Long, James Gilmore and Elijah Nelson. In 1820 there were but thirty families in the district. The first frame houses—the Nelson and Morehouse homesteads—were built in 1821, and, some years later, James Laws erected the first brick house. The pioneers traded at Vincennes, but, in 1825, a store was opened at Stringtown by Jacob May; and the same year the first school was opened at Watertown, taught by Isaac Chauncey. The first church was erected by the Baptists in 1822, and services were conducted by William Martin, a Kentuckian. For a long time the mails were carried on horseback by Louis and James Beard, but, in 1824, Mills and Whetsell established a line of four-horse stages. The principal road, known as the "trace road," leading from Louisville to Cahokia, followed a buffalo and Indian trail about where the main street of Olney now is. Olney was selected as the county-seat upon the organization of the county, and a Mr. Lilly built the first house there. The chief branches of industry followed by the inhabitants are agriculture and fruit-growing. Population (1880), 15,545; (1890), 15,019; (1900), 16,391.

RIDGE FARM, a village of Vermillion County, at junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 174 miles northeast of St. Louis; has electric light plant, planing mill, elevators, bank and two papers. Pop. (1900), 933; (1904), 1,300.

RIDGELY, a manufacturing and mining suburb of the city of Springfield. An extensive rolling mill is located there, and there are several coal-shafts in the vicinity. Population (1900), 1,169.

RIDGELY, Charles, manufacturer and capitalist, born in Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1836; was educated in private schools and at Illinois College; after leaving college spent some time as a clerk in his father's bank at Springfield, finally becoming a member of the firm and successively Cashier and Vice-President. In 1870 he was Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but later has affiliated with the Republican party. About 1872 he became identified with the Springfield Iron Company, of which he has been President for many years; has also been President of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis and, for some time, was a Director of the Wabash Railroad. Mr. Ridgely is also one of the Trustees of Illinois College.

RIDGELY, Nicholas H., early banker, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 27, 1800; after leaving school was engaged, for a time, in the dry-goods trade, but, in 1829, came to St. Louis to assume a clerkship in the branch of the United States Bank just organized there. In 1835 a branch of the State Bank of Illinois was established at Springfield, and Mr. Ridgely became its cashier, and, when it went into liquidation, was appointed one of the trustees to wind up its affairs. He subsequently became President of the Clark's Exchange Bank in that city, but this having gone into liquidation a few years later, he went into the private banking business as head of the "Ridgely Bank," which, in 1866, became the "Ridgely National Bank," one of the strongest financial institutions in the State outside of Chicago. After the collapse of the internal improvement scheme, Mr. Ridgely became one of the purchasers of the "Northern Cross Railroad" (now that part of the Wabash system extending from the Illinois river to Springfield), when it was sold by the State in 1847, paying therefor $21,100. He was also one of the Springfield bankers to tender a loan to the State at the beginning of the war in 1861. He was one of the builders and principal owner of the Springfield gas-light system. His business career was an eminently successful one, leaving an estate at his death, Jan. 31, 1888, valued at over $2,000,000.

RIDGWAY, a village of Gallatin County, on the Shawneetown Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 12 miles northwest of Shawneetown; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 523; (1900), 839; (1903, est.), 1,000.

RIDGWAY, Thomas S., merchant, banker and politician, was born at Carmi, Ill., August 30, 1826. His father having died when he was but 4 years old and his mother when he was 14, his education was largely acquired through contact with the world, apart from such as he received from his mother and during a year's attendance at a private school. When he was 6 years of age the family removed to Shawneetown, where he ever afterwards made his home. In 1845 he embarked in business as a merchant, and the firm of Peeples & Ridgway soon became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois. In 1865 the partners closed out their business and organized the first National Bank of Shawneetown, of which, after the death of Mr. Peeples in 1875, Mr. Ridgway was President. He was one of the projectors of the Springfield & Illinois South-eastern Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and, from 1867 to 1874, served as its President. He was an ardent and active Republican, and served as a delegate to every State and National Convention of his party from 1868 to 1896. In 1874 he was elected State Treasurer, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction on the same ticket being defeated. In 1876 and 1880 he was an unsuccessful candidate for his party's nomination for Governor. Three times he consented to lead the forlorn hope of the Republicans as a candidate for Congress from an impregnable Democratic stronghold. For several years he was a Director of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, and, for nineteen years, was a Trustee of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, resigning in 1893. Died, at Shawneetown, Nov. 17, 1897.

RIGGS, James M., ex-Congressman, was born in Scott County, Ill., April 17, 1839, where he received a common school education, supplemented by a partial collegiate course. He is a practicing lawyer of Winchester. In 1864 he was elected Sheriff, serving two years. In 1871-72 he represented Scott County in the lower house of the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, and was State's Attorney from 1872 to 1876. In 1882, and again in 1884, he was the successful Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Illinois District.

RIGGS, Scott, pioneer, was born in North Carolina about 1790; removed to Crawford County, Ill. early in 1815, and represented that county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). In 1825 he removed to Scott County, where he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 24, 1872.

RINAKER, John L., lawyer and Congressman, born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1830. Left an orphan at an early age, he came to Illinois in 1836, and, for several years, lived on farms in Sangamon and Morgan Counties; was educated at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1851; in 1852 began reading law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In August, 1862, he recruited the One Hundred and Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, of which he was commissioned Colonel. Four months later he was wounded in battle, but served with his regiment through the war, and was brevetted Brigadier-General at its close. Returning from the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Carlinville. Since 1858 he has been an active Republican; has twice (1872 and '76) served his party as a Presidential Elector—the latter year for the State-at-large—and, in 1874, accepted a nomination for Congress against William R. Morrison, largely reducing the normal Democratic majority. At the State Republican Convention of 1880 he was a prominent, but unsuccessful, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1894 he made the race as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixteenth District and, although his opponent was awarded the certificate of election, on a bare majority of 60 votes on the face of the returns, a re-count, ordered by the Fifty-fourth Congress, showed a majority for General Rinaker, and he was seated near the close of the first session. He was a candidate for re-election in 1896, but defeated in a strongly Democratic District.

RIPLEY, Edward Payson, Railway President, was born in Dorchester (now a part of Boston), Mass., Oct. 30, 1845, being related, on his mother's side, to the distinguished author, Dr. Edward Payson. After receiving his education in the high school of his native place, at the age of 17 he entered upon a commercial life, as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Boston. About the time he became of age, he entered into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a clerk in the freight department in the Boston office, but a few years later, assumed a responsible position in connection with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line, finally becoming General Agent for the business of that road east of Buffalo, though retaining his headquarters at Boston. In 1878 he removed to Chicago to accept the position of General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, with which he remained twelve years, serving successively as General Traffic Manager and General Manager, until June 1, 1890, when he resigned to become Third Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line. This relation was continued until Jan. 1, 1896, when Mr. Ripley accepted the Presidency of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which (1899) he now holds. Mr. Ripley was a prominent factor in securing the location of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and, in April, 1891, was chosen one of the Directors of the Exposition, serving on the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ways and Means and Transportation, being Chairman of the latter.

RIVERSIDE, a suburban town on the Des Plaines River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 11 miles west of Chicago; has handsome parks, several churches, a bank, two local papers and numerous fine residences. Population (1890), 1,000; (1900), 1,551.

RIVERTON, a village in Clear Creek Township, Sangamon County, at the crossing of the Wabash Railroad over the Sangamon River, 6½ miles east-northeast of Springfield. It has four churches, a nursery, and two coal mines. Population (1880), 705; (1890), 1,127, (1900), 1,511; (1903, est.), about 2,000.

RIVES, John Cook, early banker and journalist, was born in Franklin County, Va., May 24, 1795; in 1806 removed to Kentucky, where he grew up under care of an uncle, Samuel Casey. He received a good education and was a man of high character and attractive manners. In his early manhood he came to Illinois, and was connected, for a time, with the Branch State Bank at Edwardsville, but, about 1824, removed to Shawneetown and held a position in the bank there; also studied law and was admitted to practice. Finally, having accepted a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's Office in Washington, he removed to that city, and, in 1830, became associated with Francis P. Blair, Sr., in the establishment of "The Congressional Globe" (the predecessor of "The Congressional Record"), of which he finally became sole proprietor, so remaining until 1864. Like his partner, Blair, although a native of Virginia and a life-long Democrat, he was intensely loyal, and contributed liberally of his means for the equipment of soldiers from the District of Columbia, and for the support of their families, during the Civil War. His expenditures for these objects have been estimated at some $30,000. Died, in Prince George's County, Md., April 10, 1864.

ROANOKE, a village of Woodford County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 26 miles northeast of Peoria; is in a coal district; has two banks, a coal mine, and one newspaper. Population (1880), 355; (1890), 831; (1900), 966.

ROBB, Thomas Patten, Sanitary Agent, was born in Bath, Maine, in 1819; came to Cook County, Ill., in 1838, and, after arriving at manhood, established the first exclusive wholesale grocery house in Chicago, remaining in the business until 1850. He then went to California, establishing himself in mercantile business at Sacramento, where he remained seven years, meanwhile being elected Mayor of that city. Returning to Chicago on the breaking out of the war, he was appointed on the staff of Governor Yates with the rank of Major, and, while serving in this capacity, was instrumental in giving General Grant the first duty he performed in the office of the Adjutant-General after his arrival from Galena. Later, he was assigned to duty as Inspector-General of Illinois troops with the rank of Colonel, having general charge of sanitary affairs until the close of the war, when he was appointed Cotton Agent for the State of Georgia, and, still later, President of the Board of Tax Commissioners for that State. Other positions held by him were those of Postmaster and Collector of Customs at Savannah, Ga.; he was also one of the publishers of "The New Era," a Republican paper at Atlanta, and a prominent actor in reconstruction affairs. Resigning the Collectorship, he was appointed by the President United States Commissioner to investigate Mexican outrages on the Rio Grande border; was subsequently identified with Texas railroad interests as the President of the Corpus Christi & Rio Grande Railroad, and one of the projectors of the Chicago, Texas & Mexican Central Railway, being thus engaged until 1872. Later he returned to California, dying near Glenwood, in that State, April 10, 1895, aged 75 years and 10 months.

ROBERTS, William Charles, clergyman and educator, was born in a small village of Wales, England., Sept. 23, 1832; received his primary education in that country, but, removing to America during his minority, graduated from Princeton College in 1855, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858. After filling various pastorates in Delaware, New Jersey and Ohio, in 1881 he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the next year being offered the Presidency of Rutgers College, which he declined. In 1887 he accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University, which he still retains. From 1859 to 1863 he was a Trustee of Lafayette College, and, in 1866, was elected to a trusteeship of his Alma Mater. He has traveled extensively in the Orient, and was a member of the first and third councils of the Reformed Churches, held at Edinburgh and Belfast. Besides occasional sermons and frequent contributions to English, American, German and Welsh periodicals, Dr. Roberts has published a Welsh translation of the Westminster shorter catechism and a collection of letters on the great preachers of Wales, which appeared in Utica, 1868. He received the degree of D.D., from Union College in 1872, and that of LL.D., from Princeton, in 1887.

ROBINSON, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Crawford County, 25 miles northwest of Vincennes, Ind., and 44 miles south of Paris, Ill.; is on two lines of railroad and in the heart of a fruit and agricultural region. The city has water-works, electric lights, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Population (1890) 1,387; (1900), 1,683; (1904), about 2,000.

ROBINSON, James C., lawyer and former Congressman, was born in Edgar County, Ill., in 1822, read law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. He served as a private during the Mexican War, and, in 1858, was elected to Congress as a Democrat, as he was again in 1860, '62, '70 and '72. In 1864 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. He was a fluent speaker, and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in criminal practice. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 3, 1886.

ROBINSON, John M., United States Senator, born in Kentucky in 1793, was liberally educated and became a lawyer by profession. In early life he settled at Carmi, Ill., where he married. He was of fine physique, of engaging manners, and personally popular. Through his association with the State militia he earned the title of "General." In 1830 he was elected to the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of John McLean. His immediate predecessor was David Jewett Baker, appointed by Governor Edwards, who served one month but failed of election by the Legislature. In 1834 Mr. Robinson was re-elected for a full term, which expired in 1841. In 1843 he was elected to a seat upon the Illinois Supreme bench, but died at Ottawa, April 27, of the same year, within three months after his elevation.

ROCHELLE, a city of Ogle County and an intersecting point of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways. It is 75 miles west of Chicago, 27 miles south of Rockford, and 23 miles east by north of Dixon. It is in a rich agricultural and stock-raising region, rendering Rochelle an important shipping point. Among its industrial establishments are water-works, electric lights, a flouring mill and silk-underwear factory. The city has three banks, five churches and three newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,789; (1900), 2,073; (1903), 2,500.

ROCHESTER, a village and early settlement in Sangamon County, laid out in 1819; in rich agricultural district, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 7½ miles southeast of Springfield; has a bank, two churches, one school, and a newspaper. Population (1900) 365.

ROCK FALLS, a city in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; has excellent water-power, a good public school system with a high school, banks and a weekly newspaper. Agricultural implements, barbed wire, furniture, flour and paper are its chief manufactures. Water for the navigable feeder of the Hennepin Canal is taken from Rock River at this point. Pop. (1900), 2,176.

ROCKFORD, a flourishing manufacturing city, the county-seat of Winnebago County; lies on both sides of the Rock River, 92 miles west of Chicago. Four trunk lines of railroad—the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—intersect here. Excellent water-power is secured by a dam across the river, and communication between the two divisions of the city is facilitated by three railway and three highway bridges. Water is provided from five artesian wells, a reserve main leading to the river. The city is wealthy, prosperous and progressive. The assessed valuation of property, in 1893, was $6,531,335. Churches are numerous and schools, both public and private, are abundant and well conducted. The census of 1890 showed $7,715,069 capital invested in 246 manufacturing establishments, which employed 5,223 persons and turned out an annual product valued at $8,888,904. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements and furniture, though watches, silver-plated ware, paper, flour and grape sugar are among the other products. Pop. (1880), 13,129; (1890), 23,584; (1900), 31,051.

ROCKFORD COLLEGE, located at Rockford, Ill., incorporated in 1847; in 1898 had a faculty of 21 instructors with 161 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, music and fine arts. It has a library of 6,150 volumes, funds and endowment aggregating $50,880 and property valued at $240,880, of which $150,000 is real estate.

ROCK ISLAND, the principal city and county-seat of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River, 182 miles west by south from Chicago; is the converging point of five lines of railroad, and the western terminus of the Hennepin Canal. The name is derived from an island in the Mississippi River, opposite the city, 3 miles long, which belongs to the United States Government and contains an arsenal and armory. The river channel north of the island is navigable, the southern channel having been dammed by the Government, thereby giving great water power to Rock Island and Moline. A combined railway and highway bridge spans the river from Rock Island to Davenport, Iowa, crossing the island, while a railway bridge connects the cities a mile below. The island was the site of Fort Armstrong during the Black Hawk War, and was also a place for the confinement of Confederate prisoners during the Civil War. Rock Island is in a region of much picturesque scenery and has extensive manufactures of lumber, agricultural implements, iron, carriages and wagons and oilcloth; also five banks and three newspapers, two issuing daily editions. Pop. (1890), 13,654; (1900), 19,493.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, in the northwestern section of the State bordering upon the Mississippi River (which constitutes its northwestern boundary for more than 60 miles), and having an area of 440 square miles. In 1816 the Government erected a fort on Rock Island (an island in the Mississippi, 3 miles long and one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide), naming it Fort Armstrong. It has always remained a military post, and is now the seat of an extensive arsenal and work-shops. In the spring of 1828, settlements were made near Port Byron by John and Thomas Kinney, Archibald Allen and George Harlan. Other early settlers, near Rock Island and Rapids City, were J. W. Spencer, J. W. Barriels, Benjamin F. Pike and Conrad Leak; and among the pioneers were Wells and Michael Bartlett, Joel Thompson, the Simms brothers and George Davenport. The country was full of Indians, this being the headquarters of Black Hawk and the initial point of the Black Hawk War. (See Black Hawk, and Black Hawk War.) By 1829 settlers were increased in number and county organization was effected in 1835, Rock Island (then called Stephenson) being made the county-seat. Joseph Conway was the first County Clerk, and Joel Wells, Sr., the first Treasurer. The first court was held at the residence of John W. Barriels, in Farnhamsburg. The county is irregular in shape, and the soil and scenery greatly varied. Coal is abundant, the water-power inexhaustible, and the county's mining and manufacturing interests are very extensive. Several lines of railway cross the county, affording admirable transportation facilities to both eastern and western markets. Rock Island and Moline (which see) are the two principal cities in the county, though there are several other important points. Coal Valley is the center of large mining interests, and Milan is also a manufacturing center. Port Byron is one of the oldest towns in the county, and has considerable lime and lumber interests, while Watertown is the seat of the Western Hospital for the Insane. Population of the county (1880), 38,302; (1890), 41,917; (1900), 55,249.

ROCK ISLAND & PEORIA RAILWAY, a standard-gauge road, laid with steel rails, extending from Rock Island to Peoria, 91 miles. It is lessee of the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, running from Milan to Cable, Ill., giving it a total length of 118 miles—with Peoria Terminal, 121.10 miles.—(HISTORY.) The company is a reorganization (Oct. 9, 1877) of the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company, whose road was sold under foreclosure, April 4, 1877. The latter Road was the result of the consolidation, in 1869, of two corporations—the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Companies—the new organization taking the latter name. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1872, its sale under foreclosure and reorganization under its present name taking place, as already stated, in 1877. The Cable Branch was organized in 1876, as the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, and opened in December of the same year, sold under foreclosure in 1877, and leased to the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, July 1, 1885, for 999 years, the rental for the entire period being commuted at $450,000.—(FINANCIAL.) The cost of the entire road and equipment was $2,654,487. The capital stock (1898) is $1,500,000; funded debt, $600,000; other forms of indebtedness increasing the total capital invested to $2,181,066.

ROCK RIVER, a stream which rises in Washington County, Wis., and flows generally in a southerly direction, a part of its course being very sinuous. After crossing the northern boundary of Illinois, it runs southwestward, intersecting the counties of Winnebago, Ogle, Lee, Whiteside and Rock Island, and entering the Mississippi three miles below the city of Rock Island. It is about 375 miles long, but its navigation is partly obstructed by rapids, which, however, furnish abundant water-power. The principal towns on its banks are Rockford, Dixon and Sterling. Its valley is wide, and noted for its beauty and fertility.

ROCKTON, a village in Winnebago County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, on Rock River, 13 miles north of Rockford; has manufactures of paper and agricultural implements, a feed mill, and local paper. Pop. (1890), 892; (1900), 936.

ROE, Edward Reynolds, A.B., M.D., physician, soldier and author, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, June 22, 1813; removed with his father, in 1819, to Cincinnati, and graduated at Louisville Medical Institute in 1842; began practice at Anderson, Ind., but soon removed to Shawneetown, Ill., where he gave much attention to geological research and made some extensive natural history collections. From 1848 to '52 he resided at Jacksonville, lectured extensively on his favorite science, wrote for the press and, for two years (1850-52), edited "The Jacksonville Journal," still later editing the newly established "Constitutionalist" for a few months. During a part of this period he was lecturer on natural science at Shurtleff College; also delivered a lecture before the State Legislature on the geology of Illinois, which was immediately followed by the passage of the act establishing the State Geological Department. A majority of both houses joined in a request for his appointment as State Geologist, but it was rejected on partisan grounds—he, then, being a Whig. Removing to Bloomington in 1852, Dr. Roe became prominent in educational matters, being the first Professor of Natural Science in the State Normal University, and also a Trustee of the Illinois Wesleyan University. Having identified himself with the Democratic party at this time, he became its nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1860, but, on the inception of the war in 1861, he promptly espoused the cause of the Union, raised three companies (mostly Normal students) which were attached to the Thirty-third Illinois (Normal) Regiment; was elected Captain and successively promoted to Major and Lieutenant-Colonel. Having been dangerously wounded in the assault at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863, and compelled to return home, he was elected Circuit Clerk by the combined vote of both parties, was re-elected four years later, became editor of "The Bloomington Pantagraph" and, in 1870, was elected to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, where he won distinction by a somewhat notable humorous speech in opposition to removing the State Capital to Peoria. In 1871 he was appointed Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving nine years. Dr. Roe was a somewhat prolific author, having produced more than a dozen works which have appeared in book form. One of these, "Virginia Rose; a Tale of Illinois in Early Days," first appeared as a prize serial in "The Alton Courier" in 1852. Others of his more noteworthy productions are: "The Gray and the Blue"; "Brought to Bay"; "From the Beaten Path"; "G. A. R.; or How She Married His Double"; "Dr. Caldwell; or the Trail of the Serpent"; and "Prairie-Land and Other Poems." He died in Chicago, Nov. 6, 1893.

ROGERS, George Clarke, soldier, was born in Grafton County, N. H., Nov. 22, 1838; but was educated in Vermont and Illinois, having removed to the latter State early in life. While teaching he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1860; was the first, in 1861, to raise a company in Lake County for the war, which was mustered into the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers; was chosen Second-Lieutenant and later Captain; was wounded four times at Shiloh, but refused to leave the field, and led his regiment in the final charge; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and soon after commissioned Colonel for gallantry at Hatchie. At Champion Hills he received three wounds, from one of which he never fully recovered; took a prominent part in the operations at Allatoona and commanded a brigade nearly two years, including the Atlanta campaign, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. Since the war has practiced law in Illinois and in Kansas.

ROGERS, Henry Wade, educator, lawyer and author, was born in Central New York in 1853; entered Hamilton College, but the following year became a student in Michigan University, graduating there in 1874, also receiving the degree of A.M., from the same institution, in 1877. In 1883 he was elected to a professorship in the Ann Arbor Law School, and, in 1885, was made Dean of the Faculty, succeeding Judge Cooley, at the age of 32. Five years later he was tendered, and accepted, the Presidency of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, being the first layman chosen to the position, and succeeding a long line of Bishops and divines. The same year (1890), Wesleyan University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is a member of the American Bar Association, has served for a number of years on its Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, and was the first Chairman of the Section on Legal Education. President Rogers was the General Chairman of the Conference on the Future Foreign Policy of the United States, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in August, 1898. At the Congress held in 1893, as auxiliary to the Columbian Exposition, he was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Jurisprudence, and was for a time associate editor of "The American Law Register," of Philadelphia. He is also the author of a treatise on "Expert Testimony," which has passed through two editions, and has edited a work entitled "Illinois Citations," besides doing much other valuable literary work of a similar character.

ROGERS, John Gorin, jurist, was born at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 28, 1818, of English and early Virginian ancestry; was educated at Center College, Danville, Ky., and at Transylvania University, graduating from the latter institution in 1841, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. For sixteen years he practiced in his native town, and, in 1857, removed to Chicago, where he soon attained professional prominence. In 1870 he was elected a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court, continuing on the bench, through repeated re-elections, until his death, which occurred suddenly, Jan. 10, 1887, four years before the expiration of the term for which he had been elected.

ROGERS PARK, a village and suburb 9 miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan and the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; has a bank and two weekly newspapers; is reached by electric street-car line from Chicago, and is a popular residence suburb. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1893.

ROLL, John E., pioneer, was born in Green Village, N. J., June 4, 1814; came to Illinois in 1830, and settled in Sangamon County. He assisted Abraham Lincoln in the construction of the flat-boat with which the latter descended the Mississippi River to New Orleans, in 1831. Mr. Roll, who was a mechanic and contractor, built a number of houses in Springfield, where he has since continued to reside.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The earliest Christians to establish places of worship in Illinois were priests of the Catholic faith. Early Catholic missionaries were explorers and historians as well as preachers. (See Allouez; Bergier; Early Missionaries; Gravier; Marquette.) The church went hand in hand with the representatives of the French Government, carrying in one hand the cross and in the other the flag of France, simultaneously disseminating the doctrines of Christianity and inculcating loyalty to the House of Bourbon. For nearly a hundred years, the self-sacrificing and devoted Catholic clergy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries ministered to the spiritual wants of the early French settlers and the natives. They were not without factional jealousies, however, and a severe blow was dealt to a branch of them in the order for the banishment of the Jesuits and the confiscation of their property. (See Early Missionaries.) The subsequent occupation of the country by the English, with the contemporaneous emigration of a considerable portion of the French west of the Mississippi, dissipated many congregations. Up to 1830 Illinois was included in the diocese of Missouri; but at that time it was constituted a separate diocese, under the episcopal control of Rt. Rev. Joseph Rosatti. At that date there were few, if any, priests in Illinois. But Bishop Rosatti was a man of earnest purpose and rare administrative ability. New parishes were organized as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and the growth of the church has been steady. By 1840 there were thirty-one parishes and twenty priests. In 1896 there are reported 698 parishes, 764 clergymen and a Catholic population exceeding 850,000. (See also Religious Denominations.)

ROODHOUSE, a city in Greene County, 21 miles south of Jacksonville, and at junction of three divisions of the Chicago & Alton Railroad; is in fertile agricultural and coal-mining region; city contains a flouring mill, grain-elevator, stock-yards, railway shops, water-works, electric light plant, two private banks, fine opera house, good school buildings, one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,360; (1900), 2,351.

ROODHOUSE, John, farmer and founder of the town of Roodhouse, in Greene County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, brought to America in childhood, his father settling in Greene County, Ill., in 1831. In his early manhood he opened a farm in Tazewell County, but finally returned to the paternal home in Greene County, where, on the location of the Jacksonville Division of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, he laid out the town of Roodhouse, at the junction of the Louisiana and Kansas City branch with the main line.

ROOT, George Frederick, musical composer and author, was born at Sheffield, Mass., August 30, 1820. He was a natural musician, and, while employed on his father's farm, learned to play on various instruments. In 1838 he removed to Boston, where he began his life-work. Besides teaching music in the public schools, he was employed to direct the musical service in two churches. From Boston he removed to New York, and, in 1850, went to Paris for purposes of musical study. In 1853 he made his first public essay as a composer in the song, "Hazel Dell," which became popular at once. From this time forward his success as a song-writer was assured. His music, while not of a high artistic character, captivated the popular ear and appealed strongly to the heart. In 1860 he took up his residence in Chicago, where he conducted a musical journal and wrote those "war songs" which created and perpetuated his fame. Among the best known are "Rally Round the Flag"; "Just Before the Battle, Mother"; and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." Other popular songs by him are "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower"; "A Hundred Years Ago"; and "The Old Folks are Gone." Besides songs he composed several cantatas and much sacred music, also publishing many books of instruction and numerous collections of vocal and instrumental music. In 1872 the University of Chicago conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. Died, near Portland, Maine, August 6, 1895.

ROOTS, Benajah Guernsey, civil engineer, and educator, was born in Onondaga County N. Y., April 20, 1811, and educated in the schools and academies of Central New York; began teaching in 1827, and, after spending a year at sea for the benefit of his health, took a course in law and civil engineering. He was employed as a civil engineer on the Western Railroad of Massachusetts until 1838, when he came to Illinois and obtained employment on the railroad projected from Alton to Shawneetown, under the "internal improvement system" of 1837. When that was suspended in 1839, he settled on a farm near the present site of Tamaroa, Perry County, and soon after opened a boarding school, continuing its management until 1846, when he became Principal of a seminary at Sparta. In 1851 he went into the service of the Illinois Central Railroad, first as resident engineer in charge of surveys and construction, later as land agent and attorney. He was prominent in the introduction of the graded school system in Illinois and in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington and the University of Illinois at Champaign; was a member of the State Board of Education from its organization, and served as delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1868. Died, at his home in Perry County, Ill., May 9, 1888.—Philander Keep (Roots), son of the preceding, born in Tolland County, Conn., June 4, 1838, brought to Illinois the same year and educated in his father's school, and in an academy at Carrollton and the Wesleyan University at Bloomington; at the age of 17 belonged to a corps of engineers employed on a Southern railroad, and, during the war, served as a civil engineer in the construction and repair of military roads. Later, he was Deputy Surveyor-General of Nebraska; in 1871 became Chief Engineer on the Cairo & Fulton (now a part of the Iron Mountain) Railway; then engaged in the banking business in Arkansas, first as cashier of a bank at Fort Smith and afterwards of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, of which his brother, Logan H., was President.—Logan H. (Roots), another son, born near Tamaroa, Perry County, Ill., March 22, 1841, was educated at home and at the State Normal at Bloomington, meanwhile serving as principal of a high school at Duquoin; in 1862 enlisted in the Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, serving through the war and acting as Chief Commissary for General Sherman on the "March to the Sea," and participating in the great review in Washington, in May, 1865. After the conclusion of the war he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Arkansas District, was elected from that State to the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses (1868 and 1870)—being, at the time, the youngest member in that body—and was appointed United States Marshal by President Grant. He finally became President of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, with which he remained nearly twenty years. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the brain, May 30, 1893, leaving an estate valued at nearly one and a half millions, of which he gave a large share to charitable purposes and to the city of Little Rock, for the benefit of its hospitals and the improvement of its parks.

ROSE, James A., Secretary of State, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Oct. 13, 1850. The foundation of his education was secured in the public schools of his native place, and, after a term in the Normal University at Normal, Ill., at the age of 18 he took charge of a country school. Soon he was chosen Principal of the Golconda graded schools, was later made County Superintendent of Schools, and re-elected for a second term. During his second term he was admitted to the bar, and, resigning the office of Superintendent, was elected State's Attorney without opposition, being re-elected for another term. In 1889, by appointment of Governor Fifer, he became one of the Trustees of the Pontiac Reformatory, serving until the next year, when he was transferred to the Board of Commissioners of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, which position he continued to occupy until 1893. In 1896 he was elected Secretary of State on the Republican ticket, his term extending to January, 1901.

ROSEVILLE, a village in Warren County, on the Rock Island Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 17 miles northwest of Bushnell; has water and electric-light plants, two banks, public library and one newspaper. Region agricultural and coal-mining. Pop. (1900), 1,014.

ROSS, Leonard Fulton, soldier, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 18, 1823; was educated in the common schools and at Illinois College, Jacksonville, studied law and admitted to the bar in 1845; the following year enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, became First Lieutenant and was commended for services at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for General Taylor. After the war he served six years as Probate Judge. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the war for the Union, and was chosen Colonel of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers, serving with it in Missouri and Kentucky; was commissioned Brigadier-General a few weeks after the capture of Fort Donelson, and, after the evacuation of Corinth, was assigned to the command of a division with headquarters at Bolivar, Tenn. He resigned in July, 1863, and, in 1867, was appointed by President Johnson Collector of Internal Revenue for the Ninth District; has been three times a delegate to National Republican Conventions and twice defeated as a candidate for Congress in a Democratic District. Since the war he has devoted his attention largely to stock-raising, having a large stock-farm in Iowa. In his later years was President of a bank at Lewistown, Ill. Died Jan. 17, 1901.

ROSS, (Col.) William, pioneer, was born at Monson, Hampden County, Mass., April 24, 1792; removed with his father's family, in 1805, to Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained until his twentieth year, when he was commissioned an Ensign in the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, serving through the War of 1812-14, and participating in the battle of Sackett's Harbor. During the latter part of his service he acted as drill-master at various points. Then, returning to Pittsfield, he carried on the business of blacksmithing as an employer, meanwhile filling some local offices. In 1820, a company consisting of himself and four brothers, with their families and a few others, started for the West, intending to settle in Illinois. Reaching the head-waters of the Allegheny overland, they transferred their wagons, teams and other property to flat-boats, descending that stream and the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill. Here they disembarked and, crossing the State, reached Upper Alton, where they found only one house, that of Maj. Charles W. Hunter. Leaving their families at Upper Alton, the brothers proceeded north, crossing the Illinois River near its mouth, until they reached a point in the western part of the present county of Pike, where the town of Atlas was afterwards located. Here they erected four rough log-cabins, on a beautiful prairie not far from the Mississippi, removing their families thither a few weeks later. They suffered the usual privations incident to life in a new country, not excepting sickness and death of some of their number. At the next session of the Legislature (1820-21) Pike County was established, embracing all that part of the State west and north of the Illinois, and including the present cities of Galena and Chicago. The Ross settlement became the nucleus of the town of Atlas, laid out by Colonel Ross and his associates in 1823, at an early day the rival of Quincy, and becoming the second county-seat of Pike County, so remaining from 1824 to 1833, when the seat of justice was removed to Pittsfield. During this period Colonel Ross was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, holding, simultaneously or successively, the offices of Probate Judge, Circuit and County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, and others of a subordinate character. As Colonel of Militia, in 1832, he was ordered by Governor Reynolds to raise a company for the Black Hawk War, and, in four days, reported at Beardstown with twice the number of men called for. In 1834 he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, also serving in the Senate during the three following sessions, a part of the time as President pro tem. of the last-named body. While in the General Assembly he was instrumental in securing legislation of great importance relating to Military Tract lands. The year following the establishment of the county-seat at Pittsfield (1834) he became a citizen of that place, which he had the privilege of naming for his early home. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1860, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President the first time. Beginning life poor he acquired considerable property; was liberal, public-spirited and patriotic, making a handsome donation to the first company organized in Pike County, for the suppression of the Rebellion. Died, at Pittsfield, May 31, 1873.

ROSSVILLE, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, 19 miles north of Danville; has electric-light plant, water-works, tile and brick-works, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 879; (1900), 1,435.

ROUNDS, Sterling Parker, public printer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., June 27, 1828; about 1840 began learning the printer's trade at Kenosha, Wis., and, in 1845, was foreman of the State printing office at Madison, afterward working in offices in Milwaukee, Racine and Buffalo, going to Chicago in 1851. Here he finally established a printer's warehouse, to which he later added an electrotype foundry and the manufacture of presses, also commencing the issue of "Round's Printers' Cabinet," a trade-paper, which was continued during his life. In 1881 he was appointed by President Garfield Public Printer at Washington, serving until 1885, when he removed to Omaha, Neb., and was identified with "The Republican," of that city, until his death, Dec. 17, 1887.

ROUNTREE, Hiram, County Judge, born in Rutherford County, N. C., Dec. 22, 1794; was brought to Kentucky in infancy, where he grew to manhood and served as an Ensign in the War of 1812 under General Shelby. In 1817 he removed to Illinois Territory, first locating in Madison County, where he taught school for two years near Edwardsville, but removed to Fayette County about the time of the removal of the State capital to Vandalia. On the organization of Montgomery County, in 1821, he was appointed to office there and ever afterwards resided at Hillsboro. For a number of years in the early history of the county, he held (at the same time) the offices of Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, County Recorder, Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, Master in Chancery and Judge of Probate, besides that of Postmaster for the town of Hillsboro. In 1826 he was elected Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk of the Senate and re-elected in 1830; served as Delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year was elected to the State Senate, serving in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth General Assemblies. On retiring from the Senate (1852), he was elected County Judge without opposition, was re-elected to the same office in 1861, and again, in 1865, as the nominee of the Republicans. Judge Rountree was noted for his sound judgment and sterling integrity. Died, at Hillsboro, March 4, 1873.

ROUTT, John L., soldier and Governor, was born at Eddyville, Ky., April 25, 1826, brought to Illinois in infancy and educated in the common schools. Soon after coming of age he was elected and served one term as Sheriff of McLean County; in 1862 enlisted and became Captain of Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteers. After the war he engaged in business in Bloomington, and was appointed by President Grant, successively, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, Second Assistant Postmaster-General and Territorial Governor of Colorado. On the admission of Colorado as a State, he was elected the first Governor under the State Government, and re-elected in 1890—serving, in all, three years. His home is in Denver. He has been extensively and successfully identified with mining enterprises in Colorado.

ROWELL, Jonathan H., ex-Congressman, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 10, 1833. He is a graduate of Eureka College and of the Law Department of the Chicago University. During the War of the Rebellion he served three years as company officer in the Seventeenth Illinois Infantry. In 1868 he was elected State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1880, was a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. In 1882 he was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth Illinois District and three times re-elected, serving until March, 1891. His home is at Bloomington.

ROWETT, Richard, soldier, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1830, came to the United States in 1851, finally settling on a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and becoming a breeder of thorough-bred horses. In 1861 he entered the service as a Captain in the Seventh Illinois Volunteers and was successively promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Allatoona, especially distinguishing himself at the latter and being brevetted Brigadier-General for gallantry. After the war he returned to his stock-farm, but later held the positions of Canal Commissioner, Penitentiary Commissioner, Representative in the Thirtieth General Assembly and Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth (Quincy) District, until its consolidation with the Eighth District by President Cleveland. Died, in Chicago, July 13, 1887.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, located in Chicago; incorporated by act of March 2, 1837, the charter having been prepared the previous year by Drs. Daniel Brainard and Josiah C. Goodhue. The extreme financial depression of the following year prevented the organization of a faculty until 1843. The institution was named in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, the eminent practitioner, medical author and teacher of Philadelphia in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first faculty consisted of four professors, and the first term opened on Dec. 4, 1843, with a class of twenty-two students. Three years' study was required for graduation, but only two annual terms of sixteen weeks each need be attended at the college itself. Instruction was given in a few rooms temporarily opened for that purpose. The next year a small building, costing between $3,000 and $4,000, was erected. This was rearranged and enlarged in 1855 at a cost of $15,000. The constant and rapid growth of the college necessitated the erection of a new building in 1867, the cost of which was $70,000. This was destroyed in the fire of 1871, and another, costing $54,000, was erected in 1876 and a free dispensary added. In 1844 the Presbyterian Hospital was located on a portion of the college lot, and the two institutions connected, thus insuring abundant and stable facilities for clinical instruction. Shortly afterwards, Rush College became the medical department of Lake Forest University. The present faculty (1898) consists of 95 professors, adjunct professors, lecturers and instructors of all grades, and over 600 students in attendance. The length of the annual terms is six months, and four years of study are required for graduation, attendance upon at least three college terms being compulsory.

RUSHVILLE, the county-seat of Schuyler County, 50 miles northeast of Quincy and 11 miles northwest of Beardstown; is the southern terminus of the Buda and Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. The town was selected as the county-seat in 1826, the seat of justice being removed from a place called Beardstown, about five miles eastward (not the present Beardstown in Cass County), where it had been located at the time of the organization of Schuyler County, a year previous. At first the new seat of justice was called Rush-ton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but afterwards took its present name. It is a coal-mining, grain and fruit-growing region, and contains several manufactories, including flour-mills, brick and tile works; also has two banks (State and private) and a public library. Four periodicals (one daily) are published here. Population (1880), 1,662; (1890), 2,031; (1900), 2,292.

RUSSELL, John, pioneer teacher and author, was born at Cavendish, Vt., July 31, 1793, and educated in the common schools of his native State and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1818—having obtained means to support himself, during his college course, by teaching and by the publication, before he had reached his 20th year, of a volume entitled "The Authentic History of Vermont State Prison." After graduation he taught for a short time in Georgia; but, early in the following year, joined his father on the way to Missouri. The next five years he spent in teaching in the "Bonhomme Bottom" on the Missouri River. During this period he published, anonymously, in "The St. Charles Missourian," a temperance allegory entitled "The Venomous Worm" (or "The Worm of the Still"), which gained a wide popularity and was early recognized by the compilers of school-readers as a sort of classic. Leaving this locality he taught a year in St. Louis, when he removed to Vandalia (then the capital of Illinois), after which he spent two years teaching in the Seminary at Upper Alton, which afterwards became Shurtleff College. In 1828 he removed to Greene County, locating at a point near the Illinois River to which he gave the name of Bluffdale. Here he was licensed as a Baptist preacher, officiating in this capacity only occasionally, while pursuing his calling as a teacher or writer for the press, to which he was an almost constant contributor during the last twenty-five years of his life. About 1837 or 1838 he was editor of a paper called "The Backwoodsman" at Grafton—then a part of Greene County, but now in Jersey County—to which he afterwards continued to be a contributor some time longer, and, in 1841-42, was editor of "The Advertiser," at Louisville, Ky. He was also, for several years, Principal of the Spring Hill Academy in East Feliciana Parish, La., meanwhile serving for a portion of the time as Superintendent of Public Schools. He was the author of a number of stories and sketches, some of which went through several editions, and, at the time of his death, had in preparation a history of "The Black Hawk War," "Evidences of Christianity" and a "History of Illinois." He was an accomplished linguist, being able to read with fluency Greek, Latin, French, Spanish and Italian, besides having considerable familiarity with several other modern languages. In 1862 he received from the University of Chicago the degree of LL.D. Died, Jan. 2, 1863, and was buried on the old homestead at Bluffdale.

RUSSELL, Martin J., politician and journalist, born in Chicago, Dec. 20, 1845. He was a nephew of Col. James A. Mulligan (see Mulligan, James A.) and served with credit as Adjutant-General on the staff of the latter in the Civil War. In 1870 he became a reporter on "The Chicago Evening Post," and was advanced to the position of city editor. Subsequently he was connected with "The Times," and "The Telegram"; was also a member of the Board of Education of Hyde Park before the annexation of that village to Chicago, and has been one of the South Park Commissioners of the city last named. After the purchase of "The Chicago Times" by Carter H. Harrison he remained for a time on the editorial staff. In 1894 President Cleveland appointed him Collector of the Port of Chicago. At the expiration of his term of office he resumed editorial work as editor-in-chief of "The Chronicle," the organ of the Democratic party in Chicago. Died June 25, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, Friend S., lawyer and soldier, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1820; studied law in Troy and removed to Illinois, settling at Edwardsville, and finally at Alton; was a Republican candidate for Presidential Elector in 1856, and, in 1860, a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency. In September, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and participated in the capture of Port Gibson and in the operations about Vicksburg—also leading in the attack on Arkansas Post, and subsequently serving in Louisiana, but died as the result of fatigue and exposure in the service, June 20, 1864, one week before his promotion to the rank of Brigadier-General.—Reuben C. (Rutherford), brother of the preceding, was born at Troy, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1823, but grew up in Vermont and New Hampshire; received a degree in law when quite young, but afterwards fitted himself as a lecturer on physiology and hygiene, upon which he lectured extensively in Michigan, Illinois and other States after coming west in 1849. During 1854-55, in co-operation with Prof. J. B. Turner and others, he canvassed and lectured extensively throughout Illinois in support of the movement which resulted in the donation of public lands, by Congress, for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States. The establishment of the University of Illinois, at Champaign, was the outgrowth of this movement. In 1856 he located at Quincy, where he resided some thirty years; in 1861, served for several months as the first Commissary of Subsistence at Cairo; was later associated with the State Quartermaster's Department, finally entering the secret service of the War Department, in which he remained until 1867, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. In 1886, General Rutherford removed to New York City, where he died, June 24, 1895.—George V. (Rutherford), another brother, was born at Rutland, Vt., 1830; was first admitted to the bar, but afterwards took charge of the construction of telegraph lines in some of the Southern States; at the beginning of the Civil War became Assistant Quartermaster-General of the State of Illinois, at Springfield, under ex-Gov. John Wood, but subsequently entered the Quartermaster's service of the General Government in Washington, retiring after the war with the rank of Brigadier-General. He then returned to Quincy, Ill., where he resided until 1872, when he engaged in manufacturing business at Northampton, Mass., but finally removed to California for the benefit of his failing health. Died, at St. Helena, Cal., August 28, 1872.

RUTLAND, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 25 miles south of La Salle; has a bank, five churches, school, and a newspaper, with coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. (1890), 509; (1900), 893; (1903), 1,093.

RUTLEDGE, (Rev.) William J., clergyman, Army Chaplain, born in Augusta County, Va., June 24, 1820; was converted at the age of 12 years and, at 21, became a member of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving various churches in the central and western parts of the State—also acting, for a time, as Agent of the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville. From 1861 to 1863 he was Chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Returning from the war, he served as pastor of churches at Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Rushville, Springfield, Griggsville and other points; from 1881 to '84 was Chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. Mr. Rutledge was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served for many years as Chaplain of the order for the Department of Illinois. In connection with the ministry, he has occupied a supernumerary relation since 1885. Died in Jacksonville, April 14, 1900.

RUTZ, Edward, State Treasurer, was born in a village in the Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 5, 1829; came to America in 1848, locating on a farm in St. Clair County, Ill.; went to California in 1857, and, early in 1861, enlisted in the Third United States Artillery at San Francisco, serving with the Army of the Potomac until his discharge in 1864, and taking part in every battle in which his command was engaged. After his return in 1865, he located in St. Clair County, and was elected County Surveyor, served three consecutive terms as County Treasurer, and was elected State Treasurer three times—1872, '76 and '80. About 1892 he removed to California, where he now resides.

RYAN, Edward G., early editor and jurist, born at Newcastle House, County Meath, Ireland, Nov. 13, 1810; was educated for the priesthood, but turned his attention to law, and, in 1830, came to New York and engaged in teaching while prosecuting his legal studies; in 1836 removed to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and was, for a time, associated in practice with Hugh T. Dickey. In April, 1840, Mr. Ryan assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in Chicago called "The Illinois Tribune," which he conducted for over a year, and which is remembered chiefly on account of its bitter assaults on Judge John Pearson of Danville, who had aroused the hostility of some members of the Chicago bar by his rulings upon the bench. About 1842 Ryan removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was, for a time, a partner of Matthew H. Carpenter (afterwards United States Senator), and was connected with a number of celebrated trials before the courts of that State, including the Barstow-Bashford case, which ended with Bashford becoming the first Republican Governor of Wisconsin. In 1874 he was appointed Chief Justice of Wisconsin, serving until his death, which occurred at Madison, Oct. 19, 1880. He was a strong partisan, and, during the Civil War, was an intense opponent of the war policy of the Government. In spite of infirmities of temper, he appears to have been a man of much learning and recognized legal ability.

RYAN, James, Roman Catholic Bishop, born in Ireland in 1848 and emigrated to America in childhood; was educated for the priesthood in Kentucky, and, after ordination, was made a professor in St. Joseph's Seminary, at Bardstown, Ky. In 1878 he removed to Illinois, attaching himself to the diocese of Peoria, and having charge of parishes at Wataga and Danville. In 1881 he became rector of the Ottawa parish, within the episcopal jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Chicago. In 1888 he was made Bishop of the see of Alton, the prior incumbent (Bishop Baltes) having died in 1886.

SACS AND FOXES, two confederated Indian tribes, who were among the most warlike and powerful of the aborigines of the Illinois Country. The Foxes called themselves the Musk-wah-ha-kee, a name compounded of two words, signifying "those of red earth." The French called them Ou-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning of which was "Foxes," and which was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it may be called) was a fox. They seem to have been driven westward from the northern shore of Lake Ontario, by way of Niagara and Mackinac, to the region around Green Bay, Wis.—Concerning their allied brethren, the Sacs, less is known. The name is variously spelled in the Indian dialects—Ou-sa-kies, Sauks, etc.—and the term Sacs is unquestionably an abbreviated corruption. Black Hawk belonged to this tribe. The Foxes and Sacs formed a confederation according to aboriginal tradition, on what is now known as the Sac River, near Green Bay, but the date of the alliance cannot be determined. The origin of the Sacs is equally uncertain. Black Hawk claimed that his tribe originally dwelt around Quebec, but, as to the authenticity of this claim, historical authorities differ widely. Subsequent to 1670 the history of the allied tribes is tolerably well defined. Their characteristics, location and habits are described at some length by Father Allouez, who visited them in 1666-67. He says that they were numerous and warlike, but depicts them as "penurious, avaricious, thievish and quarrelsome." That they were cordially detested by their neighbors is certain, and Judge James Hall calls them "the Ishmaelites of the lakes." They were unfriendly to the French, who attached to themselves other tribes, and, through the aid of the latter, had well-nigh exterminated them, when the Sacs and Foxes sued for peace, which was granted on terms most humiliating to the vanquished. By 1718, however, they were virtually in possession of the region around Rock River in Illinois, and, four years later, through the aid of the Mascoutins and Kickapoos, they had expelled the Illinois, driving the last of that ill-fated tribe across the Illinois River. They abstained from taking part in the border wars that marked the close of the Revolutionary War, and therefore did not participate in the treaty of Greenville in 1795. At that date, according to Judge Hall, they claimed the country as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, and as far north as Prairie du Chien. They offered to co-operate with the United States Government in the War of 1812, but this offer was declined, and a portion of the tribe, under the leadership of Black Hawk, enlisted on the side of the British. The Black Hawk War proved their political ruin. By the treaty of Rock Island they ceded vast tracts of land, including a large part of the eastern half of Iowa and a large body of land east of the Mississippi. (See Black Hawk War; Indian Treaties.) In 1842 the Government divided the nation into two bands, removing both to reservations in the farther West. One was located on the Osage River and the other on the south side of the Nee-ma-la River, near the northwest corner of Kansas. From these reservations, there is little doubt, many of them have silently emigrated toward the Rocky Mountains, where the hoe might be laid aside for the rifle, the net and the spear of the hunter. A few years ago a part of these confederated tribes were located in the eastern part of Oklahoma.

SAILOR SPRINGS, a village and health resort in Clay County, 5 miles north of Clay City, has an academy and a local paper. Population (1900), 419; (1903, est.), 550.

SALEM, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Marion County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Illinois Southern Railroads, 71 miles east of St. Louis, and 16 miles northeast of Centralia; in agricultural and coal district. A leading industry is the culture, evaporation and shipment of fruit. The city has flour-mills, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,493; (1900), 1,642.

SALINE COUNTY, a southeastern county, organized in 1817, having an area of 380 square miles. It derives its name from the salt springs which are found in every part of the county. The northern portion is rolling and yields an abundance of coal of a quality suitable for smithing. The bottoms are swampy, but heavily timbered, and saw-mills abound. Oak, hickory, sweet gum, mulberry, locust and sassafras are the prevailing varieties. Fruit and tobacco are extensively cultivated. The climate is mild and humid, and the vegetation varied. The soil of the low lands is rich, and, when drained, makes excellent farming lands. In some localities a good gray sandstone, soft enough to be worked, is quarried, and millstone grit is frequently found. In the southern half of the county are the Eagle Mountains, a line of hills having an altitude of some 450 to 500 feet above the level of the Mississippi at Cairo, and believed by geologists to have been a part of the upheaval that gave birth to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri and Arkansas. The highest land in the county is 864 feet above sea-level. Tradition says that these hills are rich in silver ore, but it has not been found in paying quantities. Springs strongly impregnated with sulphur are found on the slopes. The county-seat was originally located at Raleigh, which was platted in 1848, but it was subsequently removed to Harrisburg, which was laid out in 1859. Population of the county (1880), 15,940; (1890), 19,342; (1900), 21,685.

SALINE RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which flow through portions of Saline County, uniting in Gallatin County. The North Fork rises in Hamilton County and runs nearly south, while the South Fork drains part of Williamson County, and runs east through Saline. The river (which is little more than a creek), thus formed, runs southeast, entering the Ohio ten miles below Shawneetown.

SALT MANUFACTURE. There is evidence going to show that the saline springs, in Gallatin County, were utilized by the aboriginal inhabitants in the making of salt, long before the advent of white settlers. There have been discovered, at various points, what appear to be the remains of evaporating kettles, composed of hardened clay and pounded shells, varying in diameter from three to four feet. In 1812, with a view to encouraging the manufacture of salt from these springs, Congress granted to Illinois the use of 36 square miles, the fee still remaining in the United States. These lands were leased by the State to private parties, but the income derived from them was comparatively small and frequently difficult of collection. The workmen were mostly slaves from Kentucky and Tennessee, who are especially referred to in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of 1818. The salt made brought $5 per 100 pounds, and was shipped in keel-boats to various points on the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, while many purchasers came hundreds of miles on horseback and carried it away on pack animals. In 1827, the State treasury being empty and the General Assembly having decided to erect a penitentiary at Alton, Congress was petitioned to donate these lands to the State in fee, and permission was granted "to sell 30,000 acres of the Ohio Salines in Gallatin County, and apply the proceeds to such purposes as the Legislature might by law direct." The sale was made, one-half of the proceeds set apart for the building of the penitentiary, and one-half to the improvement of roads and rivers in the eastern part of the State. The manufacture of salt was carried on, however—for a time by lessees and subsequently by owners—until 1873, about which time it was abandoned, chiefly because it had ceased to be profitable on account of competition with other districts possessing superior facilities. Some salt was manufactured in Vermilion County about 1824. The manufacture has been successfully carried on in recent years, from the product of artesian wells, at St. John, in Perry County.

SANDOVAL, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the western branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, 6 miles north of Centralia. The town has coal mines and some manufactures, with banks and one newspaper. Population (1880), 564; (1890), 834; (1900), 1,258.

SANDSTONE. The quantity of sandstone quarried in Illinois is comparatively insignificant, its value being less than one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the output of the entire country. In 1890 the State ranked twenty-fifth in the list of States producing this mineral, the total value of the stone quarried being but $17,896, representing 141,605 cubic feet, taken from ten quarries, which employed forty-six hands, and had an aggregate capital invested of $19,400.

SANDWICH, a city in De Kalb County, incorporated in 1873, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 58 miles southwest of Chicago. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements, hay-presses, corn-shellers, pumps and wind-mills. Sandwich has two private banks, two weekly and one semi-weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,516; (1900), 2,520; (1903), 2,865.

SANGAMON COUNTY, a central county, organized under act of June 30, 1821, from parts of Bond and Madison Counties, and embracing the present counties of Sangamon, Cass, Menard, Mason, Tazewell, Logan, and parts of Morgan, McLean, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. It was named for the river flowing through it. Though reduced in area somewhat, four years later, it extended to the Illinois River, but was reduced to its present limits by the setting apart of Menard, Logan and Dane (now Christian) Counties, in 1839. Henry Funderburk is believed to have been the first white settler, arriving there in 1817 and locating in what is now Cotton Hill Township, being followed, the next year, by William Drennan, Joseph Dods, James McCoy, Robert Pulliam and others. John Kelly located on the present site of the city of Springfield in 1818, and was there at the time of the selection of that place as the temporary seat of justice in 1821. Other settlements were made at Auburn, Island Grove, and elsewhere, and population began to flow in rapidly. Remnants of the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indians were still there, but soon moved north or west. County organization was effected in 1821, the first Board of County Commissioners being composed of William Drennan, Zachariah Peter and Samuel Lee. John Reynolds (afterwards Governor) held the first term of Circuit Court, with John Taylor, Sheriff; Henry Starr, Prosecuting Attorney, and Charles R. Matheny, Circuit Clerk. A United States Land Office was established at Springfield in 1823, with Pascal P. Enos as Receiver, the first sale of lands taking place the same year. The soil of Sangamon County is exuberantly fertile, with rich underlying deposits of bituminous coal, which is mined in large quantities. The chief towns are Springfield, Auburn, Riverton, Iliopolis and Pleasant Plains. The area of the county is 860 square miles. Population (1880), 52,894; (1890), 61,195; (1900), 71,503.

SANGAMON RIVER, formed by the union of the North and South Forks, of which the former is the longer, or main branch. The North Fork rises in the northern part of Champaign County, whence it runs southwest to the city of Decatur, thence westward through Sangamon County, forming the north boundary of Christian County, and emptying into the Illinois River about 9 miles above Beardstown. The Sangamon is nearly 240 miles long, including the North Fork. The South Fork flows through Christian County, and joins the North Fork about 6 miles east of Springfield. In the early history of the State the Sangamon was regarded as a navigable stream, and its improvement was one of the measures advocated by Abraham Lincoln in 1832, when he was for the first time a candidate (though unsuccessfully) for the Legislature. In the spring of 1832 a small steamer from Cincinnati, called the "Talisman," ascended the river to a point near Springfield. The event was celebrated with great rejoicing by the people, but the vessel encountered so much difficulty in getting out of the river that the experiment was never repeated.

SANGAMON & MORGAN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

SANGER, Lorenzo P., railway and canal contractor, was born at Littleton, N. H., March 2, 1809; brought in childhood to Livingston County, N. Y., where his father became a contractor on the Erie Canal, the son also being employed upon the same work. The latter subsequently became a contractor on the Pennsylvania Canal on his own account, being known as "the boy contractor." Then, after a brief experience in mercantile business, and a year spent in the construction of a canal in Indiana, in 1836 he came to Illinois, and soon after became an extensive contractor on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, having charge of rock excavation at Lockport. He was also connected with the Rock River improvement scheme, and interested in a line of stages between Chicago and Galena, which, having been consolidated with the line managed by the firm of Fink & Walker, finally became the Northwestern Stage Company, extending its operations throughout Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri—Mr. Sanger having charge of the Western Division, for a time, with headquarters at St. Louis. In 1851 he became the head of the firm of Sanger, Camp & Co., contractors for the construction of the Western (or Illinois) Division of the Ohio & Mississippi (now the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railway, upon which he was employed for several years. Other works with which he was connected were the North Missouri Railroad and the construction of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, as member of the firm of Sanger & Casey, for a time, also lessees of convict labor. In 1862 Mr. Sanger received from Governor Yates, by request of President Lincoln, a commission as Colonel, and was assigned to staff duty in Kentucky and Tennessee. After the war he became largely interested in stone quarries adjacent to Joliet; also had an extensive contract, from the City of Chicago, for deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Died, at Oakland, Cal., March 23, 1875, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.—JAMES YOUNG (Sanger), brother of the preceding, was born at Sutton, Vt., March 14, 1814; in boyhood spent some time in a large mercantile establishment at Pittsburg, Pa., later being associated with his father and elder brother in contracts on the Erie Canal and similar works in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. At the age of 22 he came with his father's family to St. Joseph, Mich., where they established a large supply store, and engaged in bridge-building and similar enterprises. At a later period, in connection with his father and his brother, L. P. Sanger, he was prominently connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal—the aqueduct at Ottawa and the locks at Peru being constructed by them. About 1850 the Construction Company, of which he and his brother, L. P. Sanger, were leading members, undertook the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, from St. Louis to Vincennes, Ind., and were prominently identified with other railroad enterprises in Southern Illinois, Missouri and California. Died, July 3, 1867, when consummating arrangements for the performance of a large contract on the Union Pacific Railroad.

SANITARY COMMISSION. (See Illinois Sanitary Commission.)

SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO. (See Chicago Drainage Canal.)

SAUGANASH, the Indian name of a half-breed known as Capt. Billy Caldwell, the son of a British officer and a Pottawatomie woman, born in Canada about 1780; received an education from the Jesuits at Detroit, and was able to speak and write English and French, besides several Indian dialects; was a friend of Tecumseh's and, during the latter part of his life, a devoted friend of the whites. He took up his residence in Chicago about 1820, and, in 1826, was a Justice of the Peace, while nominally a subject of Great Britain and a Chief of the Ottawa and Pottawatomies. In 1828 the Government, in consideration of his services, built for him the first frame house ever erected in Chicago, which he occupied until his departure with his tribe for Council Bluffs in 1836. By a treaty, made Jan. 2, 1830, reservations were granted by the Government to Sauganash, Shabona and other friendly Indians (see Shabona), and 1,240 acres on the North Branch of Chicago River set apart for Caldwell, which he sold before leaving the country. Died, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1841.

SAVAGE, George S. F., D.D., clergyman, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Jan. 29, 1817; graduated at Yale College in 1844; studied theology at Andover and New Haven, graduating in 1847; was ordained a home missionary the same year and spent twelve years as pastor at St. Charles, Ill., for four years being corresponding editor of "The Prairie Herald" and "The Congregational Herald." For ten years he was in the service of the American Tract Society, and, during the Civil War, was engaged in sanitary and religious work in the army. In 1870 he was appointed Western Secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society, remaining two years, after which he became Financial Secretary of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has also been a Director of the institution since 1854, a Trustee of Beloit College since 1850, and, for several years, editor and publisher of "The Congregational Review."

SAVANNA, a city in Carroll County, situated on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; is 10 miles west of Mount Carroll and about 20 miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It is an important shipping-point and contains several manufactories of machinery, lumber, flour, etc. It has two State banks, a public library, churches, two graded schools, township high school, and two daily and weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 3,097; (1900), 3,325.

SAYBROOK, a village of McLean County, on the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, 26 miles east of Bloomington; district agricultural; county fairs held here; the town has two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 851; (1900), 879.

SCATES, Walter Bennett, jurist and soldier, was born at South Boston, Halifax County, Va., Jan. 18, 1808; was taken in infancy to Hopkinsville, Ky., where he resided until 1831, having meanwhile learned the printer's trade at Nashville and studied law at Louisville. In 1831 he removed to Frankfort, Franklin County, Ill., where, for a time, he was County Surveyor. In 1836, having been appointed Attorney-General, he removed to Vandalia, then the seat of government, but resigned at the close of the same year to accept the judgeship of the Third Judicial Circuit, and took up his residence at Shawneetown. In 1841 he was one of five new Judges added to the Supreme Court bench, the others being Sidney Breese, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Ford and Samuel H. Treat. In that year he removed to Mount Vernon, Jefferson County, and, in January, 1847, resigned his seat upon the bench to resume practice. The same year he was a member of the Constitutional Convention and Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. In June, 1854, he again took a seat upon the Supreme Court bench, being chosen to succeed Lyman Trumbull, but resigned in May, 1857, and resumed practice in Chicago. In 1862 he volunteered in defense of the Union, received a Major's commission and was assigned to duty on the staff of General McClelland; was made, Assistant Adjutant-General and mustered out in January, 1866. In July, 1866, President Johnson appointed him Collector of Customs at Chicago, which position he filled until July 1, 1869, when he was removed by President Grant, during the same period, being ex-officio custodian of United States funds, the office of Assistant Treasurer not having been then created. Died, at Evanston, Oct. 26, 1886.

SCAMMON, Jonathan Young, lawyer and banker, was born at Whitefield, Maine, July 27, 1812; after graduating at Waterville (now Colby) University in 1831, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Hallowell, in 1835 removing to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. After a year spent as deputy in the office of the Circuit Clerk of Cook County, during which he prepared a revision of the Illinois statutes, he was appointed attorney for the State Bank of Illinois in 1837, and, in 1839, became reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he held until 1845. In the meantime, he was associated with several prominent lawyers, his first legal firm being that of Scammon, McCagg & Fuller, which was continued up to the fire of 1871. A large operator in real estate and identified with many enterprises of a public or benevolent character, his most important financial venture was in connection with the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, which conducted an extensive banking business for many years, and of which he was the President and leading spirit. As a citizen he was progressive, public-spirited and liberal. He was one of the main promoters and organizers of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railway, the first railroad to run west from Lake Michigan; was also prominently identified with the founding of the Chicago public school system, a Trustee of the (old) Chicago University, and one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, of the Chicago Academy of Sciences and the Chicago Astronomical Society — being the first President of the latter body. He erected, at a cost of $30,000, the Fort Dearborn Observatory, in which he caused to be placed the most powerful telescope which had at that time been brought to the West. He also maintained the observatory at his own expense. He was the pioneer of Swedenborgianism in Chicago, and, in politics, a staunch Whig, and, later, an ardent Republican. In 1844 he was one of the founders of "The Chicago American," a paper designed to advance the candidacy of Henry Clay for the Presidency; and, in 1872, when "The Chicago Tribune" espoused the Liberal Republican cause, he started "The Inter-Ocean" as a Republican organ, being, for some time, its sole proprietor and editor-in-chief. He was one of the first to encourage the adoption of the homeopathic system of medicine in Chicago, and was prominently connected with the founding of the Hahnemann Medical College and the Hahnemann Hospital, being a Trustee in both for many years. As a member of the General Assembly he secured the passage of many important measures, among them being legislation looking toward the bettering of the currency and the banking system. He accumulated a large fortune, but lost most of it by the fire of 1871 and the panic of 1873. Died, in Chicago, March 17, 1890.

SCARRITT, Nathan, pioneer, was born in Connecticut, came to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1820, and, in 1821, located in Scarritt's Prairie, Madison County. His sons afterward became influential in business and Methodist church circles. Died, Dec. 12, 1847.

SCENERY, NATURAL. Notwithstanding the uniformity of surface which characterizes a country containing no mountain ranges, but which is made up largely of natural prairies, there are a number of localities in Illinois where scenery of a picturesque, and even bold and rugged character, may be found. One of the most striking of these features is produced by a spur or low range of hills from the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, projected across the southern part of the State from the vicinity of Grand

Tower in Jackson County, through the northern part of Union, and through portions of Williamson, Johnson, Saline, Pope and Hardin Counties. Grand Tower, the initial point in the western part of the State, is an isolated cliff of limestone, standing out in the channel of the Mississippi, and forming an island nearly 100 feet above low-water level. It has been a conspicuous landmark for navigators ever since the discovery of the Mississippi. "Fountain Bluff," a few miles above Grand Tower, is another conspicuous point immediately on the river bank, formed by some isolated hills about three miles long by a mile and a half wide, which have withstood the forces that excavated the valley now occupied by the Mississippi. About half a mile from the lower end of this hill, with a low valley between them, is a smaller eminence known as the "Devil's Bake Oven." The main chain of bluffs, known as the "Back Bone," is about five miles from the river, and rises to a height of nearly 700 feet above low-tide in the Gulf of Mexico, or more than 400 feet above the level of the river at Cairo. "Bald Knob" is a very prominent inland bluff promontory near Alta Pass on the line of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, in the northern part of Union County, with an elevation above tide-water of 985 feet. The highest point in this range of hills is reached in the northeastern part of Pope County—the elevation at that point (as ascertained by Prof. Rolfe of the State University at Champaign) being 1,046 feet.—There is some striking scenery in the neighborhood of Grafton between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois, as well as some distance up the latter stream—though the landscape along the middle section of the Illinois is generally monotonous or only gently undulating, except at Peoria and a few other points, where bluffs rise to a considerable height. On the Upper Illinois, beginning at Peru, the scenery again becomes picturesque, including the celebrated "Starved Rock," the site of La Salle's Fort St. Louis (which see). This rock rises to a perpendicular height of about 125 feet from the surface of the river at the ordinary stage. On the opposite side of the river, about four miles below Ottawa, is "Buffalo Rock," an isolated ridge of rock about two miles long by forty to sixty rods wide, evidently once an island at a period when the Illinois River occupied the whole valley. Additional interest is given to both these localities by their association with early history. Deer Park, on the Vermilion River—some two miles from where it empties into the Illinois, just below "Starved Rock"—is a peculiar grotto-like formation, caused by a ravine which enters the Vermilion at this point. Ascending this ravine from its mouth, for a quarter of a mile, between almost perpendicular walls, the road terminates abruptly at a dome-like overhanging rock which widens at this point to about 150 feet in diameter at the base, with a height of about 75 feet. A clear spring of water gushes from the base of the cliff, and, at certain seasons of the year, a beautiful water-fall pours from the cliffs into a little lake at the bottom of the chasm. There is much other striking scenery higher up, on both the Illinois and Fox Rivers.—A point which arrested the attention of the earliest explorers in this region was Mount Joliet, near the city of that name. It is first mentioned by St. Cosme in 1698, and has been variously known as Monjolly, Mont Jolie, Mount Juliet, and Mount Joliet. It had an elevation, in early times, of about 30 feet with a level top 1,300 by 225 feet. Prof. O. H. Marshall, in "The American Antiquarian," expresses the opinion that, originally, it was an island in the river, which, at a remote period, swept down the valley of the Des Plaines. Mount Joliet was a favorite rallying point of Illinois Indians, who were accustomed to hold their councils at its base.—The scenery along Rock River is not striking for its boldness, but it attracted the attention of early explorers by the picturesque beauty of its groves, undulating plains and sheets of water. The highest and most abrupt elevations are met with in Jo Daviess County, near the Wisconsin State line. Pilot Knob, a natural mound about three miles south of Galena and two miles from the Mississippi, has been a landmark well known to tourists and river men ever since the Upper Mississippi began to be navigated. Towering above the surrounding bluffs, it reaches an altitude of some 430 feet above the ordinary level of Fever River. A chain of some half dozen of these mounds extends some four or five miles in a northeasterly direction from Pilot Knob, Waddel's and Jackson's Mounds being conspicuous among them. There are also some castellated rocks around the city of Galena which are very striking. Charles Mound, belonging to the system already referred to, is believed to be the highest elevation in the State. It stands near the Wisconsin State line, and, according to Prof. Rolfe, has an altitude of 314 feet above the Illinois Central Railroad at Scales' Mound Station, and, 1,257 feet above the Gulf of Mexico.

SCHAUMBERG, a village in Schaumburg Township, Cook County. Population, 573.

SCHNEIDER, George, journalist and banker, was born at Pirmasens, Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1823. Being sentenced to death for his participation in the attempted rebellion of 1848, he escaped to America in 1849, going from New York to Cleveland, and afterwards to St. Louis. There, in connection with his brother, he established a German daily—"The New Era"—which was intensely anti-slavery and exerted a decided political influence, especially among persons of German birth. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, where he became editor of "The Staats Zeitung," in which he vigorously opposed the Kansas-Nebraska bill on its introduction by Senator Douglas. His attitude and articles gave such offense to the partisan friends of this measure, that "The Zeitung" was threatened with destruction by a mob in 1855. He early took advanced ground in opposition to slavery, and was a member of the convention of Anti-Nebraska editors, held at Decatur in 1856, and of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington the same year, as well as of the National Republican Conventions of 1856 and 1860, participating in the nomination of both John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In 1861 he was a member of the Chicago Union Defense Committee, and was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Consul-General at Elsinore, Denmark. Returning to America in 1862, he disposed of his interest in "The Staats Zeitung" and was appointed the first Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District. On retiring from this office he engaged in banking, subsequently becoming President of the National Bank of Illinois, with which he was associated for a quarter of a century. In 1877 President Hayes tendered him the ministry to Switzerland, which he declined. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large, also serving for a number of years as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister, Major-General, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1831; brought to Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., in 1843, and, two years later, removed to Freeport; graduated from the United States Military Academy, in 1853, as classmate of Generals McPherson and Sheridan; was assigned to the artillery service and served two years in Florida, after which he spent five years (1855-60) as an instructor at West Point. At the beginning of the Civil War he was on leave of absence, acting as Professor of Physics in Washington University at St. Louis, but, waiving his leave, he at once returned to duty and was appointed mustering officer; then, by permission of the War Department, entered the First Missouri Volunteers as Major, serving as Chief of Staff to General Lyon in the early battles in Missouri, including Wilson's Creek. His subsequent career included the organization of the Missouri State Militia (1862), command of the Army of the Frontier in Southwest Missouri, command of the Department of the Missouri and Ohio, participation in the Atlanta campaign and co-operation with Sherman in the capture of the rebel Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina—his army having been transferred for this purpose, from Tennessee by way of Washington. After the close of the war he went on a special mission to Mexico to investigate the French occupation of that country; was commander of the Department of the Potomac, and served as Secretary of War, by appointment of President Johnson, from June, 1868, to March, 1869. On retiring from the Cabinet he was commissioned a full Major-General and held various Division and Department commands until 1886, when, on the death of General Sherman, he succeeded to the command of the Army, with headquarters at Washington. He was retired under the age limit, Sept. 29, 1895. His present home is in Washington.

SCHOLFIELD, John, jurist, was born in Clark County, Ill., in 1834; acquired the rudiments of an education in the common schools during boyhood, meanwhile gaining some knowledge of the higher branches through toilsome application to text-books without a preceptor. At the age of 20 he entered the law school at Louisville, Ky., graduating two years later, and beginning practice at Marshall, Ill. He defrayed his expenses at the law school from the proceeds of the sale of a small piece of land to which he had fallen heir. In 1856 he was elected State's Attorney, and, in 1860, was chosen to represent his county in the Legislature. After serving one term he returned to his professional career and succeeded in building up a profitable practice. In 1869-70 he represented Clark and Cumberland Counties in the Constitutional Convention, and, in 1870, became Solicitor for the Vandalia Railroad. In 1873 he was elected to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State for the Middle Grand Division, caused by the resignation of Judge Anthony Thornton, and re-elected without opposition in 1879 and 1888. Died, in office, Feb. 13, 1893. It has been claimed that President Cleveland would have tendered him the Chief Justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, had he not insistently declined to accept the honor.

SCHOOL-HOUSES, EARLY. The primitive school-houses of Illinois were built of logs, and were extremely rude, as regards both structure and furnishing. Indeed, the earliest pioneers rarely erected a special building to be used as a school-house. An old smoke-house, an abandoned dwelling, an old block-house, or the loft or one end of a settler's cabin not unfrequently answered the purpose, and the church and the court-house were often made to accommodate the school. When a school-house, as such, was to be built, the men of the district gathered at the site selected, bringing their axes and a few other tools, with their ox-teams, and devoted four or five days to constructing a house into which, perhaps, not a nail was driven. Trees were cut from the public lands, and, without hewing, fashioned into a cabin. Sixteen feet square was usually considered the proper dimensions. In the walls were cut two holes, one for a door to admit light and air, and the other for the open fireplace, from which rose a chimney, usually built of sticks and mud, on the outside. Danger of fire was averted by thickly lining the inside of the chimney with clay mortar. Sometimes, but only with great labor, stone was substituted for mortar made from the clay soil. The chimneys were always wide, seldom less than six feet, and sometimes extending across one entire end of the building. The fuel used was wood cut directly from the forest, frequently in its green state, dragged to the spot in the form of logs or entire trees to be cut by the older pupils in lengths suited to the width of the chimney. Occasionally there was no chimney, the fire, in some of the most primitive structures, being built on the earth and the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. In such houses a long board was set up on the windward side, and shifted from side to side as the wind varied. Stones or logs answered for andirons, clapboards served as shovels, and no one complained of the lack of tongs. Roofs were made of roughly split clapboards, held in place by "weight poles" laid on the boards, and by supports starting from "eaves poles." The space between the logs, which constituted the walls of the building, was filled in with blocks of wood or "chinking," and the crevices, both exterior and interior, daubed over with clay mortar, in which straw was sometimes mixed to increase its adhesiveness. On one side of the structure one or two logs were sometimes cut out to allow the admission of light; and, as glass could not always be procured, rain and snow were excluded and light admitted by the use of greased paper. Over this space a board, attached to the outer wall by leather hinges, was sometimes suspended to keep out the storms. The placing of a glass window in a country school-house at Edwardsville, in 1824, was considered an important event. Ordinarily the floor was of the natural earth, although this was sometimes covered with a layer of clay, firmly packed down. Only the more pretentious school-houses had "punchon floors"; i. e., floors made of split logs roughly hewn. Few had "ceilings" (so-called), the latter being usually made of clapboards, sometimes of bark, on which was spread earth, to keep out the cold. The seats were also of punchcons (without backs) supported on four legs made of pieces of poles inserted through augur holes. No one had a desk, except the advanced pupils who were learning to write. For their convenience a broader and smoother punchcon was fastened into the wall by wooden pins, in such a way that it would slope downward toward the pupil, the front being supported by a brace extending from the wall. When a pupil was writing he faced the wall. When he had finished this task, he "reversed himself" and faced the teacher and his schoolmates. These adjuncts completed the furnishings, with the exception of a split-bottomed chair for the teacher (who seldom had a desk) and a pail, or "piggin," of water, with a gourd for a drinking cup. Rough and uncouth as these structures were, they were evidences of public spirit and of appreciation of the advantages of education. They were built and maintained by mutual aid and sacrifice, and, in them, some of the great men of the State and Nation obtained that primary training which formed the foundation of their subsequent careers. (See Education.)

SCHUYLER COUNTY, located in the western portion of the State, has an area of 430 square miles, and was named for Gen. Philip Schuyler. The first American settlers arrived in 1823, and, among the earliest pioneers, were Calvin Hobart, William H. Taylor and Orris McCartney. The county was organized from a portion of Pike County, in 1825, the first Commissioners being Thomas Blair, Thomas McKee and Samuel Horney. The Commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, selected a site in the eastern part of the county about one mile west of the present village of Pleasant View, to which the name of Beardstown was given, and where the earliest court was held, Judge John York Sawyer presiding, with Hart Fellows as Clerk, and Orris McCartney, Sheriff. This location, however, proving unsatisfactory, new Commissioners were appointed, who, in the early part of 1826, selected the present site of the city of Rushville, some five miles west of the point originally chosen. The new seat of justice was first called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but the name was afterwards changed to Rushville. Ephraim Eggleston was the pioneer of Rushville. The surface of the county is rolling, and the region contains excellent farming land, which is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous creeks. Population (1890), 16,013; (1900), 16,129.

SCHWATKA, Frederick, Arctic explorer, was born at Galena, Ill., Sept. 29, 1849; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1871, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Third Cavalry, serving on the frontier until 1877, meantime studying law and medicine, being admitted to the bar in 1875, and graduating in medicine in 1876. Having his interest excited by reports of traces of Sir John Franklin's expedition, found by the Esquimaux, he obtained leave of absence in 1878, and, with Wm. H. Gilder as second in command, sailed from New York in the "Eothen," June 19, for King William's Land. The party returned, Sept. 22, 1880, having found and buried the skeletons of many of Franklin's party, besides discovering relics which tended to clear up the mystery of their fate. During this period he made a sledge journey of 3,251 miles. Again, in 1883, he headed an exploring expedition up the Yukon River. After a brief return to army duty he tendered his resignation in 1885, and the next year led a special expedition to Alaska, under the auspices of "The New York Times," later making a voyage of discovery among the Aleutian Islands. In 1889 he conducted an expedition to Northern Mexico, where he found many interesting relics of Aztec civilization and of the cliff and cave-dwellers. He received the Roquette Arctic Medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and a medal from the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia; also published several volumes relating to his researches, under the titles, "Along Alaska's Great River"; "The Franklin Search Under Lieutenant Schwatka"; "Nimrod of the North"; and "Children of the Cold." Died, at Portland, Ore., Nov. 2, 1892.

SCOTT, James W., journalist, was born in Walworth County, Wis., June 26, 1849, the son of a printer, editor and publisher. While a boy he accompanied his father to Galena, where the latter established a newspaper, and where he learned the printer's trade. After graduating from the Galena high school, he entered Beloit College, but left at the end of his sophomore year. Going to New York, he became interested in floriculture, at the same time contributing short articles to horticultural periodicals. Later he was a compositor in Washington. His first newspaper venture was the publication of a weekly newspaper in Maryland in 1872. Returning to Illinois, conjointly with his father he started "The Industrial Press" at Galena, but, in 1875, removed to Chicago. There he purchased "The Daily National Hotel Reporter," from which he withdrew a few years later. In May, 1881, in conjunction with others, he organized The Chicago Herald Company, in which he ultimately secured a controlling interest. His journalistic and executive capability soon brought additional responsibilities. He was chosen President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Chicago Press Club, and of the United Press—the latter being an organization for the collection and dissemination of telegraphic news to journals throughout the United States and Canada. He was also conspicuously connected with the preliminary organization of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Chairman of the Press Committee. In 1893 he started an evening paper at Chicago, which he named "The Post." Early in 1895 he purchased "The Chicago Times," intending to consolidate it with "The Herald," but before the final consummation of his plans, he died suddenly, while on a business visit in New York, April 14, 1895.

SCOTT, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 1, 1824; his father being of Scotch-Irish descent and his mother a Virginian. His attendance upon district schools was supplemented by private tuition, and his early education was the best that the comparatively new country afforded. He read law at Belleville, was admitted to the bar in 1848, removed to McLean County, which continued to be his home for nearly fifty years. He served as County School Commissioner from 1849 to 1852, and, in the latter year, was elected County Judge. In 1856 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the State Senate, frequently speaking from the same platform with Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, to succeed David Davis on the elevation of the latter to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and was re-elected in 1867. In 1870, a new judicial election being rendered necessary by the adoption of the new Constitution, Judge Scott was chosen Justice of the Supreme Court for a term of nine years; was re-elected in 1879, but declined a renomination in 1888. The latter years of his life were devoted to his private affairs. Died, at Bloomington, Jan. 21, 1898. Shortly before his death Judge Scott published a volume containing a History of the Illinois Supreme Court, including brief sketches of the early occupants of the Supreme Court bench and early lawyers of the State.

SCOTT, Matthew Thompson, agriculturist and real-estate operator, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 24, 1828; graduated at Centre College in 1846, then spent several years looking after his father's landed interests in Ohio, when he came to Illinois and invested largely in lands for himself and others. He laid out the town of Chenoa in 1856; lived in Springfield in 1870-72, when he removed to Bloomington, where he organized the McLean County Coal Company, remaining as its head until his death; was also the founder of "The Bloomington Bulletin," in 1878. Died, at Bloomington, May 21, 1891.

SCOTT, Owen, journalist and ex-Congressman, was born in Jackson Township, Effingham County, Ill., July 6, 1848, reared on a farm, and, after receiving a thorough common-school education, became a teacher, and was, for eight years, Superintendent of Schools for his native county. In January, 1874, he was admitted to the bar, but abandoned practice, ten years later, to engage in newspaper work. His first publication was "The Effingham Democrat," which he left to become proprietor and manager of "The Bloomington Bulletin." He was also publisher of "The Illinois Freeman," a monthly periodical. Before removing to Bloomington he filled the offices of City Attorney and Mayor of Effingham, and also served as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. In 1890 he was elected as a Democrat from the Fourteenth Illinois District to the Fifty-second Congress. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Benjamin F. Funk. During the past few years, Mr. Scott has been editor of "The Bloomington Leader."

SCOTT COUNTY, lies in the western part of the State adjoining the Illinois River, and has an area of 248 square miles. The region was originally owned by the Kickapoo Indians, who ceded it to the Government by the treaty of Edwardsville, July 30, 1819. Six months later (in January, 1820) a party of Kentuckians settled near Lynnville (now in Morgan County), their names being Thomas Stevens, James Scott, Alfred Miller, Thomas Allen, John Scott and Adam Miller. Allen erected the first house in the county, John Scott the second and Adam Miller the third. About the same time came Stephen M. Umpstead, whose wife was the first white woman in the county. Other pioneers were Jedediah Webster, Stephen Pierce, Joseph Densmore, Jesse Roberts, and Samuel Bogard. The country was rough and the conveniences of civilization few and remote. Settlers took their corn to Edwardsville to be ground, and went to Alton for their mail. Turbulence early showed itself, and, in 1822, a band of "Regulators" was organized from the best citizens, who meted out a rough and ready sort of justice, until 1830, occasionally shooting a desperado at his cabin door. Scott County was cut off from Morgan and organized in 1839. It contains good farming land, much of it being originally timbered, and it is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous small streams. Winchester is the county-seat. Population of the county (1880), 10,741; (1890), 10,304; (1900), 10,455.

SCRIPPS, John L., journalist, was born near Cape Girardeau, Mo., Feb. 18, 1818; was taken to Rushville, Ill., in childhood, and educated at McKendree College; studied law and came to Chicago in 1847, with the intention of practicing, but, a year or so later, bought a third interest in "The Chicago Tribune," which had been established during the previous year. In 1852 he withdrew from "The Tribune," and, in conjunction with William Bross (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor), established "The Daily Democratic Press," which was consolidated with "The Tribune" in July, 1858, under the name of "The Press and Tribune," Mr. Scripps remaining one of the editors of the new concern. In 1861 he was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving until 1865, when, having sold his interest in "The Tribune," he engaged in the banking business as a member of the firm of Scripps, Preston & Kean. His health, however, soon showed signs of failure, and he died, Sept. 21, 1866, at Minneapolis, Minn., whither he had gone in hopes of restoration. Mr. Scripps was a finished and able writer who did much to elevate the standard of Chicago journalism.

SCROGGS, George, journalist, was born at Wilmington, Clinton, County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842—the son of Dr. John W. Scroggs, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1851, and, in 1858, took charge of "The Central Illinois Gazette." In 1866-67 Dr. Scroggs was active in securing the location of the State University at Champaign, afterwards serving as a member of the first Board of Trustees of that institution. The son, at the age of 15, became an apprentice in his father's printing office, continuing until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being promoted through the positions of Sergeant-Major and Second Lieutenant, and finally serving on the staffs of Gen. Jeff. C. Davis and Gen. James D. Morgan, but declining a commission as Adjutant of the Sixtieth Illinois. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and the march with Sherman to the sea, in the latter being severely wounded at Bentonville, N. C. He remained in the service until July, 1865, when he resigned; then entered the University at Champaign, later studied law, meanwhile writing for "The Champaign Gazette and Union," of which he finally became sole proprietor. In 1877 he was appointed an Aid-de-Camp on the staff of Governor Cullom, and, the following year, was elected to the Thirty-first General Assembly, but, before the close of the session (1879), received the appointment of United States Consul to Hamburg, Germany. He was compelled to surrender this position, a year later, on account of ill-health, and, returning home, died, Oct. 15, 1880.

SEATONVILLE, a village in Hall Township, Bureau County. Population (1900), 909.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The following is a list of the Secretaries of State of Illinois from its admission into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each incumbent: Elias Kent Kane, 1818-22; Samuel D. Lockwood, 1822-23; David Blackwell, 1823-24; Morris Birkbeck, October, 1824 to January, 1825 (failed of confirmation by the Senate); George Forquer, 1825-28; Alexander Pope Field, 1828-40; Stephen A. Douglas, 1840-41 (served three months—resigned to take a seat on the Supreme bench); Lyman Trumbull, 1841-43; Thompson Campbell, 1843-46; Horace S. Cooley, 1846-50; David L. Gregg, 1850-53; Alexander Starne, 1853-57; Ozias M. Hatch, 1857-65; Sharon Tyndale, 1865-69; Edward Rummel, 1869-73; George H. Harlow, 1873-81; Henry D. Dement, 1881-89; Isaac N. Pearson, 1889-93; William H. Hinrichsen, 1893-97; James A. Rose, 1897—. Nathaniel Pope and Joseph Phillips were the only Secretaries of Illinois during the Territorial period, the former serving from 1809 to 1816, and the latter from 1816 to 1818. Under the first Constitution (1818) the office of the Secretary of State was filled by appointment by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but without limitation as to term of office. By the Constitution of 1848, and again by that of 1870, that officer was made elective by the people at the same time as the Governor, for a term of four years.

SECRET TREASONABLE SOCIETIES. Early in the War of the Rebellion there sprang up, at various points in the Northwest, organizations of persons disaffected toward the National Government. They were most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri. At first they were known by such titles as "Circles of Honor," "Mutual Protective Associations," etc. But they had kindred aims and their members were soon united in one organization, styled "Knights of the Golden Circle." Its secrets having been partially disclosed, this body ceased to exist—or, it would be more correct to say, changed its name—being soon succeeded (1863) by an organization of similar character, called the "American Knights." These societies, as first formed, were rather political than military. The "American Knights" had more forcible aims, but this, in turn, was also exposed, and the order was re-organized under the name of "Sons of Liberty." The last named order started in Indiana, and, owing to its more perfect organization, rapidly spread over the Northwest, acquiring much more strength and influence than its predecessors had done. The ultimate authority of the organization was vested in a Supreme Council, whose officers were a "supreme commander," "secretary of state," and "treasurer." Each State represented formed a division, under a "deputy grand commander." States were divided into military districts, under "major-generals." County lodges were termed "temples." The order was virtually an officered army, and its aims were aggressive. It had its commander-in-chief, its brigades and its regiments. Three degrees were recognized, and the oaths of secrecy taken at each initiation surpassed, in binding force, either the oath of allegiance or an oath taken in a court of justice. The maintenance of slavery, and forcible opposition to a coercive policy by the Government in dealing with secession, were the pivotal doctrines of the order. Its methods and purposes were to discourage enlistments and resist a draft; to aid and protect deserters; to disseminate treasonable literature; to aid the Confederates in destroying Government property. Clement L. Vallandigham, the expatriated traitor, was at its head, and, in 1864, claimed that it had a numerical strength of 400,000, of whom 65,000 were in Illinois. Many overt acts were committed, but the organization, having been exposed and defeated in its objects, disbanded in 1865. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.)

SELBY, Paul, editor, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 20, 1825; removed with his parents, in 1837, to Van Buren County, Iowa, but, at the age of 19, went to Southern Illinois, where he spent four years teaching, chiefly in Madison County. In 1848 he entered the preparatory department of Illinois College at Jacksonville, but left the institution during his junior year to assume the editorship of "The Morgan Journal," at Jacksonville, with which he remained until the fall of 1858, covering the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which "The Journal" took an active part. He was a member of the Anti-Nebraska (afterwards known as Republican) State Convention, which met at Springfield, in October, 1854 (the first ever held in the State), and, on Feb. 22, 1856, attended and presided over a conference of Anti-Nebraska editors of the State at Decatur, called to devise a line of policy for the newly organizing Republican party. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) This body appointed the first Republican State Central Committee and designated the date of the Bloomington Convention of May 29, following, which put in nomination the first Republican State ticket ever named in Illinois, which ticket was elected in the following November. (See Bloomington Convention.) In 1859 he prepared a pamphlet giving a history of the celebrated Canal scrip fraud, which was widely circulated. (See Canal Scrip Fraud.) Going South in the fall of 1859, he was engaged in teaching in the State of Louisiana until the last of June, 1861. Just two weeks before the fall of Fort Sumter he was denounced to his Southern neighbors as an "abolitionist" and falsely charged with having been connected with the "underground railroad," in letters from secession sympathizers in the North, whose personal and political enmity he had incurred while conducting a Republican paper in Illinois, some of whom referred to Jefferson Davis, Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, and other Southern leaders as vouchers for their characters. He at once invited an investigation by the Board of Trustees of the institution, of which he was the Principal, when that body—although composed, for the most part, of Southern men—on the basis of testimonials from prominent citizens of Jacksonville, and other evidence, adopted resolutions declaring the charges prompted by personal hostility, and delivered the letters of his accusers into his hands. Returning North with his family in July, 1861, he spent some nine months in the commissary and transportation branches of the service at Cairo and at Paducah, Ky. In July, 1862, he became associate editor of "The Illinois State Journal" at Springfield, remaining until November, 1865. The next six months were spent as Assistant Deputy Collector in the Custom House at New Orleans, but, returning North in June, 1866, he soon after became identified with the Chicago press, serving, first upon the staff of "The Evening Journal" and, later, on "The Republican." In May, 1868, he assumed the editorship of "The Quincy Whig," ultimately becoming part proprietor of that paper, but, in January, 1874, resumed his old place on "The State Journal," four years later becoming one of its proprietors. In 1880 he was appointed by President Hayes Postmaster of Springfield, was reappointed by Arthur in 1884, but resigned in 1886. Meanwhile he had sold his interest in "The Journal," but the following year organized a new company for its purchase, when he resumed his former position as editor. In 1889 he disposed of his holding in "The Journal," finally removing to Chicago, where he has been employed in literary work. In all he has been engaged in editorial work over thirty-five years, of which eighteen were spent upon "The State Journal." In 1860 Mr. Selby was complimented by his Alma Mater with the honorary degree of A. M. He has been twice married, first to Miss Erra Post, of Springfield, who died in November, 1865, leaving two daughters, and, in 1870, to Mrs. Mary J. Hitchcock, of Quincy, by whom he had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

SEMPLE, James, United States Senator, was born in Green County, Ky., Jan. 5, 1798, of Scotch descent; after learning the tanner's trade, studied law and emigrated to Illinois in 1818, removing to Missouri four years later, where he was admitted to the bar. Returning to Illinois in 1828, he began practice at Edwardsville, but later became a citizen of Alton. During the Black Hawk War he served as Brigadier-General. He was thrice elected to the lower house of the Legislature (1832, '34 and '36), and was Speaker during the last two terms. In 1833 he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, but served only until the following year, and, in 1837, was appointed Minister to Granada, South America. In 1843 he was appointed, and afterwards elected, United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Samuel McRoberts, at the expiration of his term (1847) retiring to private life. He laid out the town of Elsau, in Jersey County, just south of which he owned a large estate on the Mississippi bluffs, where he died, Dec. 20, 1866.

SENECA (formerly Crotty), a village of La Salle County, situated on the Illinois River, the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 13 miles east of Ottawa. It has a graded school, several churches, a bank, some manufactures, grain warehouses, coal mines, telephone system and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,190; (1900), 1,036.

SENN, (Dr.) Nicholas, physician and surgeon, was born in the Canton of St. Gaul, Switzerland, Oct. 31, 1844; was brought to America at 8 years of age, his parents settling at Washington, Wis. He received a grammar school education at Fond du Lac, and, in 1864, began the study of medicine, graduating at the Chicago Medical College in 1868. After some eighteen months spent as resident physician in the Cook County Hospital, he began practice at Ashford, Wis., but removed to Milwaukee in 1874, where he became attending physician of the Milwaukee Hospital. In 1877 he visited Europe, graduated the following year from the University of Munich, and, on his return, became Professor of the Principles of Surgery and Surgical Pathology in Rush Medical College in Chicago—also has held the chair of the Practice of Surgery in the same institution. Dr. Senn has achieved great success and won an international reputation in the treatment of difficult cases of abdominal surgery. He is the author of a number of volumes on different branches of surgery which are recognized as standard authorities. A few years ago he purchased the extensive library of the late Dr. William Baum, Professor of Surgery in the University of Gottingen, which he presented to the Newberry Library of Chicago. In 1893, Dr. Senn was appointed Surgeon-General of the Illinois National Guard, and has also been President of the Association of Military Surgeons of the National Guard of the United States, besides being identified with various other medical bodies. Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American War, he was appointed, by President McKinley, a Surgeon of Volunteers with the rank of Colonel, and rendered most efficient aid in the military branch of the service at Camp Chickamauga and in the Santiago campaign.

SEXTON, (Col.) James A., Commander-in-Chief of Grand Army of the Republic, was born in the city of Chicago, Jan. 5, 1844; in April, 1861, being then only a little over 17, enlisted as a private soldier under the first call for troops issued by President Lincoln; at the close of his term was appointed a Sergeant, with authority to recruit a company which afterwards was attached to the Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry. Later, he was transferred to the Sixty-seventh with the rank of Lieutenant, and, a few months after, to the Seventy-second with a commission as Captain of Company D, which he had recruited. As commander of his regiment, then constituting a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, he participated in the battles of Columbia, Duck Creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in the Nashville campaign. Both at Nashville and Franklin he was wounded, and again, at Spanish Fort, by a piece of shell which broke his leg. His regiment took part in seven battles and eleven skirmishes, and, while it went out 967 strong in officers and men, it returned with only 332, all told, although it had been recruited by 234 men. He was known as "The boy Captain," being only 18 years old when he received his first commission, and 21 when, after participating in the Mobile campaign, he was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he engaged in planting in the South, purchasing a plantation in Lowndes County, Ala., but, in 1867, returned to Chicago, where he became a member of the firm of Cribben, Sexton & Co., stove manufacturers, from which he retired in 1898. In 1884 he served as Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket for the Fourth District, and, in 1889, was appointed, by President Harrison, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving over five years. In 1888 he was chosen Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, and, ten years later, to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the order, which he held at the time of his death. He had also been, for a number of years, one of the Trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, and, during most of the time, President of the Board. Towards the close of the year 1898, he was appointed by President McKinley a member of the Commission to investigate the conduct of the Spanish-American War, but, before the Commission had concluded its labors, was taken with "the grip," which developed into pneumonia, from which he died in Washington, Feb. 5, 1899.

SEYMOUR, George Franklin, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, Jan. 5, 1829; graduated from Columbia College in 1850, and from the General Theological Seminary (New York) in 1854. He received both minor and major orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, being made deacon in 1854 and ordained priest in 1855. For several years he was engaged in missionary work. During this period he was prominently identified with the founding of St. Stephen's College. After serving as rector in various parishes, in 1865 he was made Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the New York Seminary, and, ten years later, was chosen Dean of the institution, still retaining his professorship. Racine College conferred upon him the degree of S.T.D., in 1867, and Columbia that of LL.D. in 1878. In 1874 he was elected Bishop of Illinois, but failed of confirmation in the House of Deputies. Upon the erection of the new diocese of Springfield (1877) he accepted and was consecrated Bishop at Trinity Church, N. Y., June 11, 1878. He was a prominent member of the Third Pan-Anglican Council (London, 1885), and has done much to foster the growth and extend the influence of his church in his diocese.

SHABBONA, a village of De Kalb County, on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 25 miles west of Aurora. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 587.

SHABONA (or Shabbona), an Ottawa Chief, was born near the Maumee River, in Ohio, about 1775, and served under Tecumseh from 1807 to the battle of the Thames in 1813. In 1810 he accompanied Tecumseh and Capt. Billy Caldwell (see Sauganash) to the homes of the Pottawatomies and other tribes within the present limits of Illinois and Wisconsin, to secure their co-operation in driving the white settlers out of the country. At the battle of the Thames, he was by the side of Tecumseh when he fell, and both he and Caldwell, losing faith in their British allies, soon after submitted to the United States through General Cass at Detroit. Shabona was opposed to Black Hawk in 1832, and did much to thwart the plans of the latter and aid the whites. Having married a daughter of a Pottawatomie chief, who had a village on the Illinois River east of the present city of Ottawa, he lived there for some time, but finally removed 25 miles north to Shabona's Grove in De Kalb County. Here he remained till 1837, when he removed to Western Missouri. Black Hawk's followers having a reservation near by, hostilities began between them, in which a son and nephew of Shabona were killed. He finally returned to his old home in Illinois, but found it occupied by whites, who drove him from the grove that bore his name. Some friends then bought for him twenty acres of land on Mazon Creek, near Morris, where he died, July 27, 1859. He is described as a noble specimen of his race. A life of him has been published by N. Matson (Chicago, 1878).

SHANNON, a village of Carroll County, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 18 miles southwest of Freeport. It is an important trade center, has a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 591; (1900), 678.

SHAW, Aaron, former Congressman, born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1811; was educated at the Montgomery Academy, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Goshen in that State. In 1833 he removed to Lawrence County, Ill. He has held various important public offices. He was a member of the first Internal Improvement Convention of the State; was chosen State's Attorney by the Legislature, in which body he served two terms; served four years as Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit; was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1856, and to the Forty-eighth in 1882, as a Democrat.

SHAW, James, lawyer, jurist, was born in Ireland, May 3, 1832, brought to this country in infancy and grew up on a farm in Cass County, Ill.; graduated from Illinois College in 1857, and, after admission to the bar, began practice at Mount Carroll. In 1870 he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, being re-elected in 1872, '76 and '78. He was Speaker of the House during the session of 1877, and one of the Republican leaders on the floor during the succeeding session. In 1872 he was chosen a Presidential Elector, and, in 1891, to a seat on the Circuit bench from the Thirteenth Circuit, and, in 1897 was re-elected for the Fifteenth Circuit.

SHAWNEETOWN, a city and the county-seat of Gallatin County, on the Ohio River 120 miles from its mouth and at the terminus of the Shawneetown Divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads; is one of the oldest towns in the State, having been laid out in 1808, and noted for the number of prominent men who resided there at an early day. Coal is extensively mined in that section, and Shawneetown is one of the largest shipping points for lumber, coal and farm products between Cairo and Louisville, navigation being open the year round. Some manufacturing is done here; the city has several mills, a foundry and machine shop, two or three banks, several churches, good schools and two weekly papers. Since the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1898, Shawneetown has reconstructed its levee system on a substantial scale, which is now believed to furnish ample protection against the recurrence of similar disaster. Pop. (1900), 1,698; (1903, est.), 2,200.

SHEAHAN, James W., journalist, was born in Baltimore, Md., spent his early life, after reaching manhood, in Washington City as a Congressional Reporter, and, in 1847, reported the proceedings of the Illinois State Constitutional Convention at Springfield. Through the influence of Senator Douglas he was induced, in 1854, to accept the editorship of "The Young America" newspaper at Chicago, which was soon after changed to "The Chicago Times." Here he remained until the fall of 1860, when, "The Times" having been sold and consolidated with "The Herald," a Buchanan-Breckenridge organ, he established a new paper called "The Morning Post." This he made representative of the views of the "War Democrats" as against "The Times," which was opposed to the war. In May, 1865, he sold the plant of "The Post" and it became "The Chicago Republican" — now "Inter Ocean." A few months later, Mr. Sheahan accepted a position as chief writer on the editorial staff of "The Chicago Tribune," which he retained until his death, June 17, 1883.

SHEFFIELD, a prosperous village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 44 miles east of Rock Island; has valuable coal mines, a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 993; (1900), 1,265.

SHELBY COUNTY, lies south of the center of the State, and contains an area of 776 square miles. The tide of immigration to this county was at first from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina, although later it began to set in from the Northern States. The first cabin in the county was built by Simeon Wakefield on what is now the site of Williamsburg, first called Cold Spring. Joseph Daniel was the earliest settler in what is now Shelbyville, pre-empting ten acres, which he soon afterward sold to Joseph Oliver, the pioneer merchant of the county, and father of the first white child born within its limits. Other pioneers were Shimei Wakefield, Levi Casey and Samuel Hall. In lieu of hats the early settlers wore caps made of squirrel or coon skin, with the tails dangling at the backs, and he was regarded as well dressed who boasted a fringed buckskin shirt and trousers, with moccasins. The county was formed in 1827, and Shelbyville made the county-seat. Both county and town are named in honor of Governor Shelby, of Kentucky. County Judge Joseph Oliver held the first court in the cabin of Barnett Bone, and Judge Theophilus W. Smith presided over the first Circuit Court in 1828. Coal is abundant, and limestone and sandstone are also found. The surface is somewhat rolling and well wooded. The Little Wabash and Kaskaskia Rivers flow through the central and southeastern portions. The county lies in the very heart of the great corn belt of the State, and has excellent transportation facilities, being penetrated by four lines of railway. Population (1880), 30,270; (1890), 31,191; (1900), 32,126.

SHELBYVILLE, the county-seat and an incorporated city of Shelby County, on the Kaskaskia River and two lines of railway, 32 miles southeast of Decatur. Agriculture is carried on extensively, and there is considerable coal mining in the immediate vicinity. The city has two flouring mills, a handle factory, a creamery, one National and one State bank, one daily and four weekly papers and one monthly periodical, an Orphans' Home, ten churches, two graded schools, and a public library. Population (1890), 3,162; (1900), 3,546.

SHELDON, a village of Iroquois County, at the intersection of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railways, 9 miles east of Watseka; has two banks and a newspaper. The region is agricultural. Pop. (1890), 910; (1900), 1,103.

SHELDON, Benjamin R., jurist, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, graduated from Williams College in 1831, studied law at the Yale Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1836. Emigrating to Illinois, he located temporarily at Hennepin, Putnam County, but soon removed to Galena, and finally to Rockford. In 1848 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Circuit, which afterwards being divided, he was assigned to the Fourteenth Circuit, remaining until 1870, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, presiding as Chief Justice in 1877. He was re-elected in 1879, but retired in 1888, being succeeded by the late Justice Bailey. Died, April 13, 1897.

SHEPPARD, Nathan, author and lecturer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1834; graduated at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859; during the Civil War was special correspondent of "The New York World" and "The Chicago Journal" and "Tribune," and, during the Franco-German War, of "The Cincinnati Gazette;" also served as special American correspondent of "The London Times," and was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and "Temple Bar." In 1873 he became a lecturer on Modern English Literature and Rhetoric in Chicago University and, four years later, accepted a similar position in Allegheny College; also spent four years in Europe, lecturing in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1884 he founded the "Athenaeum" at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of which he was President until his death, early in 1888. "The Dickens Reader," "Character Readings from George Eliot" and "Essays of George Eliot" were among the volumes issued by him between 1881 and 1887. Died in New York City, Jan. 24, 1888.

SHERMAN, Alson Smith, early Chicago Mayor, was born at Barre, Vt., April 21, 1811, remaining there until 1836, when he came to Chicago and began business as a contractor and builder. Several years later he opened the first stone quarries at Lemont, Ill. Mr. Sherman spent many years in the service of Chicago as a public official. From 1840 to 1842 he was Captain of a company of militia; for two years served as Chief of the Fire Department, and was elected Alderman in 1842, serving again in 1846. In 1844, he was chosen Mayor, his administration being marked by the first extensive public improvements made in Chicago. After his term as Mayor he did much to secure a better water supply for the city. He was especially interested in promoting common school education, being for several years a member of the City School Board. He was Vice-President of the first Board of Trustees of Northwestern University. Retired from active pursuits, Mr. Sherman is now (1899) spending a serene old age at Waukegan, Ill.—Oren (Sherman) brother of the preceding and early Chicago merchant, was born at Barre, Vt., March 5, 1816. After spending several years in a mercantile house in Montpelier, Vt., at the age of twenty he came west, first to New Buffalo, Mich., and, in 1836, to Chicago, opening a dry-goods store there the next spring. With various partners Mr. Sherman continued in a general mercantile business until 1853, at the same time being extensively engaged in the provision trade, one-half the entire transactions in pork in the city passing through his hands. Next he engaged in developing stone quarries at Lemont, Ill.; also became extensively interested in the marble business, continuing in this until a few years after the panic of 1873, when he retired in consequence of a shock of paralysis. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 15, 1898.

SHERMAN, Elijah B., lawyer, was born at Fairfield, Vt., June 18, 1832—his family being distantly related to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the late Gen. W. T. Sherman; gained his education in the common schools and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1860; began teaching, but soon after enlisted as a private in the war for the Union; received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until captured on the eve of the battle at Antietam, when he was paroled and sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, awaiting exchange. During this period he commenced reading law and, having resigned his commission, graduated from the law department of Chicago University in 1864. In 1876 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Cook County, and re-elected in 1878, and the following year appointed Master in Chancery of the United States District Court, a position which he still occupies. He has repeatedly been called upon to deliver addresses on political, literary and patriotic occasions, one of these being before the alumni of his alma mater, in 1884, when he was complimented with the degree of LL.D.

SHIELDS, James, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Ireland in 1810, emigrated to the United States at the age of sixteen, and began the practice of law at Kaskaskia in 1832. He was elected to the Legislature in 1836, and State Auditor in 1839. In 1843 he became a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and, in 1845, was made Commissioner of the General Land Office. In July, 1846, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the Mexican War gaining the brevet of Major-General at Cerro-Gordo, where he was severely wounded. He was again wounded at Chapultepec, and mustered out in 1848. The same year he was appointed Governor of Oregon Territory. In 1849 the Democrats in the Illinois Legislature elected him Senator, and he resigned his office in Oregon. In 1856 he removed to Minnesota, and, in 1858, was chosen United States Senator from that State, his term expiring in 1859, when he established a residence in California. At the outbreak of the Civil War (1861) he was superintending a mine in Mexico, but at once hastened to Washington to tender his services to the Government. He was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with distinction until March, 1863, when the effect of numerous wounds caused him to resign. He subsequently removed to Missouri, practicing law at Carrollton and serving in the Legislature of that State in 1874 and 1879. In the latter year he was elected United States Senator to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Boggy, who had died in office—serving only six weeks, but being the only man in the history of the country who filled the office of United States Senator from three different States. Died, at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1, 1879.

SHIPMAN, a town of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 19 miles north-northeast of Alton and 14 miles southwest of Carlinville. Population (1890), 410; (1900), 396.

SHIPMAN, George E., M.D., physician and philanthropist, born in New York City, March 4, 1820; graduated at the University of New York in 1839, and took a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; practiced for a time at Peoria, Ill., but, in 1846, located in Chicago, where he assisted in organizing the first Homeopathic Hospital in that city, and, in 1855, was one of the first Trustees of Hahnemann College. In 1871 he established, in Chicago, the Foundlings' Home at his own expense, giving to it the latter years of his life. Died, Jan. 20, 1893.

SHOREY, Daniel Lewis, lawyer and philanthropist, was born at Jonesborough, Washington County, Maine, Jan. 31, 1824; educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and at Dartmouth College, graduating from the latter in 1851; taught two years in Washington City, meanwhile reading law, afterwards taking a course at Dane Law School, Cambridge; was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1854, the next year locating at Davenport, Iowa, where he remained ten years. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he prosecuted his profession until 1890, when he retired. Mr. Shorey was prominent in the establishment of the Chicago Public Library, and a member of the first Library Board; was also a prominent member of the Chicago Literary Club, and was a Director in the new University of Chicago and deeply interested in its prosperity. Died, in Chicago, March 4, 1899.

SHORT, (Rev.) William F., clergyman and educator, was born in Ohio in 1829, brought to Morgan County, Ill., in childhood, and lived upon a farm until 20 years of age, when he entered McKendree College, spending his senior year, however, at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, where he graduated in 1854. He had meanwhile accepted a call to the Missouri Conference Seminary at Jackson, Mo.; where he remained three years, when he returned to Illinois, serving churches at Jacksonville and elsewhere, for a part of the time being Presiding Elder of the Jacksonville District. In 1875 he was elected President of Illinois Female College at Jacksonville, continuing in that position until 1893, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois State Institution for the Blind at the same place, but resigned early in 1897. Dr. Short received the degree of D.D., conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan University.

SHOUP, George L., United States Senator, was born at Kittanning, Pa., June 15, 1836, came to Illinois in 1852, his father locating on a stock-farm near Galesburg; in 1859 removed to Colorado, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until 1861, when he enlisted in a company of scouts, being advanced from the rank of First Lieutenant to the Colonelcy of the Third Colorado Cavalry, meanwhile serving as Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1864. Retiring to private life, he again engaged in mercantile and mining business, first in Nevada and then in Idaho; served two terms in the Territorial Legislature of the latter, was appointed Territorial Governor in 1889 and, in 1890, was chosen the first Governor of the State, in October of the same year being elected to the United States Senate, and re-elected in 1895 for a second term, which ends in 1901. Senator Shoup is one of the few Western Senators who remained faithful to the regular Republican organization, during the political campaign of 1896.

SHOWALTER, John W., jurist, was born in Mason County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1844; resided some years in Scott County in that State, and was educated in the local schools, at Maysville and Ohio University, finally graduating at Yale College in 1867; came to Chicago in 1869, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He returned to Kentucky after the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, again came to Chicago and entered the employment of the firm of Moore & Caulfield, with whom he had been before the fire. In 1879 he became a member of the firm of Abbott, Oliver & Showalter (later, Oliver & Showalter), where he remained until his appointment as United States Circuit Judge, in March, 1895. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 12, 1898.

SHUMAN, Andrew, journalist and Lieutenant-Governor, was born at Manor, Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 8, 1830. His father dying in 1837, he was reared by an uncle. At the age of 15 he became an apprentice in the office of "The Lancaster Union and Sentinel." A year later he accompanied his employer to Auburn, N.Y., working for two years on "The Daily Advertiser" of that city, then known as Governor Seward's "home organ." At the age of 18 he edited, published and distributed—during his leisure hours—a small weekly paper called "The Auburnian." At the conclusion of his apprenticeship he was employed, for a year or two, in editing and publishing "The Cayuga Chief," a temperance journal.

In 1851 he entered Hamilton College, but, before the completion of his junior year, consented, at the solicitation of friends of William H. Seward, to assume editorial control of "The Syracuse Daily Journal." In July, 1856, he came to Chicago, to accept an editorial position on "The Evening Journal" of that city, later becoming editor-in-chief and President of the Journal Company. From 1865 to 1870 (first by executive appointment and afterward by popular election) he was a Commissioner of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, resigning the office four years before the expiration of his term. In 1876 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket. Owing to declining health, he abandoned active journalistic work in 1888, dying in Chicago, May 5, 1890. His home during the latter years of his life was at Evanston. Governor Shuman was author of a romance entitled "Loves of a Lawyer," besides numerous addresses before literary, commercial and scientific associations.

SHUMWAY, Dorice Dwight, merchant, was born at Williamsburg, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 28, 1813, descended from French Huguenot ancestry; came to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1837, and to Montgomery County, Ill., in 1841; married a daughter of Hiram Rountree, an early resident of Hillsboro, and, in 1843, located in Christian County; was engaged for a time in merchandising at Taylorville, but retired in 1858, thereafter giving his attention to a large landed estate. In 1846 he was chosen Representative in the General Assembly, served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and four years as County Judge of Christian County. Died, May 9, 1870.—Hiram P. (Shumway), eldest son of the preceding, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., June, 1842; spent his boyhood on a farm in Christian County and in his father's store at Taylorville; took an academy course and, in 1864, engaged in mercantile business; was Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and Senator in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh, afterwards removing to Springfield, where he engaged in the stone business.

SHURTLEFF COLLEGE, an institution located at Upper Alton, and the third established in Illinois. It was originally incorporated as the "Alton College" in 1831, under a special charter which was not accepted, but re-incorporated in 1835, in an "omnibus bill" with Illinois and McKendree Colleges. (See Early Colleges.) Its primal origin was a school at Rock Spring in St. Clair County, founded about 1824, by Rev. John M. Peck. This became the "Rock Spring Seminary" in 1827, and, about 1831, was united with an academy at Upper Alton. This was the nucleus of "Alton" (afterward "Shurtleff") College. As far as its denominational control is concerned, it has always been dominated by Baptist influence. Dr. Peck's original idea was to found a school for teaching theology and Biblical literature, but this project was at first inhibited by the State. Hubbard Loomis and John Russell were among the first instructors. Later, Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff donated the college $10,000, and the institution was named in his honor. College classes were not organized until 1840, and several years elapsed before a class graduated. Its endowment in 1898 was over $126,000, in addition to $125,000 worth of real and personal property. About 255 students were in attendance. Besides preparatory and collegiate departments, the college also maintains a theological school. It has a faculty of twenty instructors and is co-educational.

SIBLEY, a village of Ford County, on the Chicago Division of the Wabash Railway, 105 miles south-southwest of Chicago; has banks and a weekly newspaper. The district is agricultural. Population (1890), 404; (1900), 444.

SIBLEY, Joseph, lawyer and jurist, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1818; learned the trade of a whip-maker and afterwards engaged in merchandising. In 1843 he began the study of law at Syracuse, N. Y., and, upon admission to the bar, came west, finally settling at Nauvoo, Hancock County. He maintained a neutral attitude during the Mormon troubles, thus giving offense to a section of the community. In 1847 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but was elected in 1850, and re-elected in 1852. In 1853 he removed to Warsaw, and, in 1855, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1861, '67 and '73, being assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Second District, in 1877. His residence, after 1865, was at Quincy, where he died, June 18, 1897.

SIDELL, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroads; has a bank, electric light plant and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 776.

SIDNEY, a village of Champaign County, on the main line of the Wabash Railway, at the junction of a branch to Champaign, 48 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is in a farming district; has a bank and a newspaper. Population, (1900), 564.

SIM, (Dr.) William, pioneer physician, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1795, came to America in early manhood, and was the first physician to settle at Golconda, in Pope County, which he represented in the Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies (1824 and '28). He married a Miss Elizabeth Jack of Philadelphia, making the journey from Golconda to Philadelphia for that purpose on horseback. He had a family of five children, one son, Dr. Francis L. Sim, rising to distinction as a physician, and, for a time, being President of a Medical College at Memphis, Tenn. The elder Dr. Sim died at Golconda, in 1868.

SIMS, James, early legislator and Methodist preacher, was a native of South Carolina, but removed to Kentucky in early manhood, thence to St. Clair County, Ill., and, in 1820, to Sangamon County, where he was elected, in 1822, as the first Representative from that county in the Third General Assembly. At the succeeding session of the Legislature, he was one of those who voted against the Convention resolution designed to prepare the way for making Illinois a slave State. Mr. Sims resided for a time in Menard County, but finally removed to Morgan.

SINGER, Horace M., capitalist, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1823; came to Chicago in 1836 and found employment on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as superintendent of repairs upon the Canal until 1853. While thus employed he became one of the proprietors of the stone-quarries at Lemont, managed by the firm of Singer & Talcott until about 1890, when they became the property of the Western Stone Company. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican during the Civil War, and served as a member of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly (1867) for Cook County, was elected County Commissioner in 1870, and was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1880. He was also associated with several financial institutions, being a director of the First National Bank and of the Auditorium Company of Chicago, and a member of the Union League and Calumet Clubs. Died, at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 28, 1896.

SINGLETON, James W., Congressman, born at Paxton, Va., Nov. 23, 1811; was educated at the Winchester (Va.) Academy, and removed to Illinois in 1833, settling first at Mount Sterling, Brown County, and, some twenty years later, near Quincy. By profession he was a lawyer, and was prominent in political and commercial affairs. In his later years he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Illinois militia in 1844, being identified to some extent with the "Mormon War"; was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, served six terms in the Legislature, and was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to Congress in 1878, and again in 1880. In 1882 he ran as an independent Democrat, but was defeated by the regular nominee of his party, James M. Riggs. During the War of the Rebellion he was one of the most conspicuous leaders of the "peace party." He constructed the Quincy & Toledo (now part of the Wabash) and the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis (now part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) Railways, being President of both companies. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1892.

SINNET, John S., pioneer, was born at Lexington, Ky., March 10, 1796; at three years of age, taken by his parents to Missouri; enlisted in the War of 1812, but, soon after the war, came to Illinois, and, about 1818, settled in what is now Christian County, locating on land constituting a part of the present city of Taylorville. In 1840 he removed to Tazewell County, dying there, Jan. 13, 1872.

SKINNER, Mark, jurist, was born at Manchester, Vt., Sept. 13, 1813; graduated from Middlebury College in 1833, studied law, and, in 1836, came to Chicago; was admitted to the bar in 1839, became City Attorney in 1840, later Master in Chancery for Cook County, and finally United States District Attorney under President Tyler. As member of the House Finance Committee in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), he aided influentially in securing the adoption of measures for refunding and paying the State debt. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (now Superior Court) of Cook County, but declined a re-election in 1853. Originally a Democrat, Judge Skinner was an ardent opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and a liberal supporter of the Government policy during the rebellion. He liberally aided the United States Sanitary Commission and was identified with all the leading charities of the city. Among the great business enterprises with which he was officially associated were the Galena & Chicago Union and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways (in each of which he was a Director), the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, the Gas-Light and Coke Company and others. Died, Sept. 16, 1887. Judge Skinner's only surviving son was killed in the trenches before Petersburg, the last year of the Civil War.

SKINNER, Otis Ainsworth, clergyman and author, was born at Royalton, Vt., July 3, 1807; taught for some time, became a Universalist minister, serving churches in Baltimore, Boston and New York between 1831 and 1857; then came to Elgin, Ill., was elected President of Lombard University at Galesburg, but the following year took charge of a church at Joliet. Died, at Naperville, Sept. 18, 1861. He wrote several volumes on religious topics, and, at different times, edited religious periodicals at Baltimore, Haverhill, Mass., and Boston.

SKINNER, Ozias C., lawyer and jurist, was born at Floyd, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1817; in 1836, removed to Illinois, settling in Peoria County, where he engaged in farming. In 1838 he began the study of law at Greenville, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of that State in 1840. Eighteen months later he returned to Illinois, and began practice at Carthage, Hancock County, removing to Quincy in 1844. During the "Mormon War" he served as Aid-de-camp to Governor Ford. In 1848 he was elected to the lower house of the Sixteenth General Assembly, and, for a short time, served as Prosecuting Attorney for the district including Adams and Brown Counties. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the (then) Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1855, succeeded Judge S. H. Treat on the Supreme bench, resigning this position in April, 1858, two months before the expiration of his term. He was a large land owner and had extensive agricultural interests. He built, and was the first President of the Carthage & Quincy Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. Died in 1877.

SLADE, Charles, early Congressman; his early history, including date and place of birth, are unknown. In 1830 he was elected Representative from Washington County in the Second General Assembly, and, in 1826, was re-elected to the same body for Clinton and Washington. In 1832 he was elected one of the three Congressmen from Illinois, representing the First District. After attending the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, while on his way home, he was attacked with cholera, dying near Vincennes, Ind., July 11, 1834.

SLADE, James P., ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born at Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1837, and spent his boyhood with his parents on a farm, except while absent at school; in 1856 removed to Belleville, Ill., where he soon became connected with the public schools, serving for a number of years as Principal of the Belleville High School. While connected with the Belleville schools, he was elected County Superintendent, remaining in office some ten years; later had charge of Almira College at Greenville, Bond County, served six years as Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis and, in 1878, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction as the nominee of the Republican party. On retirement from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed his place at the head of Almira College, but, for the past few years, has been Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis.

SLAVERY AGITATION OF 1823-24. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

SLAVERY AND SLAVE LAWS. African slaves were first brought into the Illinois country by a Frenchman named Pierre F. Renault, about 1722. At that time the present State formed a part of Louisiana, and the traffic in slaves was regulated by French royal edicts. When Great Britain acquired the territory, at the close of the French and Indian War, the former subjects of France were guaranteed security for their persons "and effects," and no interference with slavery was attempted. Upon the conquest of Illinois by Virginia (see Clark, George Rogers), the French very generally professed allegiance to that commonwealth, and, in her deed of cession to the United States, Virginia expressly stipulated for the protection of the "rights and liberties" of the French citizens. This was construed as recognizing the right of property in negro slaves. Even the Ordinance of 1787, while prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory, preserved to the settlers (reference being especially made to the French and Canadians) "of the Kaskaskias, St. Vincents and neighboring villages, their laws and customs, now (then) in force, relative to the descent and conveyance of property." A conservative construction of this clause was, that while it prohibited the extension of slavery and the importation of slaves, the status of those who were at that time in involuntary servitude, and of their descendants, was left unchanged. There were those, however, who denied the constitutionality of the Ordinance in toto, on the ground that Congress had exceeded its powers in its passage. There was also a party which claimed that all children of slaves, born after 1787, were free from birth. In 1794 a convention was held at Vincennes, pursuant to a call from Governor Harrison, and a memorial to Congress was adopted, praying for the repeal—or, at least a modification—of the sixth clause of the Ordinance of 1787. The first Congressional Committee, to which this petition was referred, reported adversely upon it; but a second committee recommended the suspension of the operation of the clause in question for ten years. But no action was taken by the National Legislature, and, in 1807, a counter petition, extensively signed, was forwarded to that body, and Congress left the matter in statu quo. It is worthy of note that some of the most earnest opponents of the measure were Representatives from Southern Slave States, John Randolph, of Virginia, being one of them. The pro-slavery party in the State then prepared what is popularly known as the "Indenture Law," which was one of the first acts adopted by Governor Edwards and his Council, and was re-enacted by the first Territorial Legislature in 1812. It was entitled, "An Act relating to the Introduction of Negroes and Mulattoes into this Territory," and gave permission to bring slaves above 15 years of age into the State, when they might be registered and kept in servitude within certain limitations. Slaves under that age might also be brought in, registered, and held in bondage until they reached the age of 35, if males, and 30, if females. The issue of registered slaves were to serve their mother's master until the age of 30 or 28, according to sex. The effect of this legislation was rapidly to increase the number of slaves. The Constitution of 1818 prohibited the introduction of slavery thereafter—that is to say, after its adoption. In 1822 the slave-holding party, with their supporters, began to agitate the question of so amending the organic law as to make Illinois a slave State. To effect such a change the calling of a convention was necessary, and, for eighteen months, the struggle between "conventionists" and their opponents was bitter and fierce. The question was submitted to a popular vote on August 2, 1824, the result of the count showing 4,972 votes for such convention and 6,640 against. This decisive result settled the question of slave-holding in Illinois for all future time, though the existence of slavery in the State continued to be recognized by the National Census until 1840. The number, according to the census of 1810, was 168; in 1820 they had increased to 917. Then the number began to diminish, being reduced in 1830 to 747, and, in 1840 (the last census which shows any portion of the population held in bondage), it was 331.

Hooper Warren—who has been mentioned elsewhere as editor of "The Edwardsville Spectator," and a leading factor in securing the defeat of the scheme to make Illinois a slave State in 1822—in an article in the first number of "The Genius of Liberty" (January, 1841), speaking of that contest, says there were, at its beginning, only three papers in the State—"The Intelligencer" at Vandalia, "The Gazette" at Shawneetown, and "The Spectator" at Edwardsville. The first two of these, at the outset, favored the Convention scheme, while "The Spectator" opposed it. The management of the campaign on the part of the pro-slavery party was assigned to Emanuel J. West, Theophilus W. Smith and Oliver L. Kelly, and a paper was established by the name of "The Illinois Republican," with Smith as editor. Among the active opponents of the measure were George Churchill, Thomas Lippincott, Samuel D. Lockwood, Henry Starr (afterwards of Cincinnati), Rev. John M. Peck and Rev. James Lemen, of St. Clair County. Others who contributed to the cause were Daniel P. Cook, Morris Birkbeck, Dr. Hugh Steel and — Burton of Jackson County, Dr. Henry Perrine of Bond; William Leggett of Edwardsville (afterwards editor of "The New York Evening Post"), Benjamin Lundy (then of Missouri), David Blackwell and Rev. John Dew, of St. Clair County. Still others were Nathaniel Pope (Judge of the United States District Court), William B. Archer, William H. Brown and Benjamin Mills (of Vandalia), John Tillson, Dr. Horatio Newhall, George Forquer, Col. Thomas Mather, Thomas Ford, Judge David J. Baker, Charles W. Hunter and Henry H. Snow (of Alton). This testimony is of interest as coming from one who probably had more to do with defeating the scheme, with the exception of Gov. Edward Coles. Outside of the more elaborate Histories of Illinois, the most accurate and detailed accounts of this particular period are to be found in "Sketch of Edward Coles" by the late E. B. Washburne, and "Early Movement in Illinois for the Legalization of Slavery," an address before the Chicago Historical Society (1864), by Hon. William H. Brown, of Chicago. (See also, Coles, Edward; Warren, Hooper; Brown, William H.; Churchill, George; Lippincott, Thomas; and Newspapers, Early, elsewhere in this volume.)

SLOAN, Wesley, legislator and jurist, was born in Dorchester County, Md., Feb. 20., 1806. At the age of 17, having received a fair academic education, he accompanied his parents to Philadelphia, where, for a year, he was employed in a wholesale grocery. His father dying, he returned to Maryland and engaged in teaching, at the same time studying law, and being admitted to the bar in 1831. He came to Illinois in 1838, going first to Chicago, and afterward to Kaskaskia, finally settling at Golconda in 1839, which continued to be his home the remainder of his life. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected in 1850, '52, and '56, serving three times as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was one of the members of the first State Board of Education, created by Act of Feb. 18, 1857, and took a prominent part in the founding and organization of the State educational institutions. In 1857 he was elected to the bench of the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1861, but declined a re-election for a third term. Died, Jan. 15, 1887.

SMITH, Abner, jurist, was born at Orange, Franklin County, Mass., August 4, 1843, of an old New England family, whose ancestors came to Massachusetts Colony about 1630; was educated in the public schools and at Middlebury College, Vt., graduating from the latter in 1866. After graduation he spent a year as a teacher in Newton Academy, at Shoreham, Vt., coming to Chicago in 1867, and entering upon the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1868. The next twenty-five years were spent in the practice of his profession in Chicago, within that time serving as the attorney of several important corporations. In 1893 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected in 1897, his term of service continuing until 1903.

SMITH, (Dr.) Charles Gilman, physician, was born at Exeter, N. H., Jan. 4, 1828, received his early education at Phillips Academy, in his native place, finally graduating from Harvard University in 1847. He soon after commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School, but completed his course at the University of Pennsylvania in 1851. After two years spent as attending physician of the Alms House in South Boston, Mass., in 1853 he came to Chicago, where he soon acquired an extensive practice. During the Civil War he was one of six physicians employed by the Government for the treatment of prisoners of war in hospital at Camp Douglas. In 1868 he visited Europe for the purpose of observing the management of hospitals in Germany, France and England, on his return being invited to lecture in the Woman's Medical College in Chicago, and also becoming consulting physician in the Women's and Children's Hospital, as well as in the Presbyterian Hospital—a position which he continued to occupy for the remainder of his life, gaining a wide reputation in the treatment of women's and children's diseases. Died, Jan. 10, 1894.

SMITH, David Allen, lawyer, was born near Richmond, Va., June 18, 1809; removed with his father, at an early day, to Pulaski, Tenn.; at 17 went to Courtland, Lawrence County, Ala., where he studied law with Judge Bramlette and began practice. His father, dying about 1831, left him the owner of a number of slaves whom, in 1837, he brought to Carlinville, Ill., and emancipated, giving bond that they should not become a charge to the State. In 1839 he removed to Jacksonville, where he practiced law until his death. Col. John J. Hardin was his partner at the time of his death on the battle-field of Buena Vista. Mr. Smith was a Trustee and generous patron of Illinois College, for a quarter of a century, but never held any political office. As a lawyer he was conscientious and faithful to the interests of his clients; as a citizen, liberal, public-spirited and patriotic. He contributed liberally to the support of the Government during the war for the Union. Died, at Anoka, Minn., July 13, 1865, where he had gone to accompany an invalid son. — Thomas William (Smith), eldest son of the preceding, born at Courtland, Ala., Sept. 27, 1832; died at Clearwater, Minn., Oct. 29, 1865. He graduated at Illinois College in 1852, studied law and served as Captain in the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, until, broken in health, he returned home to die.

SMITH, Dietrich C., ex-Congressman, was born at Ostfriesland, Hanover, April 4, 1840, in boyhood came to the United States, and, since 1849, has been a resident of Pekin, Tazewell County. In 1861 he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, was promoted to a Lieutenantcy, and, while so serving, was severely wounded at Shiloh. Later, he was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out of service as Captain of Company C of that regiment. His business is that of banker and manufacturer, besides which he has had considerable experience in the construction and management of railroads. He was a member of the Thirtieth General Assembly, and, in 1880, was elected Representative in Congress from what was then the Thirteenth District, on the Republican ticket, defeating Adlai E. Stevenson, afterwards Vice-President. In 1882, his county (Tazewell) having been attached to the district for many years represented by Wm. M. Springer, he was defeated by the latter as a candidate for election.

SMITH, George, one of Chicago's pioneers and early bankers, was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 8, 1808. It was his early intention to study medicine, and he entered Aberdeen College with this end in view, but was forced to quit the institution at the end of two years, because of impaired vision. In 1833 he came to America, and, in 1834, settled in Chicago, where he resided until 1861, meanwhile spending one year in Scotland. He invested largely in real estate in Chicago and Wisconsin, at one time owning a considerable portion of the present site of Milwaukee. In 1837 he secured the charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, whose headquarters were at Milwaukee. He was really the owner of the company, although Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was its Secretary. Under this charter Mr. Smith was able to issue $1,500,000 in certificates, which circulated freely as currency. In 1839 he founded Chicago's first private banking house. About 1843 he was interested in a storage and commission business in Chicago, with a Mr. Webster as partner. He was a Director in the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and aided it, while in course of construction, by loans of money; was also a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade, organized in 1848. In 1854, the State of Wisconsin having prohibited the circulation of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance certificates above mentioned, Mr. Smith sold out the company to his partner, Mitchell, and bought two Georgia bank charters, which, together, empowered him to issue $3,000,000 in currency. The notes were duly issued in Georgia, and put into circulation in Illinois, over the counter of George Smith & Co.'s Chicago bank. About 1856 Mr. Smith began winding up his affairs in Chicago, meanwhile spending most of his time in Scotland, but, returning in 1860, made extensive investments in railroad and other American securities, which netted him large profits. The amount of capital which he is reputed to have taken with him to his native land has been estimated at $10,000,000, though he retained considerable tracts of valuable lands in Wisconsin and about Chicago. Among those who were associated with him in business, either as employes or otherwise, and who have since been prominently identified with Chicago business affairs, were Hon. Charles B. Farwell, E. I. Tinkham (afterwards a prominent banker of Chicago), E. W. Willard, now of Newport, R. I., and others. Mr. Smith made several visits, during the last forty years, to the United States, but divided his time chiefly between Scotland (where he was the owner of a castle) and London. Died Oct. 7, 1899.

SMITH, George W., soldier, lawyer and State Treasurer, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1837. It was his intention to acquire a collegiate education, but his father's business embarrassments having compelled the abandonment of his studies, at 17 of years age he went to Arkansas and taught school for two years. In 1856 he returned to Albany and began the study of law, graduating from the law school in 1858. In October of that year he removed to Chicago, where he remained continuously in practice, with the exception of the years 1862-65, when he was serving in the Union army, and 1867-68, when he filled the office of State Treasurer. He was mustered into service, August 27, 1862, as a Captain in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry—the second Board of Trade regiment. At Stone River, he was seriously wounded and captured. After four days' confinement, he was aided by a negro to escape. He made his way to the Union lines, but was granted leave of absence, being incapacitated for service. On his return to duty he joined his regiment in the Chattanooga campaign, and was officially complimented for his bravery at Gordon's Mills. At Mission Ridge he was again severely wounded, and was once more personally complimented in the official report. At Kenesaw Mountain (June 27, 1864), Capt. Smith commanded the regiment after the killing of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler, and was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy for bravery on the field. He led the charge at Franklin, and was brevetted Colonel, and thanked by the commander for his gallant service. In the spring of 1865 he was brevetted Brigadier-General, and, in June following, was mustered out. Returning to Chicago, he resumed the practice of his profession, and gained a prominent position at the bar. In 1866 he was elected State Treasurer, and, after the expiration of his term, in January, 1869, held no public office. General Smith was, for many years, a Trustee of the Chicago Historical Society, and Vice-President of the Board. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 16, 1898.

SMITH, George W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Putnam County, Ohio, August 18, 1846. When he was four years old, his father removed to Wayne County, Ill., settling on a farm. He attended the common schools and graduated from the literary department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, in 1868. In his youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith, but later determined to study law. After reading for a time at Fairfield, Ill., he entered the Law Department of the Bloomington (Ind.) University, graduating there in 1870. The same year he was admitted to the bar in Illinois, and has since practiced at Murphysboro. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and, in 1888, was elected a Republican Representative to Congress from the Twentieth Illinois District, and has been continuously re-elected, now (1899) serving his sixth consecutive term as Representative from the Twenty-second District.

SMITH, Giles Alexander, soldier, and Assistant Postmaster-General, was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829; engaged in dry-goods business in Cincinnati and Bloomington, Ill., in 1861 being proprietor of a hotel in the latter place; became a Captain in the Eighth Missouri Volunteers, was engaged at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, and promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel in 1862; led his regiment on the first attack on Vicksburg, and was severely wounded at Arkansas Post; was promoted Brigadier-General in August, 1863, for gallant and meritorious conduct; led a brigade of the Fifteenth Army Corps at Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, as also in the Atlanta campaign, and a division of the Seventeenth Corps in the "March to the Sea." After the surrender of Lee he was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, became Major-General in 1865, and resigned in 1866, having declined a commission as Colonel in the regular army; about 1869 was appointed, by President Grant, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, but resigned on account of failing health in 1872. Died, at Bloomington, Nov. 8, 1876. General Smith was one of the founders of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus, soldier, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1820; at 16 joined two brothers who had located at Springfield, Ohio, where he learned the trade of a carriage-maker. In December, 1837, he arrived at Decatur, Ill., but soon after located at Springfield, where he resided some six years. Then, returning to Decatur, he devoted his attention to carriage manufacture, doing a large business with the South, but losing heavily as the result of the war. An original Whig, he became a Democrat on the dissolution of the Whig party, but early took ground in favor of the Union after the firing on Fort Sumter; was offered and accepted the colonelcy of the Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the same time assisting Governor

Yates in the selection of Camp Butler as a camp of recruiting and instruction. Having been assigned to duty in Missouri, in the summer of 1861, he proceeded to Jefferson City, joined Fremont at Carthage in that State, and made a forced march to Springfield, afterwards taking part in the campaign in Arkansas and in the battle of Pea Ridge, where he had a horse shot under him and was severely (and, it was supposed, fatally) wounded, not recovering until 1868. Being compelled to return home, he received authority to raise an independent brigade, but was unable to accompany it to the field. In September, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General by President Lincoln, "for meritorious conduct," but was unable to enter into active service on account of his wound. Later, he was assigned to the command of a convalescent camp at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Gen. George H. Thomas. In 1864 he took part in securing the second election of President Lincoln, and, in the early part of 1865, was commissioned by Governor Oglesby Colonel of a new regiment (the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois), but, on account of his wounds, was assigned to court-martial duty, remaining in the service until January, 1866, when he was mustered out with the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. During the second year of his service he was presented with a magnificent sword by the rank and file of his regiment (the Thirty-fifth), for brave and gallant conduct at Pea Ridge. After retiring from the army, he engaged in cotton planting in Alabama, but was not successful; in 1868, canvassed Alabama for General Grant for President, but declined a nomination in his own favor for Congress. In 1870 he was appointed, by General Grant, United States Collection and Disbursing Agent for the District of New Mexico, where he continued to reside.

SMITH, John Corson, soldier, ex-Lieutenant-Governor and ex-State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1832. At the age of 16 he was apprenticed to a carpenter and builder. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and worked at his trade, for a time, but soon removed to Galena, where he finally engaged in business as a contractor. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, but, having received authority from Governor Yates, raised a company, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was incorporated in the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry. Of this regiment he was soon elected Major. After a short service about Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington and Newport, Ky., the Ninety-sixth was sent to the front, and took part (among other battles) in the second engagement at Fort Donelson and in the bloody fight at Franklin, Tenn. Later, Major Smith was assigned to staff duty under Generals Baird and Steedman, serving through the Tullahoma campaign, and participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Being promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, he rejoined his regiment, and was given command of a brigade. In the Atlanta campaign he served gallantly, taking a conspicuous part in its long series of bloody engagements, and being severely wounded at Kennesaw Mountain. In February, 1865, he was brevetted Colonel, and, in June, 1865, Brigadier-General. Soon after his return to Galena he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, but was legislated out of office in 1872. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and embarked in business. In 1874-76 he was a member (and Secretary) of the Illinois Board of Commissioners to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. In 1875 he was appointed Chief Grain-Inspector at Chicago, and held the office for several years. In 1872 and '76 he was a delegate to the National Republican Conventions of those years, and, in 1878, was elected State Treasurer, as he was again in 1882. In 1884 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor, serving until 1889. He is a prominent Mason, Knight Templar and Odd Fellow, as well as a distinguished member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and was prominently connected with the erection of the "Masonic Temple Building" in Chicago.

SMITH, John Eugene, soldier, was born in Switzerland, August 3, 1816, the son of an officer who had served under Napoleon, and after the downfall of the latter, emigrated to Philadelphia. The subject of this sketch received an academic education and became a jeweler; in 1861 entered the volunteer service as Colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in the battle of Shiloh and siege of Corinth; was promoted a Brigadier-General in November, 1862, and placed in command of a division in the Sixteenth Army Corps; led the Third Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps in the Vicksburg campaign, later being transferred to the Fifteenth, and taking part in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta and Carolina campaigns of 1864-65. He received the brevet rank of Major-General of Volunteers in January, 1865, and, on his muster-out from the volunteer service, became Colonel of the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, being transferred, in 1870, to the Fourteenth. In 1867 his services at Vicksburg and Savannah were further recognized by conferring upon him the brevets of Brigadier and Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1881, he was retired, afterwards residing in Chicago, where he died, Jan. 29, 1897.

SMITH, Joseph, the founder of the Mormon sect, was born at Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23, 1805. In 1815 his parents removed to Palmyra, N. Y., and still later to Manchester. He early showed a dreamy mental cast, and claimed to be able to locate stolen articles by means of a magic stone. In 1820 he claimed to have seen a vision, but his pretensions were ridiculed by his acquaintances. His story of the revelation of the golden plates by the angel Moroni, and of the latter's instructions to him, is well known. With the aid of Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery he prepared the "Book of Mormon," alleging that he had deciphered it from heaven-sent characters, through the aid of miraculous spectacles. This was published in 1830. In later years Smith claimed to have received supplementary revelations, which so taxed the credulity of his followers that some of them apostatized. He also claimed supernatural power, such as exorcism, etc. He soon gained followers in considerable numbers, whom, in 1832, he led west, a part settling at Kirtland, Ohio, and the remainder in Jackson County, Mo. Driven out of Ohio five years later, the bulk of the sect found the way to their friends in Missouri, whence they were finally expelled after many conflicts with the authorities. Smith, with the other refugees, fled to Hancock County, Ill., founding the city of Nauvoo, which was incorporated in 1840. Here was begun, in the following year, the erection of a great temple, but again he aroused the hostility of the authorities, although soon yielding considerable political power. After various unsuccessful attempts to arrest him in 1844, Smith and a number of his followers were induced to surrender themselves under the promise of protection from violence and a fair trial. Having been taken to Carthage, the county-seat, all were discharged under recognizance to appear at court except Smith and his brother Hyrum, who were held under the new charge of "treason," and were placed in jail. So intense had been the feeling against the Mormons, that Governor Ford called out the militia to preserve the peace; but it is evident that the feeling among the latter was in sympathy with that of the populace. Most of the militia were disbanded after Smith's arrest, one company being left on duty at Carthage, from whom only eight men were detailed to guard the jail. In this condition of affairs a mob of 150 disguised men, alleged to be from Warsaw, appeared before the jail on the evening of June 27, and, forcing the guards—who made only a feeble resistance.—Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both shot down, while a friend, who had remained with them, was wounded. The fate of Smith undoubtedly went far to win for him the reputation of martyr, and give a new impulse to the Mormon faith. (See Mormons; Nauvoo.)

SMITH, Justin Almerin, D.D., clergyman and editor, was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1819, educated at New Hampton Literary and Theological Institute and Union College, graduating from the latter in 1843; served a year as Principal of the Union Academy at Bennington, Vt., followed by four years of pastoral work, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained five years. Then (1853) he removed to Chicago to assume the editorship of "The Christian Times" (now "The Standard"), with which he was associated for the remainder of his life. Meanwhile he assisted in organizing three Baptist churches in Chicago, serving two of them as pastor for a considerable period; made an extended tour of Europe in 1869, attending the Vatican Council at Rome; was a Trustee and one of the founders of the old Chicago University, and Trustee and Lecturer of the Baptist Theological Seminary; was also the author of several religious works. Died, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Feb. 4, 1896.

SMITH, Perry H., lawyer and politician, was born in Augusta, Oneida County, N. Y., March 18, 1828; entered Hamilton College at the age of 14 and graduated, second in his class, at 18; began reading law and was admitted to the bar on coming of age in 1849. Then, removing to Appleton, Wis., when 23 years of age he was elected a Judge, served later in both branches of the Legislature, and, in 1857, became Vice-President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railway, retaining the same position in the reorganized corporation when it became the Chicago & Northwestern. In 1856 Mr. Smith came to Chicago and resided there till his death, on Palm Sunday of 1885. He was prominent in railway circles and in the councils of the Democratic party, being the recognized representative of Mr. Tilden's interests in the Northwest in the campaign of 1876.

SMITH, Robert, Congressman and lawyer, was born at Petersburg, N. H., June 12, 1802; was educated and admitted to the bar in his native town, settled at Alton, Ill., in 1832, and engaged in practice. In 1836 he was elected to the General Assembly from Madison County, and re-elected in 1838. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress, and twice re-elected, serving three successive terms. During the Civil War he was commissioned Paymaster, with the rank of Major, and was stationed at St. Louis. He was largely interested in the construction of water power at Minneapolis, Minn., and also in railroad enterprises in Illinois. He was a prominent Mason and a public-spirited citizen. Died, at Alton, Dec. 20, 1867.

SMITH, Samuel Lisle, lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1817, and, belonging to a wealthy family, enjoyed superior educational advantages, taking a course in the Yale Law School at an age too early to admit of his receiving a degree. In 1836 he came to Illinois, to look after some landed interests of his father's in the vicinity of Peru. Returning east within the next two years, he obtained his diploma, and, again coming west, located in Chicago in 1838, and, for a time, occupied an office with the well-known law firm of Butterfield & Collins. In 1839 he was elected City Attorney and, at the great Whig meeting at Springfield, in June, 1840, was one of the principal speakers, establishing a reputation as one of the most brilliant campaign orators in the West. As an admirer of Henry Clay, he was active in the Presidential campaign of 1844, and was also a prominent speaker at the River and Harbor Convention at Chicago, in 1847. With a keen sense of humor, brilliant, witty and a master of repartee and invective, he achieved popularity, both at the bar and on the lecture platform, and had the promise of future success, which was unfortunately marred by his convivial habits. Died of cholera, in Chicago, July 30, 1854. Mr. Smith married the daughter of Dr. Potts, of Philadelphia, an eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Sidney, jurist, was born in Washington County, N. Y., May 12, 1829; studied law and was admitted to the bar at Albion, in that State, in 1851; came to Chicago in 1856 and entered into partnership with Grant Goodrich and William W. Farwell, both of whom were afterwards elected to places on the bench—the first in the Superior, and the latter in the Circuit Court. In 1879 Judge Smith was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County, serving until 1885, when he became the attorney of the Chicago Board of Trade. He was the Republican candidate for Mayor, in opposition to Carter H. Harrison, in 1885, and is believed by many to have been honestly elected, though defeated on the face of the returns. A recount was ordered by the court, but so much delay was incurred and so many obstacles placed in the way of carrying the order into effect, that Judge Smith abandoned the contest in disgust, although making material gains as far as it had gone. During his professional career he was connected, as counsel, with some of the most important trials before the Chicago courts; was also one of the Directors of the Chicago Public Library, on its organization in 1871. Died suddenly, in Chicago, Oct. 6, 1898.

SMITH, Theophilus Washington, Judge and politician, was born in New York City, Sept. 28, 1784, served for a time in the United States navy, was a law student in the office of Aaron Burr, was admitted to the bar in his native State in 1805, and, in 1816, came west, finally locating at Edwardsville, where he soon became a prominent figure in early State history. In 1820 he was an unsuccessful candidate before the Legislature for the office of Attorney-General, being defeated by Samuel D. Lockwood, but was elected to the State Senate in 1822, serving four years. In 1823 he was one of the leaders of the "Conventionist" party, whose aim was to adopt a new Constitution which would legalize slavery in Illinois, during this period being the editor of the leading organ of the pro-slavery party. In 1825 he was elected one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, but resigned, Dec. 26, 1842. He was impeached in 1832 on charges alleging oppressive conduct, corruption, and other high misdemeanors in office, but secured a negative acquittal, a two-thirds vote being necessary to conviction. The vote in the Senate stood twelve for conviction (on a part of the charges) to ten for acquittal, four being excused from voting. During the Black Hawk War he served as Quartermaster-General on the Governor's staff. As a jurist, he was charged by his political opponents with being unable to divest himself of his partisan bias, and even with privately advising counsel, in political causes, of defects in the record, which they (the counsel) had not discovered. He was also a member of the first Board of Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, appointed in 1823. Died, in Chicago, May 6, 1846.

SMITH, William Henry, Journalist, Associated Press Manager, was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1833; at three years of age was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages that State at the time afforded. After completing his school course he began teaching, and, for a time, served as tutor in a Western college, but soon turned his attention to journalism, at first as assistant editor of a weekly publication at Cincinnati, still later becoming its editor, and, in 1855, city editor of "The Cincinnati Gazette," with which he was connected in a more responsible position at the beginning of the war, incidentally doing work upon "The Literary Review." His connection with a leading paper enabled him to exert a strong influence in support of the Government. This he used most faithfully in assisting to raise troops in the first years of the war, and, in 1863, in bringing forward and securing the election of John Brough as a Union candidate for Governor in opposition to Clement L. Vallandigham, the Democratic candidate. In 1864 he was nominated and elected Secretary of State, being re-elected two years later. After retiring from office he returned to journalism at Cincinnati, as editor of "The Evening Chronicle," from which he retired in 1870 to become Agent of the Western Associated Press, with headquarters, at first at Cleveland, but later at Chicago. His success in this line was demonstrated by the final union of the New York and Western Associated Press organizations under his management, continuing until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Smith was a strong personal friend of President Hayes, by whom he was appointed Collector of the Port of Chicago in 1877. While engaged in official duties he found time to do considerable literary work, having published, several years ago, "The St. Clair Papers," in two volumes, and a life of Charles Hammond, besides contributions to periodicals. After retiring from the management of the Associated Press, he was engaged upon a "History of American Politics" and a "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," which are said to have been well advanced at the time of his death, which took place at his home, at Lake Forest, Ill., July 27, 1896.

SMITH, William M., merchant, stock-breeder and politician, was born near Frankfort, Ky., May 23, 1827; in 1846 accompanied his father's family to Lexington, McLean County, Ill., where they settled. A few years later he bought forty acres of government land, finally increasing his holdings to 800 acres, and becoming a breeder of fine stock. Still later he added to his agricultural pursuits the business of a merchant. Having early identified himself with the Republican party, he remained a firm adherent of its principles during the Civil War, and, while declining a commission tendered him by Governor Yates, devoted his time and means liberally to the recruiting and organization of regiments for service in the field, and procuring supplies for the sick and wounded. In 1866 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1868 and '70, serving, during his last term, as Speaker. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor Cullom a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, of which body he served as President until 1883. He was a man of remarkably genial temperament, liberal impulses, and wide popularity. Died, March 25, 1886.

SMITH, William Sooy, soldier and civil engineer, was born at Tarlton, Pickaway County, Ohio, July 22, 1830; graduated at Ohio University in 1849, and, at the United States Military Academy, in 1853, having among his classmates, at the latter, Generals McPherson, Schofield and Sheridan. Coming to Chicago the following year, he first found employment as an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, but later became assistant of Lieutenant-Colonel Graham in engineer service on the lakes; a year later took charge of a select school in Buffalo; in 1857 made the first surveys for the International Bridge at Niagara Falls, then went into the service of extensive locomotive and bridge-works at Trenton, N. J., in their interest making a visit to Cuba, and also superintending the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River. The war intervening, he returned North and was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General at Camp Denison, Ohio, but, in June, 1862, was commissioned Colonel of the Thirtieth Ohio Volunteers, participating in the West Virginia campaigns, and later, at Shiloh and Perryville. In April, 1862, he was promoted Brigadier-General of volunteers, commanding divisions in the Army of the Ohio until the fall of 1862, when he joined Grant and took part in the Vicksburg campaign, as commander of the First Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he was made Chief of the Cavalry Department, serving on the staffs of Grant and Sherman, until compelled to resign, in 1864, on account of impaired health. During the war General Smith rendered valuable service to the Union cause in great emergencies, by his knowledge of engineering. On retiring to private life he resumed his profession at Chicago, and since has been employed by the Government on some of its most stupendous works on the lakes, and has also planned several of the most important railroad bridges across the Missouri and other streams. He has been much consulted in reference to municipal engineering, and his name is connected with a number of the gigantic edifices in Chicago.

SMITHBORO, a village and railroad junction in Bond County, 3 miles east of Greenville. Population, 393; (1900), 314.

SNAPP, Henry, Congressman, born in Livingston County, N. Y., June 30, 1822, came to Illinois with his father when 11 years old, and, having read law at Joliet, was admitted to the bar in 1847. He practiced in Will County for twenty years before entering public life. In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate and occupied a seat in that body until his election, in 1871, to the Forty-second Congress, by the Republicans of the (then) Sixth Illinois District, as successor to B. C. Cook, who had resigned. Died, at Joliet, Nov. 23, 1895.

SNOW, Herman W., ex-Congressman, was born in La Porte County, Ind., July 3, 1836, but was reared in Kentucky, working upon a farm for five years, while yet in his minority becoming a resident of Illinois. For several years he was a school teacher, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. Early in the war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, rising to the rank of Captain. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he resumed teaching at the Chicago High School, and later served in the General Assembly (1873-74) as Representative from Woodford County. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Ninth Illinois District in Congress, but was defeated by his Republican opponent in 1892.

SNOWHOOE, William B., first Collector of Customs at Chicago, was born in Ireland in 1804; at the age of eight years was brought to New York, where he learned the printer's trade, and worked for some time in the same office with Horace Greeley. At 16 he went back to Ireland, remaining two years, but, returning to the United States, began the study of law; was also employed on the Passaic Canal; in 1836, came to Chicago, and was soon after associated with William B. Ogden in a contract on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, which lasted until 1841. As early as 1840 he became prominent as a leader in the Democratic party, and, in 1846, received from President Polk an appointment as first Collector of Customs for Chicago (having previously served as Special Surveyor of the Port, while attached to the District of Detroit); in 1853, was re-appointed to the Collectorship by President Pierce, serving two years. During the "Mormon War" (1844) he organized and equipped, at his own expense, the Montgomery Guards, and was commissioned Colonel, but the disturbances were brought to an end before the order to march. From 1856 he devoted his attention chiefly to his practice, but, in 1862, was one of the Democrats of Chicago who took part in a movement to sustain the Government by stimulating enlistments; was also a member of the Convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President in 1872. Died, in Chicago, May 5, 1882.

SNYDER, Adam Wilson, pioneer lawyer, and early Congressman, was born at Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 6, 1799. In early life he followed the occupation of wool-curling for a livelihood, attending school in the winter. In 1815, he emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, and afterwards settled in Ridge Prairie, St. Clair County, Ill. Being offered a situation in a wool-curling and fulling mill at Cahokia, he removed thither in 1817. He formed the friendship of Judge Jesse B. Thomas, and, through the latter's encouragement and aid, studied law and gained a solid professional, political, social and financial position. In 1830 he was elected State Senator from St. Clair County, and re-elected for two successive terms. He served through the Black Hawk War as private, Adjutant and Captain. In 1833 he removed to Belleville, and, in 1834, was defeated for Congress by Governor Reynolds, whom he, in turn, defeated in 1836. Two years later Reynolds again defeated him for the same position, and, in 1840, he was elected State Senator. In 1841 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. The election was held in August, 1842, but, in May preceding, he died at his home in Belleville. His place on the ticket was filled by Thomas Ford, who was elected.—William H. (Snyder), son of the preceding, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 12, 1825; educated at McKendree College, studied law with Lieutenant-Governor Koerner, and was admitted to practice in 1845; also served for a time as Postmaster of the city of Belleville, and, during the Mexican War, as First-Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Fifth Illinois Volunteers. From 1850 to '54 he represented his county in the Legislature; in 1855 was appointed, by Governor Matteson, State's Attorney, which position he filled for two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Secretary of State in 1856, and, in 1857, was elected a Judge of the Twenty-fourth Circuit, was re-elected for the Third Circuit in '73, '79 and '85. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 24, 1892.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, a State charitable institution, founded by act of the Legislature in 1885, and located at Quincy, Adams County. The object of its establishment was to provide a comfortable home for such disabled or dependent veterans of the United States land or naval forces as had honorably served during the Civil War. It was opened for the reception of veterans on March 3, 1887, the first cost of site and buildings having been about $350,000. The total number of inmates admitted up to June 30, 1894, was 2,813; the number in attendance during the two previous years 988, and the whole number present on Nov. 10, 1894, 1,088. The value of property at that time was $393,636.08. Considerable appropriations have been made for additions to the buildings at subsequent sessions of the Legislature. The General Government pays to the State $100 per year for each veteran supported at the Home.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS, an institution, created by act of 1865, for the maintenance and education of children of deceased soldiers of the Civil War. An eighty-acre tract, one mile north of Normal, was selected as the site, and the first principal building was completed and opened for the admission of beneficiaries on June 1, 1869. Its first cost was $135,000, the site having been donated. Repairs and the construction of new buildings, from time to time, have considerably increased this sum. In 1875 the benefits of the institution were extended, by legislative enactment, to the children of soldiers who had died after the close of the war. The aggregate number of inmates, in 1894, was 572, of whom 329 were males and 249 females.

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME. Provision was made for the establishment of this institution by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly, in an act, approved, June 13, 1895, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of a site, the erection of buildings and furnishing the same. It is designed for the reception and care of the mothers, wives, widows and daughters of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, in the United States service, as may have died, or may be physically or mentally unable to provide for the families naturally dependent on them, provided that such persons have been residents of the State for at least one year previous to admission, and are without means or ability for self-support.

The affairs of the Home are managed by a board of five trustees, of whom two are men and three women, the former to be members of the Grand Army of the Republic and of different political parties, and the latter members of the Women's Relief Corps of this State. The institution was located at Winington, occupying a site of seventeen acres, where it was formally opened in a house of eighteen rooms, March 11, 1896, with twenty-six applications for admittance. The plan contemplates an early enlargement by the erection of additional cottages.

SOREXTO, a village of Bond County, at the intersection of the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 14 miles southeast of Litchfield; has a bank and a newspaper. Its interests are agricultural and mining. Pop. (1890), 538; (1900), 1,000.

SOULARD, James Gaston, pioneer, born of French ancestry in St. Louis, Mo., July 15, 1798; resided there until 1821, when, having married the daughter of a soldier of the Revolution, he received an appointment at Fort Snelling, near the present city of St. Paul, then under command of Col. Snelling, who was his wife's brother-in-law. The Fort was reached after a tedious journey by flat-boat and overland, late in the fall of 1821, his wife accompanying him. Three years later they returned to St. Louis, where, being an engineer, he was engaged for several years in surveying. In 1827 he removed with his family to Galena, for the next six years had charge of a store of the Gratiot Brothers, early business men of that locality. Towards the close of this period he received the appointment of County Recorder, also holding the position of County Surveyor and Postmaster of Galena at the same time. His later years were devoted to farming and horticulture, his death taking place, Sept. 17, 1878. Mr. Soulard was probably the first man to engage in freighting between Galena and Chicago. "The Galena Advertiser" of Sept. 14, 1829, makes mention of a wagon-load of lead sent by him to Chicago, his team taking back a load of salt, the paper remarking: "This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi River to Chicago." Great results were predicted from the exchange of commodities between the lake and the lead mine district.—Mrs. Eliza M. Hunt (Soulard), wife of the preceding, was born at Detroit, Dec. 18, 1804, her father being Col. Thomas A. Hunt, who had taken part in the Battle of Bunker Hill and remained in the army until his death, at St. Louis, in 1807. His descendants have maintained their connection with the army ever since, a son being a prominent artillery officer at the Battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Soulard was married at St. Louis, in 1820, and survived her husband some sixteen years, dying at Galena, August 11, 1894. She had resided in Galena nearly seventy years, and at the date of her death, in the 90th year of her age, she was that city's oldest resident.

SOUTH CHICAGO & WESTERN INDIANA RAILROAD. (See Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad.)

SOUTH DANYILLE, a suburb of the city of Danville, Vermillion County. Population (1890), 799; (1900), 898.

SOUTHEAST & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville & Nashville Railroad.)

SOUTH ELGIN, a village of Kane County, near the city of Elgin. Population (1900), 515.

SOUTHERN COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, located at Albion, Edwards County, incorporated in 1891; had a faculty of ten teachers with 219 pupils (1897-98)—about equally male and female. Besides classical, scientific, normal, music and fine arts departments, instruction is given in preparatory studies and business education. Its property is valued at $16,500.

SOUTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, located at Anna, Union County, founded by act of the Legislature in 1869. The original site comprised 290 acres and cost a little more than $22,000, of which one-fourth was donated by citizens of the county. The construction of buildings was begun in 1869, but it was not until March, 1875, that the north wing (the first completed) was ready for occupancy. Other portions were completed a year later. The Trustees purchased 160 additional acres in 1883. The first cost (up to September, 1876) was nearly $635,000. In 1881 one wing of the main building was destroyed by fire, and was subsequently rebuilt; the patients being, meanwhile, cared for in temporary wooden barracks. The total value of lands and buildings belonging to the State, June 30, 1894, was estimated at $738,580, and, of property of all sorts, at $833,700. The wooden barracks were later converted into a permanent ward, additions made to the main buildings, a detached building for the accommodation of 300 patients erected, numerous outbuildings put up and general improvements made. A second fire on the night of Jan. 3, 1895, destroyed a large part of the main building, inflicting a loss upon the State of $175,000. Provision was made for rebuilding by the Legislature of that year. The institution has capacity for about 750 patients.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY, established in 1869, and located, after competitive bidding, at Carbondale, which offered lands and bonds at first estimated to be of the value of $229,000, but which later depreciated, through shrinkage, to $75,000. Construction was commenced in May, 1870, and the first or main building was completed and appropriately dedicated in July, 1874. Its cost was $265,000, but it was destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1883. In February, 1887, a new structure was completed at a cost of $150,000. Two normal courses of instruction are given—classical and scientific—each extending over a period of four years. The conditions of admission require that the pupil shall be 16 years of age, and shall possess the qualifications enabling him to pass examination for a second-grade teacher's certificate. Those unable to do so may enter a preparatory department for six months. Pupils who pledge themselves to teach in the public schools, not less than half the time of their attendance at the University, receive free tuition with a small charge for incidentals, while others pay a tuition fee. The number of students in attendance for the year 1897-98 was 720, coming from forty-seven counties, chiefly in the southern half of the State, with representatives from eight other States. The teaching faculty for the same year consisted, besides the President, of sixteen instructors in the various departments, of whom five were ladies and eleven gentlemen.

SOUTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, located near Chester, on the Mississippi River. Its erection was rendered necessary by the overcrowding of the Northern Penitentiary. (See Northern Penitentiary.) The law providing for its establishment required the Commissioners to select a site convenient of access, adjacent to stone and timber, and having a high elevation, with a never failing supply of water. In 1877, 122 acres were purchased at Chester, and the erection of buildings commenced. The first appropriation was of $200,000, and $300,000 was added in 1879. By March, 1878, 200 convicts were received, and their labor was utilized in the completion of the buildings, which are constructed upon approved modern principles. The prison receives convicts sent from the southern portion of the State, and has accommodation for some 1,200 prisoners. In connection with this penitentiary is an asylum for insane convicts, the erection of which was provided for by the Legislature in 1889.

SOUTH GROVE, a village of De Kalb County. Population (1890), 730.

SPALDING, Jesse, manufacturer. Collector of Customs and Street Railway President, was born at Athens, Bradford County, Pa., April 15, 1833; early commenced lumbering on the Susquehanna, and, at 23, began dealing on his own account. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and soon after bought the property of the New York Lumber Company at the mouth of the Menominee River in Wisconsin, where, with different partners, and finally practically alone, he has carried on the business of lumber manufacture on a large scale ever since. In 1881 he was appointed, by President Arthur, Collector of the Port of Chicago, and, in 1889, received from President Harrison an appointment as one of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Spalding was a zealous supporter of the Government during the War of the Rebellion and rendered valuable aid in the construction and equipment of Camp Douglas and the barracks at Chicago for the returning soldiers, receiving Auditor's warrants in payment, when no funds in the State treasury were available for the purpose. He was associated with William B. Ogden and others in the project for connecting Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay by a ship canal, which was completed in 1882, and, on the death of Mr. Ogden, succeeded to the Presidency of the Canal Company, serving until 1893, when the canal was turned over to the General Government. He has also been identified with many other public enterprises intimately connected with the development and prosperity of Chicago, and, in July, 1899, became President of the Chicago Union Traction Company, having control of the North and West Chicago Street Railway Systems.

SPALDING, John Lancaster, Catholic Bishop, was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840; educated in the United States and in Europe, ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in 1863, and thereupon attached to the cathedral at Louisville, as assistant. In 1869 he organized a congregation of colored people, and built for their use the Church of St. Augustine, having been assigned to that parish as pastor. Soon afterwards he was appointed Secretary to the Bishop and made Chancellor of the Diocese. In 1873 he was transferred from Louisville to New York, where he was attached to the missionary parish of St. Michael's. He had, by this time, achieved no little fame as a pulpit orator and lecturer. When the diocese of Peoria, Ill., was created, in 1877, the choice of the Pope fell upon him for the new see, and he was consecrated Bishop, on May 1 of that year, by Cardinal McCloskey at New York. His administration has been characterized by both energy and success. He has devoted much attention to the subject of emigration, and has brought about the founding of many new settlements in the far West. He was also largely instrumental in bringing about the founding of the Catholic University at Washington. He is a frequent contributor to the reviews, and the author of a number of religious works.

SPANISH INVASION OF ILLINOIS. In the month of June, 1779, soon after the declaration of war between Spain and Great Britain, an expedition was organized in Canada, to attack the Spanish posts along the Mississippi. Simultaneously, a force was to be dispatched from Pensacola against New Orleans, then commanded by a young Spanish Colonel, Don Bernardo de Galvez. Secret instructions had been sent to British Commandants, all through the Western country, to co-operate with both expeditions. De Galvez, having learned of the scheme through intercepted letters, resolved to forestall the attack by becoming the assailant. At the head of a force of 670 men, he set out and captured Baton Rouge, Fort Manchac and Natchez, almost without opposition. The British in Canada, being ignorant of what had been going on in the South, in February following dispatched a force from Mackinac to support the expedition from Pensacola, and, incidentally, to subdue the American rebels while en route. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were contemplated points of attack, as well as the Spanish forts at St. Louis and St. Genevieve. This movement was planned by Capt. Patrick Sinclair, commandant at Mackinac, but Captain Hesse was placed in charge of the expedition, which numbered some 750 men, including a force of Indians led by a chief named Wabasha. The British arrived before St. Louis, early on the morning of May 26, 1780, taking the Spaniards by surprise. Meanwhile Col. George Rogers Clark, having been apprised of the project, arrived at Cahokia from the falls of the Ohio, twenty-four hours in advance of the attack, his presence and readiness to co-operate with the Spanish, no doubt, contributing to the defeat of the expedition. The accounts of what followed are conflicting, the number of killed on the St. Louis shore being variously estimated from seven or eight to sixty-eight—the last being the estimate of Capt. Sinclair in his official report. All agree, however, that the invading party was forced to retreat in great haste. Colonel Montgomery, who had been in command at Cahokia, with a force of 350 and a party of Spanish allies, pursued the retreating invaders as far as the Rock River, destroying many Indian villages on the way. This movement on the part of the British served as a pretext for an attempted reprisal, undertaken by the Spaniards, with the aid of a number of Cahokians, early in 1781. Starting early in January, this latter expedition crossed Illinois, with the design of attacking Fort St. Joseph, at the head of Lake Michigan, which had been captured from the English by Thomas Brady and afterwards retaken. The Spaniards were commanded by Don Eugenio Pourre, and supported by a force of Cahokians and Indians. The fort was easily taken and the British flag replaced by the ensign of Spain. The affair was regarded as of but little moment, at the time, the post being evacuated in a few days, and the Spaniards returning to St. Louis. Yet it led to serious international complications, and the "conquest" was seriously urged by the Spanish ministry as giving that country a right to the territory traversed. This claim was supported by France before the signing of the Treaty of Paris, but was defeated, through the combined efforts of Messrs. Jay, Franklin and Adams, the American Commissioners in charge of the peace negotiations with England.

SPARKS, (Capt.) David R., manufacturer and legislator, was born near Lanesville, Ind., in 1823; in 1836, removed with his parents to Macoupin County, Ill.; in 1847, enlisted for the Mexican War, crossing the plains to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In 1850 he made the overland trip to California, returning the next year by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1855 he engaged in the milling business at Staunton, Macoupin County, but, in 1860, made a third trip across the plains in search of gold, taking a quartz-mill which was erected near where Central City, Colo., now is, and which was the second steam-engine in that region. He returned home in time to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President, the same year, but became a stalwart Republican, two weeks later, when the advocates of secession began to develop their policy after the election of Lincoln. In 1861 he enlisted, under the call for 500,000 volunteers following the first battle of Bull Run, and was commissioned a Captain in the Third Illinois Cavalry (Col. Eugene A. Carr), serving two and a half years, during which time he took part in several hard-fought battles, and being present at the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of his service he became associated with his former partner in the erection of a large flouring mill at Litchfield, but, in 1869, the firm bought an extensive flouring mill at Alton, of which he became the principal owner in 1881, and which has since been greatly enlarged and improved, until it is now one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the State. Capt. Sparks was elected to the House of Representatives in 1888, and to the State Senate in 1894, serving in the sessions of 1895 and '97; was also strongly supported as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in 1896.

SPARKS, William A. J., ex-Congressman, was born near New Albany, Ind., Nov. 19, 1828, at 8 years of age was brought by his parents to Illinois, and shortly afterwards left an orphan. Thrown on his own resources, he found work upon a farm, his attendance at the district schools being limited to the winter months. Later, he passed through McKendree College, supporting himself, meanwhile, by teaching, graduating in 1850. He read law with Judge Sidney Brees, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. His first public office was that of Receiver of the Land Office at Edwardsville, to which he was appointed by President Pierce in 1853, remaining until 1856, when he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. The same year he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1863-64, served in the State Senate for the unexpired term of James M. Rodgers, deceased. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1868, and a Democratic Representative in Congress from 1875 to 1883. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, retiring, by resignation, in 1887. His home is at Carlyle.

SPEED, Joshua Fry, merchant, and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln; was educated in the local schools and at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, Ky., after which he spent some time in a wholesale mercantile establishment in Louisville. About 1835 he came to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business, later becoming the intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he offered the privilege of sharing a room over his store, when Mr. Lincoln removed from New Salem to Springfield, in 1836. Mr. Speed returned to Kentucky in 1842, but the friendship with Mr. Lincoln, which was of a most devoted character, continued until the death of the latter. Having located in Jefferson County, Ky., Mr. Speed was elected to the Legislature in 1848, but was never again willing to accept office, though often solicited to do so. In 1851 he removed to Louisville, where he acquired a handsome fortune in the real-estate business. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he heartily embraced the cause of the Union, and, during the war, was entrusted with many delicate and important duties in the interest of the Government, by Mr. Lincoln, whom he frequently visited in Washington. His death occurred at Louisville, May 29, 1882.—JAMES (Speed), an older brother of the preceding, was a prominent Unionist of Kentucky, and, after the war, a leading Republican of that State, serving as delegate to the National Republican Conventions of 1872 and 1876. In 1864 he was appointed Attorney-General by Mr. Lincoln and served until 1866, when he resigned on account of disagreement with President Johnson. He died in 1887, at the age of 75 years.

SPOON RIVER, rises in Bureau County, flows southward through Stark County into Peoria, thence southwest through Knox, and to the south and southeast, through Fulton County, entering the Illinois River opposite Havana. It is about 150 miles long.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis, D.D., educator and Army Chaplain, born in Franklin County, Pa., March 19, 1810; was left an orphan at an early age, and educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg; entered the Lutheran ministry in 1836, and, in 1839, removed to Springfield, Ill., where he preached and taught school; in 1847 became President of Hillsboro College, which, in 1852, was removed to Springfield and became Illinois State University, now known as Concordia Seminary. Later, he served for a time as Superintendent of Schools for the city of Springfield, but, in September, 1861, resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry; by successive resignations and appointments, held the positions of Chaplain of the First Arkansas Infantry (1863-64) and Post Chaplain at Fort Smith, Ark., serving in the latter position until April, 1867, when he was commissioned Chaplain of the United States Army. This position he resigned while stationed at Fort Harker, Kan., August 23, 1867. During a considerable part of his incumbency as Chaplain at Fort Smith, he acted as Agent of the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen, performing important service in caring for non-combatants rendered homeless by the vicissitudes of war. After the war he served, for a time, as Superintendent of Schools for Montgomery County, Ill.; was instrumental in the founding of Carthage (Ill.) College, and was a member of its Board of Control at the time of his death. He was elected Chaplain of the Illinois House of Representatives at the session of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly (1887), and Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois for two consecutive terms (1890-'92). He was also member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Springfield, and served as its Chaplain from January, 1884, to his death, which occurred at Springfield, Oct. 21, 1892.

SPRINGER, William McKendree, ex-Congressman, Justice of United States Court, was born in Sullivan County, Ind., May 30, 1836. In 1848 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill., was fitted for college in the public high school at Jacksonville, under the tuition of the late Dr. Bateman, entered Illinois College, remaining three years, when he removed to the Indiana State University, graduating there in 1858. The following year he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Logan County, but soon after removed to Springfield. He entered public life as Secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1862. In 1871-'72 he represented Sangamon County in the Legislature, and, in 1874, was elected to Congress from the Thirteenth Illinois District as a Democrat. From that time until the close of the Fifty-third Congress (1895), he served in Congress continuously, and was recognized as one of the leaders of his party on the floor, being at the head of many important committees when that party was in the ascendancy, and a candidate for the Democratic caucus nomination for Speaker, in 1893. In 1894 he was the candidate of his party for Congress for the eleventh time, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, James A. Connolly. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him United States District Judge for Indian Territory.

SPRINGFIELD, the State capital, and the county-seat of Sangamon County, situated five miles south of the Sangamon River and 185 miles southwest of Chicago; is an important railway center. The first settlement on the site of the present city was made by John Kelly in 1819. On April 10, 1821, it was selected, by the first Board of County Commissioners, as the temporary county-seat of Sangamon County, the organization of which had been authorized by act of the Legislature in January previous, and the name Springfield was given to it. In 1823 the selection was made permanent. The latter year the first sale of lands took place, the original site being entered by Pascal P. Enos, Elijah Iles and Thomas Cox. The town was platted about the same time, and the name "Calhoun" was given to a section in the northwest quarter of the present city—this being the "hey-day" of the South Carolina statesman's greatest popularity—but the change was not popularly accepted, and the new name was soon dropped. It was incorporated as a town, April 2, 1832, and as a city, April 6, 1840; and re-incorporated, under the general law in 1882. It was made the State capital by act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1837, which went into effect, July 4, 1839, and the Legislature first convened there in December of the latter year. The general surface is flat, though there is rolling ground to the west. The city has excellent water-works, a paid fire-department, six banks, electric street railways, gas and electric lighting, commodious hotels, fine churches, numerous handsome residences, beautiful parks, thorough sewerage, and is one of the best paved and handsomest cities in the State. The city proper, in 1890, contained an area of four square miles, but has since been enlarged by the annexation of the following suburbs: North Springfield, April 7, 1891; West Springfield, Jan. 4, 1898; and South Springfield and the village of Laurel, April 5, 1898. These additions give to the present city an area of 5.84 square miles. The population of the original city, according to the census of 1880, was 19,743, and, in 1890, 24,963, while that of the annexed suburbs, at the last census, was 2,109—making a total of 29,072. The latest school census (1898) showed a total population of 33,375—population by census (1900), 34,159. Besides the State House, the city has a handsome United States Government Building for United States Court and post-office purposes, a county courthouse (the former State capitol), a city hall and (State) Executive Mansion. Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. His former residence has been donated to the State, and his tomb and monument are in the beautiful Oak Ridge cemetery, adjoining the city. Springfield is an important coal-mining center, and has many important industries, notably a watch factory, rolling mills, and extensive manufactories of agricultural implements and furniture. It is also the permanent location of the State Fairs, for which extensive buildings have been erected on the Fair Grounds north of the city. There are three daily papers—two morning and one evening—published here, besides various other publications. Pop. (1900), 34,159.

SPRING VALLEY, an incorporated city in Bureau County, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Toluca, Marquette & Northern Railways, 100 miles southwest of Chicago. It lies in a coal-mining region and has important manufacturing interests as well. It has two banks, electric street and interurban railways, and two newspapers. Population (1890, 3,887; (1900, 6,214.

ST. AGATHA'S SCHOOL, an institution for young ladies, at Springfield, under the patronage of the Bishop of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1889. It has a faculty of eight teachers giving instruction in the preparatory and higher branches, including music and fine arts. It reported fifty-five pupils in 1894, and real estate valued at $15,000.

ST. ALBAN'S ACADEMY, a boys' and young men's school at Knoxville, Ill., incorporated in 1896 under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; in 1898 had a faculty of seven teachers, with forty-five pupils, and property valued at $61,100, of which $54,000 was real estate. Instruction is given in the classical and scientific branches, besides music and preparatory studies.

ST. ANNE, a village of Kankakee County, at the crossing of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 60 miles south of Chicago. The town has two banks, tile and brick factory, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,000.

ST. CHARLES, a city in Kane County, on both sides of Fox River, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railways; 38 miles west of Chicago and 10 miles south of Elgin. The river furnishes excellent water-power, which is being utilized by a number of important manufacturing enterprises. The city is connected with Chicago and many towns in the Fox River valley by interurban electric trolley lines; is also the seat of the State Home for Boys. Pop. (1890), 1,690; (1900), 2,675.

ST. CLAIR, Arthur, first Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born of titled ancestry at Thurso, Scotland, in 1734; came to America in 1757 as an ensign, having purchased his commission, participated in the capture of Louisburg, Canada, in 1758, and fought under Wolfe at Quebec. In 1764 he settled in Pennsylvania, where he amassed a moderate fortune, and became prominent in public affairs. He served with distinction during the Revolutionary War, rising to the rank of Major-General, and succeeding General Gates in command at Ticonderoga, but, later, was censured by Washington for his hasty evacuation of the post, though finally vindicated by a military court. His Revolutionary record, however, was generally good, and even distinguished. He represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, and presided over that body in 1787. He served as Governor of the Northwest Territory (including the present State of Illinois) from 1789 to 1802. As an executive he was not successful, being unpopular because of his arbitrariness. In November, 1791, he suffered a serious defeat by the Indians in the valley between the Miami and the Wabash. In this campaign he was badly crippled by the gout, and had to be carried on a litter; he was again vindicated by a Congressional investigation. His first visit to the Illinois Country was made in 1790, when he organized St. Clair County, which was named in his honor. In 1802 President Jefferson removed him from the governorship of Ohio Territory, of which he had continued to be the Governor after its separation from Indiana and Illinois. The remainder of his life was spent in comparative penury. Shortly before his decease, he was granted an annuity by the Pennsylvania Legislature and by Congress. Died, at Greensburg, Pa., August 31, 1818.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, the first county organized within the territory comprised in the present State of Illinois—the whole region west of the Ohio River having been first placed under civil jurisdiction, under the name of "Illinois County," by an act of the Virginia House of Delegates, passed in October, 1778, a few months after the capture of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark. (See Illinois; also Clark, George Rogers.) St. Clair County was finally set off by an order of Gov. Arthur St. Clair, on occasion of his first visit to the "Illinois Country," in April, 1790—more than two years after his assumption of the duties of Governor of the Northwest Territory, which then comprehended the "Illinois Country" as well as the whole region within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Governor St. Clair's order, which bears date, April 27, 1790, defines the boundaries of the new county—which took his own name—as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michillimackinack River, running thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac upon the Ohio River; thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning, with all the adjacent islands of said rivers. Illinois and Mississippi." The "Little Michillimackanack," the initial point mentioned in this description—also variously spelled "Makina" and "Mackinaw," the latter being the name by which the stream is now known—empties into the Illinois River on the south side a few miles below Pekin, in Tazewell County. The boundaries of St. Clair County, as given by Gov. St. Clair, indicate the imperfect knowledge of the topography of the "Illinois Country" existing in that day, as a line drawn south from the mouth of the Mackinaw River, instead of reaching the Ohio "above Fort Massac," would have followed the longitude of the present city of Springfield, striking the Mississippi about the northwestern corner of Jackson County, twenty-five miles west of the mouth of the Ohio. The object of Governor St. Clair's order was, of course, to include the settled portions of the Illinois Country in the new county; and, if it had had the effect intended, the eastern border of the county would have followed a line some fifty miles farther eastward, along the eastern border of Marion, Jefferson, Franklin, Williamson and Johnson Counties, reaching the Ohio River about the present site of Metropolis City in Massac County, and embracing about one-half of the area of the present State of Illinois. For all practical purposes it embraced all the Illinois Country, as it included that portion in which the white settlements were located. (See St. Clair, Arthur; also Illinois Country.) The early records of St. Clair County are in the French language; its first settlers and its early civilization were French, and the first church to inculcate the doctrine of Christianity was the Roman Catholic. The first proceedings in court under the common law were had in 1796. The first Justices of the Peace were appointed in 1807, and, as there was no penitentiary, the whipping-post and pillory played an important part in the code of penalties, these punishments being impartially meted out as late as the time of Judge (afterwards Governor) Reynolds, to "the lame, the halt and the blind," for such offenses as the larceny of a silk handkerchief. At first three places—Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia—were named as county-seats by Governor St. Clair; but Randolph County having been set off in 1895, Cahokia became the county-seat of the older county, so remaining until 1813, when Belleville was selected as the seat of justice. At that time it was a mere cornfield owned by George Blair, although settlements had previously been established in Ridge Prairie and at Badgley. Judge Jesse B. Thomas held his first court in a log-cabin, but a rude court house was erected in 1814, and, the same year, George E. Blair established a hostelry, Joseph Kerr opened a store, and, in 1817, additional improvements were inaugurated by Daniel Murray and others, from Baltimore. John H. Dennis and the Mitchells and Wests (from Virginia) settled soon afterward, becoming farmers and mechanics. Belleville was incorporated in 1819. In 1825 Governor Edwards bought the large landed interests of Etienne Personeau, a large French land-owner, ordered a new survey of the town and infused fresh life into its development. Settlers began to arrive in large numbers, mainly Virginians, who brought with them their slaves, the right to hold which was, for many years, a fruitful and perennial source of strife. Emigrants from Germany began to arrive at an early day, and now a large proportion of the population of Belleville and St. Clair County is made up of that nationality. The county, as at present organized, lies on the western border of the south half of the State, immediately opposite St. Louis, and comprises some 680 square miles. Three-fourths of it are underlaid by a vein of coal, six to eight feet thick, and about one hundred feet below the surface. Considerable wheat is raised. The principal towns are Belleville, East St. Louis, Lebanon and Mascoutah. Population of the county (1880), 61,806; (1890), 66,571; (1900), 86,685.

ST. JOHN, an incorporated village of Perry County, on the Illinois Central Railway, one mile north of Duquoin. Coal is mined and salt manufactured here. Population about 500.

ST. JOSEPH, a village of Champaign County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 10 miles east of Champaign; has inter-urban railroad connection. Pop. (1900), 637.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL, (Chicago), founded in 1860, by the Sisters of Charity. Having been destroyed in the fire of 1871, it was rebuilt in the following year. In 1892 it was reconstructed, enlarged and made thoroughly modern in its appointments. It can accommodate about 250 patients. The Sisters attend to the nursing, and conduct the domestic and financial affairs. The medical staff comprises ten physicians and surgeons, among whom are some of the most eminent in Chicago.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD, a corporation formerly operating an extensive system of railroads in Illinois. The Terre Haute & Alton Railroad Company (the original corporation) was chartered in January, 1851, work begun in 1852, and the main line from Terre Haute to Alton (172.5 miles) completed, March 1, 1856. The Belleville & Illinoistown branch (from Belleville to East St. Louis) was chartered in 1852, and completed between the points named in the title, in the fall of 1854. This corporation secured authority to construct an extension from Illinoistown (now East St. Louis) to Alton, which was completed in October, 1856, giving the first railroad connection between Alton & St. Louis. Simultaneously with this, these two roads (the Terre Haute & Alton and the Belleville & Illinoistown) were consolidated under a single charter by special act of the Legislature in February, 1854, the consolidated line taking the name of the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad. Subsequently the road became financially embarrassed, was sold under foreclosure and reorganized, in 1862, under the name of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad. June 1, 1867, the main line (from Terre Haute to St. Louis) was leased for ninety-nine years to the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railway Company (an Indiana corporation) guaranteed by certain other lines, but the lease was subsequently broken by the insolvency of the lessee and some of the guarantors. The Indianapolis & St. Louis went into the hands of a receiver in 1882, and was sold under foreclosure, in July of the same year, its interest being absorbed by the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which the main line is now operated. The properties officially reported as remaining in the hands of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, June 30, 1895, beside the Belleville Branch (14.40 miles), included the following leased and subsidiary lines: Belleville & Southern Illinois—"Cairo Short Line" (56.40 miles); Belleville & Eldorado, (50.20 miles); Belleville & Carondelet (17.30 miles); St. Louis Southern and branches (47.27 miles), and Chicago, St. Louis & Paducah Railway (53.50 miles). All these have been leased, since the close of the fiscal year 1895, to the Illinois Central. (For sketches of these several roads see headings of each.)

ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO & ST. PAUL RAILROAD, (Bluff Line), a line running from Springfield to Granite City, Ill., (opposite St. Louis), 102.1 miles, with a branch from Lock Haven to Grafton, Ill., 8.4 miles—total length of line in Illinois, 110.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge, laid with 56 to 70-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The road was originally incorporated under the name of the St. Louis, Jerseyville & Springfield Railroad, built from Bates to Grafton in 1882, and absorbed by the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company; was surrendered by the receivers of the latter in 1886, and passed under the control of the bond-holders, by whom it was transferred to a corporation known as the St. Louis & Central Illinois Railroad Company. In June, 1887, the St. Louis, Alton & Springfield Railroad Company was organized, with power to build extensions from Newbern to Alton, and from Bates to Springfield, which was done. In October, 1890, a receiver was appointed, followed by a reorganization under the present name (St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul). Default was made on the interest and, in June following, it was again placed in the hands of receivers, by whom it was operated until 1898. The total earnings and income for the fiscal year 1897-98 were $318,815, operating expenses, $373,270; total capitalization, $4,853,526, of which, $1,500,000 was in the form of stock and $1,235,000 in income bonds.

ST. LOUIS, INDIANAPOLIS & EASTERN RAILROAD, a railroad line 90 miles in length, extending from Switz City, Ind., to Effingham, Ill.—56 miles being within the State of Illinois. It is of standard gauge and the track laid chiefly with iron rails.—(HISTORY.) The original corporation was chartered in 1869 as the Springfield, Effingham & Quincy Railway Company. It was built as a narrow-gauge line by the Cincinnati, Effingham & Quincy Construction Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in 1878. The road was completed by the receiver in 1880, and, in 1885, restored to the Construction Company by the discharge of the receiver. For a short time it was operated in connection with the Bloomfield Railroad of Indiana, but was reorganized in 1886 as the Indiana & Illinois Southern Railroad, and the gauge changed to standard in 1887. Having made default in the payment of interest, it was sold under foreclosure in 1890 and purchased in the interest of the bond-holders, by whom it was conveyed to the St. Louis, Indianapolis & Eastern Railroad Company, in whose name the line is operated. Its business is limited, and chiefly local. The total earnings in 1898 were $65,583 and the expenditures $69,112. Its capital stock was $740,900; bonded debt, $978,000, other indebtedness increasing the total capital investment to $1,816,736.

ST. LOUIS, PEORIA & NORTHERN RAILWAY, known as "Peoria Short Line," a corporation organized, Feb. 29, 1896, to take over and unite the properties of the St. Louis & Eastern, the St. Louis & Peoria and the North and South Railways, and to extend the same due north from Springfield to Peoria (60 miles), and thence to Fulton or East Clinton, Ill., on the Upper Mississippi. The line extends from Springfield to Glen Carbon (84.46 miles), with trackage facilities over the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad and the Merchants' Terminal Bridge (18 miles) to St. Louis.—(HISTORY.) This road has been made up of three sections or divisions. (1) The initial section of the line was constructed under the name of the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad of Illinois, incorporated in 1885, and opened from Mount Olive to Alhambra in 1887. It passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1889, and reorganized, in 1890, as the St. Louis & Peoria Railroad. The St. Louis & Eastern, chartered in 1889, built the line from Glen Carbon to Marine, which was opened in 1893; the following year, bought the St. Louis & Peoria line, and, in 1895, constructed the link (8 miles) between Alhambra and Marine. (3) The North & South Railroad Company of Illinois, organized in 1890, as successor to the St. Louis & Chicago Railway Company, proceeded in the construction of the line (50.46 miles) from Mt. Olive to Springfield, which was subsequently leased to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, then under the management of the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railway. The latter corporation having defaulted, the property passed into the hands of a receiver. By expiration of the lease in December, 1896, the property reverted to the proprietary Company, which took possession, Jan. 1, 1896. The St. Louis & Southeastern then bought the line outright, and it was incorporated as a part of the new organization under the name of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway, the North & South Railroad going out of existence. In May, 1899, the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern was sold to the reorganized Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, to be operated as a short line between Peoria & St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, ROCK ISLAND & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS SOUTHERN RAILROAD, a line running from Pinckneyville, Ill., via Murphysboro, to Carbondale. The company is also the lessee of the Carbondale & Shawneetown Railroad, extending from Carbondale to Marion, 17.5 miles—total, 50.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid with 56 and 60-pound steel rails. The company was organized in August, 1886, to succeed to the property of the St. Louis Coal Railroad (organized in 1879) and the St. Louis Central Railway; and was leased for 980 years from Dec. 1, 1886, to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, at an annual rental equal to thirty per cent of the gross earnings, with a minimum guarantee of $32,000, which is sufficient to pay the interest on the first mortgage bonds. During the year 1896 this line passed under lease from the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD & VINCENNES RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation organized in July, 1899, to take over the property of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway in the State of Illinois, known as the Ohio & Mississippi and the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railways—the former extending from Vincennes, Ind., to East St. Louis, and the latter from Beardstown to Shawneetown. The property was sold under foreclosure, at Cincinnati, July 10, 1899, and transferred, for purposes of reorganization, into the hands of the new corporation, July 28, 1899. (For history of the several lines see Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway.)

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. This line extends from East St. Louis eastward across the State, to the Indiana State line, a distance of 158.3 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company is the lessee. The track is single, of standard gauge, and laid with steel rails. The outstanding capital stock, in 1898, was $3,924,058, the bonded debt, $4,496,000, and the floating debt, $218,480.—(HISTORY.) The St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute Railroad was chartered in 1865, opened in 1870 and leased to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, for itself and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

ST. LOUIS & CAIRO RAILROAD, extends from East St. Louis to Cairo, Ill., 151.6 miles, with a branch from Millstadt Junction to High Prairie, 9 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid mainly with steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The original charter was granted to the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company, Feb. 16, 1865, and the road opened, March 1, 1875. Subsequently it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, July 14, 1881, and was taken charge of by a new company under its present name, Feb. 1, 1882. On Feb. 1, 1886, it was leased to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for forty-five years, and now constitutes the Illinois Division of that line, giving it a connection with St. Louis. ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, located in Chicago. It was chartered in 1865, its incorporators, in their initial statement, substantially declaring their object to be the establishment of a free hospital under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which should be open to the afflicted poor, without distinction of race or creed. The hospital was opened on a small scale, but steadily increased until 1879, when re-incorporation was effected under the general law. In 1885 a new building was erected on land donated for that purpose, at a cost exceeding $150,000, exclusive of $20,000 for furnishing. While its primary object has been to afford accommodation, with medical and surgical care, gratuitously, to the needy poor, the institution also provides a considerable number of comfortable, well-furnished private rooms for patients who are able and willing to pay for the same. It contains an amphitheater for surgical operations and clinics, and has a free dispensary for out-patients. During the past few years important additions have been made, the number of beds increased, and provision made for a training school for nurses. The medical staff (1896) consists of thirteen physicians and surgeons and two pathologists.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, a young ladies' seminary, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, at Knoxville, Knox County, Ill.; was incorporated in 1858, in 1898 had a faculty of fourteen teachers, giving instruction to 113 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, the sciences, fine arts, music and preparatory studies. The institution has a library of 2,300 volumes, and owns property valued at $130,500, of which $100,000 is real estate.

STAGER, Anson, soldier and Telegraph Superintendent, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., April 20, 1835; at 16 years of age entered the service of Henry O'Reilly, a printer who afterwards became a pioneer in building telegraph lines, and with whom he became associated in various enterprises of this character. Having introduced several improvements in the construction of batteries and the arrangement of wires, he was, in 1852, made General Superintendent of the principal lines in the West, and, on the organization of the Western Union Company, was retained in this position. Early in the Civil War he was entrusted with the management of telegraph lines in Southern Ohio and along the Virginia border, and, in October following, was appointed General Superintendent of Government telegraphs, remaining in this position until September, 1868, his services being recognized in his promotion to a brevet Brigadier-Generalship of Volunteers. In 1869 General Stager returned to Chicago and, in addition to his duties as General Superintendent, engaged in the promotion of a number of enterprises connected with the manufacture of electrical appliances and other branches of the business. One of these was the consolidation of the telephone companies, of which he became President, as also of the Western Edison Electric Light Company, besides being a Director in several other corporations. Died, in Chicago, March 26, 1885.

STANDISH, John Van Ness, a lineal descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, the Pilgrim leader, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 26, 1825. His early years were spent on a farm, but a love of knowledge and books became his ruling passion, and he devoted several years to study, in the "Liberal Institute" at Lebanon, N. H., finally graduating, with the degree of A. B., at Norwich University in the class of 1847. Later, he received the degree of A. M., in due course, from his Alma Mater in 1855; that of Ph.D. from Knox College, in 1883, of LL.D. from St. Lawrence University in 1893, and from Norwich, in 1898. Dr. Standish chose the profession of a teacher, and has spent over fifty years in its pursuit in connection with private and public schools and the College, of which more than forty years were as Professor and President of Lombard University at Galesburg. He has also lectured and conducted Teachers' Institutes all over the State, and, in 1859, was elected President of the State Teachers' Association. He made three visits to the Old World—in 1879, '82-83, and '91-92—and, during his second trip, traveled over 40,000 miles, visiting nearly every country of Europe, including the "Land of the Midnight Sun," besides Northern Africa from the Mediterranean to the Desert of Sahara, Egypt, Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor. A lover of art, he has visited nearly all the principal museums and picture galleries of the world. In politics he is a Republican, and, in opposition to many college men, a firm believer in the doctrine of protection. In religion, he is a Universalist.

STAPP, James T. B., State Auditor, was born in Woodford County, Ky., April 13, 1804; at the age of 12 accompanied his widowed mother to Kaskaskia, Ill., where she settled; before he was 20 years old, was employed as a clerk in the office of the State Auditor, and, upon the resignation of that officer, was appointed his successor, being twice thereafter elected by the Legislature, serving nearly five years. He resigned the auditorship to accept the Presidency of the State Bank at Vandalia, which post he filled for thirteen years; acted as Aid-de-camp on Governor Reynolds' staff in the Black Hawk War, and served as Adjutant of the Third Illinois Volunteers during the war with Mexico. President Taylor appointed Mr. Stapp Receiver of the United States Land Office at Vandalia, which office he held during the Fillmore administration, resigning in 1855. Two years later he removed to Decatur, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. A handsome Methodist chapel, erected by him in that city, bears his name.

STARK COUNTY, an interior county in the northern half of the State, lying west of the Illinois River; has an area of 290 square miles. It has a rich, alluvial soil, well watered by numerous small streams. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, and the chief towns are Toulon and Wyoming. The county was erected from Putnam and Knox in 1839, and named in honor of General Stark, of Revolutionary fame. The earliest settler was Isaac B. Essex, who built a cabin on Spoon River, in 1828, and gave his name to a township. Of other pioneer families, the Buswells, Smiths, Spencers and Eastmans came from New England, the Thomases, Moores, Holgates, Fullers and Whittakers from Pennsylvania; the Coxes from Ohio; the Perrys and Parkers from Virginia; the McClanahans from Kentucky; the Hendersons from Tennessee; the Lees and Hazens from New Jersey; the Halls from England, and the Turnbells and Olivers from Scotland. The pioneer church was the Congregational at Toulon. Population (1880), 11,207; (1890), 9,982; (1900), 10,186.

STARVED ROCK, a celebrated rock or cliff on the south side of Illinois River, in La Salle County, upon which the French explorer, La Salle, and his lieutenant, Tonty, erected a fort in 1682, which they named Fort St. Louis. It was one mile north of the supposed location of the Indian village of La Vantum, the metropolis, so to speak, of the Illinois Indians about the time of the arrival of the first French explorers. The population of this village, in 1680, according to Father Membre, was some seven or eight thousand. Both La Vantum and Fort St. Louis were repeatedly attacked by the Iroquois. The Illinois were temporarily driven from La Vantum, but the French, for the time being, successfully defended their fortification. In 1702 the fort was abandoned as a military post, but continued to be used as a French trading-post until 1718, when it was burned by Indians. The Illinois were not again molested until 1722, when the Foxes made an unsuccessful attack upon them. The larger portion of the tribe, however, resolved to cast in their fortunes with other tribes on the Mississippi River. Those who remained fell an easy prey to the foes by whom they were surrounded. In 1769 they were attacked from the north by tribes who desired to avenge the murder of Pontiac. Finding themselves hard pressed, they betook themselves to the bluff where Fort St. Louis had formerly stood. Here they were besieged for twelve days, when, destitute of food or water, they made a gallant but hopeless sortie. According to a tradition handed down among the Indians, all were massacred by the besiegers in an attempt to escape by night, except one half-breed, who succeeded in evading his pursuers. This sanguinary catastrophe has given the rock its popular name. Elmer Baldwin, in his History of La Salle County (1877), says: "The bones of the victims lay scattered about the cliff in profusion after the settlement by the whites, and are still found mingled plentifully with the soil." (See La Salle, Robert Cavalier; Tonty; Fort St. Louis.)

STARNE, Alexander, Secretary of State and State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21, 1813; in the spring of 1836 removed to Illinois, settling at Griggsville, Pike County, where he opened a general store. From 1839 to '42 he served as Commissioner of Pike County, and, in the latter year, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and re-elected in 1844. Having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his store at Griggsville and removed to Pittsfield, he was appointed, by Judge Purple, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and elected to the same office for four years, when it was made elective. In 1852 he was elected Secretary of State, when he removed to Springfield, returning to Griggsville at the expiration of his term, in 1857, to assume the Presidency of the old Hannibal and Naples Railroad (now a part of the Wabash system). He represented Pike and Brown Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and the same year was elected State Treasurer. He thereupon again removed to Springfield, where he resided until his death, being, with his sons, extensively engaged in coal mining. In 1870, and again in 1872, he was elected State Senator from Sangamon County. He died at Springfield, March 31, 1886.

STATE BANK OF ILLINOIS. The first legislation, having for its object the establishment of a bank within the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois, was the passage, by the Territorial Legislature of 1816, of an act incorporating the "Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, with branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia." In the Second General Assembly of the State (1820) an act was passed, over the Governor's veto and in defiance of the adverse judgment of the Council of Revision, establishing a State Bank at Vandalia with branches at Shawneetown, Edwardsville, and Brownsville in Jackson County. This was, in effect, a rechartering of the banks at Shawneetown and Edwardsville. So far as the former is concerned, it seems to have been well managed; but the official conduct of the officers of the latter, on the basis of charges made by Governor Edwards in 1826, was made the subject of a legislative investigation, which (although it resulted in nothing) seems to have had some basis of fact, in view of the losses finally sustained in winding up its affairs—that of the General Government amounting to $54,000. Grave charges were made in this connection against men who were then, or afterwards became, prominent in State affairs, including one Justice of the Supreme Court and one (still later) a United States Senator. The experiment was disastrous, as, ten years later (1831), it was found necessary for the State to incur a debt of $100,000 to redeem the outstanding circulation. Influenced, however, by the popular demand for an increase in the "circulating medium," the State continued its experiment of becoming a stockholder in banks managed by its citizens, and accordingly we find it, in 1835, legislating in the same direction for the establishing of a central "Bank of Illinois" at Springfield, with branches at other points as might be required, not to exceed six in number. One of these branches was established at Vandalia and another at Chicago, furnishing the first banking institution of the latter city. Two years later, when the State was entering upon its scheme of internal improvement, laws were enacted increasing the capital stock of these banks to $4,000,000 in the aggregate. Following the example of similar institutions elsewhere, they suspended specie payments a few months later, but were protected by "stay laws" and other devices until 1842, when the internal improvement scheme having been finally abandoned, they fell in general collapse. The State ceased to be a stock-holder in 1843, and the banks were put in course of liquidation, though it required several years to complete the work.

STATE CAPITALS. The first State capital of Illinois was Kaskaskia, where the first Territorial Legislature convened, Nov. 25, 1812. At that time there were but five counties in the State—St. Clair and Randolph being the most important, and Kaskaskia being the county-seat of the latter. Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State in 1818, and the first Constitution provided that the seat of government should remain at Kaskaskia until removed by legislative enactment. That instrument, however, made it obligatory upon the Legislature, at its first session, to petition Congress for a grant of not more than four sections of land, on which should be erected a town, which should remain the seat of government for twenty years. The petition was duly presented and granted; and, in accordance with the power granted by the Constitution, a Board of five Commissioners selected the site of the present city of Vandalia, then a point in the wilderness twenty miles north of any settlement. But so great was the faith of speculators in the future of the proposed city, that town lots were soon selling at $100 to $750 each. The Commissioners, in obedience to law, erected a plain two-story frame building—scarcely more than a commodious shanty—to which the State offices were removed in December, 1820. This building was burned, Dec. 9, 1823, and a brick structure erected in its place. Later, when the question of a second removal of the capital began to be agitated, the citizens of Vandalia assumed the risk of erecting a new, brick State House, costing $16,000. Of this amount $6,000 was reimbursed by the Governor from the contingent fund, and the balance ($10,000) was appropriated in 1837, when the seat of government was removed to Springfield, by vote of the Tenth General Assembly on the fourth ballot. The other places receiving the principal vote at the time of the removal to Springfield, were Jacksonville, Vandalia, Peoria, Alton and Illiopolis—Springfield receiving the largest vote at each ballot. The law removing the capital appropriated $50,000 from the State Treasury, provided that a like amount should be raised by private subscription and guaranteed by bond, and that at least two acres of land should be donated as a site. Two State Houses have been erected at Springfield, the first cost of the present one (including furnishing) having been a little in excess of $4,000,000. Abraham Lincoln, who was a member of the Legislature from Sangamon County at the time, was an influential factor in securing the removal of the capital to Springfield.

STATE DEBT. The State debt, which proved so formidable a burden upon the State of Illinois for a generation, and, for a part of that period, seriously checked its prosperity, was the direct outgrowth of the internal improvement scheme entered upon in 1837. (See Internal Improvement Policy.) At the time this enterprise was undertaken the aggregate debt of the State was less than $400,000—accumulated within the preceding six years. Two years later (1838) it had increased to over $6,500,000, while the total valuation of real and personal property, for the purposes of taxation, was less than $60,000,000, and the aggregate receipts of the State treasury, for the same year, amounted to less than $150,000. At the same time, the disbursements, for the support of the State Government alone, had grown to more than twice the receipts. This disparity continued until the declining credit of the State forced upon the managers of public affairs an involuntary economy, when the means could no longer be secured for more lavish expenditures. The first bonds issued at the inception of the internal improvement scheme sold at a premium of 5 per cent, but rapidly declined until they were hawked in the markets of New York and London at a discount, in some cases falling into the hands of brokers who failed before completing their contracts, thus causing a direct loss to the State. If the internal improvement scheme was ill-advised, the time chosen to carry it into effect was most unfortunate, as it came simultaneously with the panic of 1837, rendering the disaster all the more complete. Of the various works undertaken by the State, only the Illinois & Michigan Canal brought a return, all the others resulting in more or less complete loss. The internal improvement scheme was abandoned in 1839-40, but not until State bonds exceeding $13,000,000 had been issued. For two years longer the State struggled with its embarrassments, increased by the failure of the State Bank in February, 1842, and, by that of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, a few months later, with the proceeds of more than two and a half millions of the State's bonds in their possession. Thus left without credit, or means even of paying the accruing interest, there were those who regarded the State as hopelessly bankrupt, and advocated repudiation as the only means of escape. Better counsels prevailed, however; the Constitution of 1848 put the State on a basis of strict economy in the matter of salaries and general expenditures, with restrictions upon the Legislature in reference to incurring indebtedness, while the beneficent "two-mill tax" gave assurance to its creditors that its debts would be paid. While the growth of the State, in wealth and population, had previously been checked by the fear of excessive taxation, it now entered upon a new career of prosperity, in spite of its burdens—its increase in population, between 1850 and 1860, amounting to over 100 per cent. The movement of the State debt after 1840—when the internal improvement scheme was abandoned—chiefly by accretions of unpaid interest, has been estimated as follows: 1842, $15,637,950; 1844, $14,633,969; 1846, $16,389,817; 1848, $16,661,795. It reached its maximum in 1853—the first year of Governor Matteson's administration—when it was officially reported at $16,724,177. At this time the work of extinguishment began, and was prosecuted under successive administrations, except during the war, when the vast expense incurred in sending troops to the field caused an increase. During Governor Bissell's administration, the reduction amounted to over $3,000,000; during Oglesby's, to over five and a quarter million, besides two and a quarter million paid on interest. In 1880 the debt had been reduced to $281,059.11, and, before the close of 1882, it had been entirely extinguished, except a balance of $18,500 in bonds, which, having been called in years previously and never presented for payment, are supposed to have been lost. (See Macalister and Stebbins Bonds.)

STATE GUARDIANS FOR GIRLS, a bureau organized for the care of female juvenile delinquents, by act of June 2, 1893. The Board consists of seven members, nominated by the Executive and confirmed by the Senate, and who constitute a body politic and corporate. Not more than two of the members may reside in the same Congressional District and, of the seven members, four must be women. (See also Home for Female Juvenile Offenders.) The term of office is six years.

STATE HOUSE, located at Springfield. Its construction was begun under an act passed by the Legislature in February, 1867, and completed in 1887. It stands in a park of about eight acres, donated to the State by the citizens of Springfield. A provision of the State Constitution of 1870 prohibited the expenditure of any sum in excess of $3,500,000 in the erection and furnishing of the building, without previous approval of such additional expenditure by the people. This amount proving insufficient, the Legislature, at its session of 1885, passed an act making an additional appropriation of $531,712, which having been approved by popular vote at the general election of 1886, the expenditure was made and the capitol completed during the following year, thus raising the total cost of construction and furnishing to a little in excess of $4,000,000. The building is cruciform as to its ground plan, and classic in its style of architecture: its extreme dimensions (including porticoes), from north to south, being 379 feet, and, from east to west, 286 feet. The walls are of dressed Joliet limestone, while the porticoes, which are spacious and lofty, are of sandstone, supported by polished columns of gray granite. The three stories of the building are surmounted by a Mansard roof, with two turrets and a central dome of stately dimensions. Its extreme height, to the top of the iron flag-staff, which rises from a lantern springing from the dome, is 364 feet.

STATE NORMAL UNIVERSITY, an institution for the education of teachers, organized under an act of the General Assembly, passed Feb. 18, 1857. This act placed the work of organization in the hands of a board of fifteen persons, which was styled "The Board of Education of the State of Illinois," and was constituted as follows: C. B. Denio of Jo Daviess County; Simeon Wright of Lee; Daniel Wilkins of McLean; Charles E. Hovey of Peoria; George P. Rex of Pike; Samuel W. Moulton of Shelby; John Gillespie of Jasper; George Bunsen of St. Clair; Wesley Sloan of Pope; Ninian W. Edwards of Sangamon; John R. Eden of Moultrie; Flavell Moseley and William Wells of Cook; Albert R. Shannon of White; and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-officio. The object of the University, as defined in the organizing law, is to qualify teachers for the public schools of the State, and the course of instruction to be given embraces "the art of teaching, and all branches which pertain to a common-school education; in the elements of the natural sciences, including agricultural chemistry, animal and vegetable physiology; in the fundamental laws of the United States and of the State of Illinois in regard to the rights and duties of citizens, and such other studies as the Board of Education may, from time to time, prescribe." Various cities competed for the location of the institution, Bloomington being finally selected, its bid, including 160 acres of land, being estimated as equivalent to $141,725. The corner-stone was laid on September 29, 1857, and the first building was ready for permanent occupancy in September, 1860. Previously, however, it had been sufficiently advanced to permit of its being used, and the first commencement exercises were held on June 29 of the latter year. Three years earlier, the academic department had been organized under the charge of Charles E. Hovey. The first cost, including furniture, etc., was not far from $200,000. Gratuitous instruction is given to two pupils from each county, and to three from each Senatorial District. The departments are: Grammar school, high school, normal department and model school, all of which are overcrowded. The whole number of students in attendance on the institution during the school year, 1897-98, was 1,197, of whom 891 were in the normal department and 306 in the practice school department, including representatives from 86 counties of the State, with a few pupils from other States on the payment of tuition. The teaching faculty (including the President and Librarian) for the same year, was made up of twenty-six members—twelve ladies and fourteen gentlemen. The expenditures for the year 1897-98 aggregated $47,626.92, against $66,528.69 for 1896-97. Nearly $22,000 of the amount expended during the latter year was on account of the construction of a gymnasium building.

STATE PROPERTY. The United States Census of 1890 gave the value of real and personal property belonging to the State as follows: Public lands, $328,000; buildings, $22,164,000; miscellaneous property, $2,650,000—total, $25,142,000. The land may be subdivided thus: Camp-grounds of the Illinois National Guard near Springfield (donated), $40,000; Illinois and Michigan Canal, $168,000; Illinois University lands, in Illinois (donated by the General Government), $41,000, in Minnesota (similarly donated), $79,000. The buildings comprise those connected with the charitable, penal and educational institutions of the State, besides the State Arsenal, two buildings for the use of the Appellate Courts (at Ottawa and Mount Vernon), the State House, the Executive Mansion, and locks and dams erected at Henry and Copperas Creek. Of the miscellaneous property, $120,000 represents the equipment of the Illinois National Guard; $1,959,000 the value of the movable property of public buildings; $550,000 the endowment fund of the University of Illinois; and $21,000 the movable property of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The figures given relative to the value of the public buildings include only the first appropriations for their erection. Considerable sums have since been expended upon some of them in repairs, enlargements and improvements.

STATE TREASURERS. The only Treasurer of Illinois during the Territorial period was John Thomas, who served from 1812 to 1818, and became the first incumbent under the State Government. Under the Constitution of 1818 the Treasurer was elected, biennially, by joint vote of the two Houses of the General Assembly; by the Constitution of 1848, this officer was made elective by the people for the same period, without limitations as to number of terms; under the Constitution of 1870, the manner of election and duration of term are unchanged, but the incumbent is ineligible to re-election, for two years from expiration of the term for which he may have been chosen. The following is a list of the State Treasurers, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: John Thomas, 1818-19; Robert K. McLaughlin, 1819-23; Abner Field, 1823-27; James Hall, 1827-31; John Dement, 1831-36; Charles Gregory, 1836-37; John D. Whiteside, 1837-41; Milton Carpenter, 1841-48; John Moore, 1848-57; James Miller, 1857-59; William Butler, 1859-63; Alexander Starne, 1863-65; James H. Beveridge, 1865-67; George W. Smith, 1867-69; Erastus N. Bates, 1869-73; Edward Rutz, 1873-75; Thomas S. Ridgway, 1875-77; Edward Rutz, 1877-79; John C. Smith, 1879-81; Edward Rutz, 1881-83, John C. Smith, 1883-85; Jacob Gross,

STAUNTON, a village in the southeast corner of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways; is 36 miles northeast of St. Louis, and 14 miles southwest of Litchfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the industries of the surrounding region. Staunton has two banks, eight churches and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,358; (1890), 2,209; (1900), 2,786.

STEEL PRODUCTION. In the manufacture of steel, Illinois has long ranked as the second State in the Union in the amount of its output, and, during the period between 1880 and 1890, the increase in production was 241 per cent. In 1880 there were but six steel works in the State; in 1890 these had increased to fourteen; and the production of steel of all kinds (in tons of 2,000 pounds) had risen from 254,569 tons to 868,250. Of the 3,837,039 tons of Bessemer steel ingots, or direct castings, produced in the United States in 1890, 23 per cent were turned out in Illinois, nearly all the steel produced in the State being made by that process. From the tonnage of ingots, as given above, Illinois produced 622,260 pounds of steel rails,—more than 30 per cent of the aggregate for the entire country. This fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as the competition in the manufacture of Bessemer steel rails, since 1880, has been so great that many rail mills have converted their steel into forms other than rails, experience having proved their production to any considerable extent, during the past few years, unprofitable except in works favorably located for obtaining cheap raw material, or operated under the latest and most approved methods of manufacture. Open-hearth steel is no longer made in Illinois, but the manufacture of crucible steel is slightly increasing, the output in 1890 being 445 tons, as against 130 in 1880. For purposes requiring special grades of steel the product of the crucible process will be always in demand, but the high cost of manufacture prevents it, in a majority of instances, from successfully competing in price with the other processes mentioned.

STEPHENSON, Benjamin, pioneer and early politician, came to Illinois from Kentucky in 1809, and was appointed the first Sheriff of Randolph County by Governor Edwards under the Territorial Government; afterwards served as a Colonel of Illinois militia during the War of 1812; represented Illinois Territory as Delegate in Congress, 1814-16, and, on his retirement from Congress, became Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, finally dying at Edwardsville—Col. James W. (Stephenson), a son of the preceding, was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, afterwards became a prominent politician in the northwestern part of the State, served as Register of the Land Office at Galena and, in 1838, received the Democratic nomination for Governor, but withdrew before the election.

STEPHENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin, physician and soldier, was born in Wayne County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1822, and accompanied his parents, in 1825, to Sangamon County, where the family settled. His early educational advantages were meager, and he did not study his profession (medicine) until after reaching his majority, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1850. He began practice at Petersburg, but, in April, 1862, was mustered into the volunteer army as Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. After a little over two years service he was mustered out in June, 1864, when he took up his residence in Springfield, and, for a year, was engaged in the drug business there. In 1865 he resumed professional practice. He lacked tenacity of purpose, however, was indifferent to money, and always willing to give his own services and orders for medicine to the poor. Hence, his practice was not lucrative. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic (which see), in connection with which he is most widely known; but his services in its cause failed to receive, during his lifetime, the recognition which they deserved, nor did the organization promptly flourish, as he had hoped. He finally returned with his family to Petersburg. Died, at Rock Creek, Menard County, Ill., August 30, 1871.

STEPHENSON COUNTY, a northwestern county, with an area of 560 square miles. The soil is rich, productive and well timbered. Fruit-culture and stock-raising are among the chief industries. Not until 1827 did the aborigines quit the locality, and the county was organized, ten years later, and named for Gen. Benjamin Stephenson. A man named Kirker, who had been in the employment of Colonel Gratiot as a lead-miner, near Galena, is said to have built the first cabin within the present limits of what was called Burr Oak Grove, and set himself up as an Indian-trader in 1826, but only remained a short time. He was followed, the next year, by Oliver

W. Kellogg, who took Kirker's place, built a more pretentious dwelling and became the first permanent settler. Later came William Wadams, the Montagues, Baker, Kilpatrick, Preston, the Goddards, and others whose names are linked with the county's early history. The first house in Freeport was built by William Baker. Organization was effected in 1837, the total poll being eighty-four votes. The earliest teacher was Nelson Martin, who is said to have taught a school of some twelve pupils, in a house which stood on the site of the present city of Freeport. Population (1880), 31,963; (1890), 31,338; (1900), 34,933.

STERLING, a flourishing city on the north bank of Rock River, in Whiteside County, 109 miles west of Chicago, 29 miles east of Clinton, Iowa, and 52 miles east-northeast of Rock Island. It has ample railway facilities, furnished by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Sterling & Peoria, and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. It contains fourteen churches, an opera house, high and grade schools, Carnegie library, Government postoffice building, three banks, electric street and interurban car lines, electric and gas lighting, water-works, paved streets and sidewalks, fire department and four newspaper offices, two issuing daily editions. It has fine water-power, and is an important manufacturing center, its works turning out agricultural implements, carriages, paper, barbed-wire, school furniture, burial caskets, pumps, sash, doors, etc. It also has the Sterling Iron Works, besides foundries and machine shops. The river here flows through charming scenery. Pop. (1890), 5,824; (1900), 6,309.

STEVENS, Bradford A., ex-Congressman, was born at Boscawen (afterwards Webster), N. H., Jan. 3, 1813. After attending schools in New Hampshire and at Montreal, he entered Dartmouth College, graduating therefrom in 1835. During the six years following, he devoted himself to teaching, at Hopkinsville, Ky., and New York City. In 1843 he removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he became a merchant and farmer. In 1868 he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and, in 1870, was elected to Congress, as an Independent Democrat, for the Fifth District.

STEVENSON, Adlai E., ex-Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. In 1852 he removed with his parents to Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where the family settled; was educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University and at Centre College, Ky., was admitted to the bar in 1858 and began practice at Metamora, Woodford County, where he was Master in Chancery, 1861-65, and State's Attorney, 1865-69. In 1864 he was candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington, where he has since resided. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate of his party for Congress, but was elected as a Green-back Democrat in 1878, though defeated in 1880 and 1882. In 1877 he was appointed by President Hayes a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point. During the first administration of President Cleveland (1885-89) he was First Assistant Postmaster General; was a member of the National Democratic Conventions of 1884 and 1892, being Chairman of the Illinois delegation the latter year. In 1892 he received his party's nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and was elected to that office, serving until 1897. Since retiring from office he has resumed his residence at Bloomington.

STEWART, Lewis, manufacturer and former Congressman, was born in Wayne County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1824, and received a common school education. At the age of 14 he accompanied his parents to Kendall County, Ill., where he afterwards resided, being engaged in farming and the manufacture of agricultural implements at Plano. He studied law but never practiced. In 1876 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, being defeated by Shelby M. Cullom. In 1890 the Democrats of the Eighth Illinois District elected him to Congress. In 1892 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Robert A. Childs, by the narrow margin of 27 votes, and, in 1894, was again defeated, this time being pitted against Albert J. Hopkins. Mr. Stewart died at his home at Plano, August 26, 1896.

STEWARTSON, a town of Shelby County, at the intersection of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railway with the Altamont branch of the Wabash, 12 miles southeast of Shelbyville; is in a grain and lumber region; has a bank and a weekly paper. Population, (1900), 677.

STICKNEY, William H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1809, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Cincinnati in 1831, and, in Illinois in 1834, being at that time a resident of Shawneetown; was elected State's Attorney by the Legislature, in 1839, for the circuit embracing some fourteen counties in the southern and southeastern part of the State; for a time also, about 1835-36, officiated as editor of "The Gallatin Democrat," and "The Illinois Advertiser," published at Shawneetown. In 1846

Mr. Stickney was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly from Gallatin County, and, twenty-eight years later—having come to Chicago in 1848—to the same body from Cook County, serving in the somewhat famous Twenty-ninth Assembly. He also held the office of Police Justice for some thirteen years, from 1860 onward. He lived to an advanced age, dying in Chicago, Feb. 14, 1898, being at the time the oldest surviving member of the Chicago bar.

STILES, Isaac Newton, lawyer and soldier, born at Suffield, Conn., July 16, 1833; was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1855, became Prosecuting Attorney, a member of the Legislature and an effective speaker in the Fremont campaign of 1856; enlisted as a private soldier at the beginning of the war, went to the field as Adjutant, was captured at Malvern Hill, and, after six weeks' confinement in Libby prison, exchanged and returned to duty; was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, and brevetted Brigadier-General for meritorious service. After the war he practiced his profession in Chicago, though almost totally blind. Died, Jan. 18, 1895.

STILLMAN, Stephen, first State Senator from Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Massachusetts who came, with his widowed mother, to Sangamon County in 1820, and settled near Williamsville, where he became the first Postmaster in the first postoffice in the State north of the Sangamon River. In 1822, Mr. Stillman was elected as the first State Senator from Sangamon County, serving four years, and, at his first session, being one of the opponents of the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died, in Peoria, somewhere between 1835 and 1840.

STILLMAN VALLEY, village in Ogle County, on Chicago Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; site of first battle Black Hawk War; has graded schools, four churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop., 475.

STITES, Samuel, pioneer, was born near Mount Bethel, Somerset County, N. J., Oct. 31, 1776; died, August 16, 1839, on his farm, which subsequently became the site of the city of Trenton, in Clinton County, Ill. He was descended from John Stites, M.D., who was born in England in 1595, emigrated to America, and died at Hempstead, L. I., in 1717, at the age of 123 years. The family removed to New Jersey in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Samuel was a cousin of Benjamin Stites, the first white man to settle within the present limits of Cincinnati, and various members of the family were prominent in the settlement of the upper Ohio Valley as early as 1788. Samuel Stites married, Sept. 14, 1794, Martha Martin, daughter of Ephraim Martin, and grand-daughter of Col. Ephraim Martin, both soldiers of the New Jersey line during the Revolutionary War—with the last named of whom he had (in connection with John Cleves Symmes) been intimately associated in the purchase and settlement of the Miami Valley. In 1800 he removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1803 to Greene County, and, in 1818, in company with his son-in-law, Anthony Wayne Casad, to St. Clair County, Ill., settling near Union Grove. Later, he removed to O'Fallon, and, still later, to Clinton County. He left a large family, several members of which became prominent pioneers in the movements toward Minnesota and Kansas.

STOLBRAND, Carlos John Mueller, soldier, was born in Sweden, May 11, 1821; at the age of 18, enlisted in the Royal Artillery of his native land, serving through the campaign of Schleswig-Holstein (1848); came to the United States soon after, and, in 1861, enlisted in the first battalion of Illinois Light Artillery, finally becoming Chief of Artillery under Gen. John A. Logan. When the latter became commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Col. Stolbrand was placed at the head of the artillery brigade; in February, 1865, was made Brigadier-General, and mustered out in January, 1866. After the war he went South, and was Secretary of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention of 1868. The same year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a Presidential Elector. He was an inventor and patented various improvements in steam engines and boilers; was also Superintendent of Public Buildings at Charleston, S. C., under President Harrison. Died, at Charleston, Feb. 3, 1894.

STONE, Daniel, early lawyer and legislator, was a native of Vermont and graduate of Middlebury College; became a member of the Springfield (Ill.) bar in 1833, and, in 1836, was elected to the General Assembly—being one of the celebrated "Long Nine" from Sangamon County, and joining Abraham Lincoln in his protest against a series of pro-slavery resolutions which had been adopted by the House. In 1837 he was a Circuit Court Judge and, being assigned to the north-western part of the State, removed to Galena, but was legislated out of office, when he left the State, dying a few years later, in Essex County, N. J.

STONE, Horatio O., pioneer, was born in Ontario (now Monroe) County, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1811; in boyhood learned the trade of shoemaker, and later acted as overseer of laborers on the Lackawanna Canal. In 1831, having located in Wayne County, Mich., he was drafted for the Black Hawk War, serving twenty-two days under Gen. Jacob Brown. In January, 1835, he came to Chicago and, having made a fortunate speculation in real estate in that early day, a few months later entered upon the grocery and provision trade, which he afterwards extended to grain; finally giving his chief attention to real estate, in which he was remarkably successful, leaving a large fortune at his death, which occurred in Chicago, June 20, 1877.

STONE, (Rev.) Luther, Baptist clergyman, was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 26, 1815, and spent his boyhood on a farm. After acquiring a common school education, he prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and, in 1835, entered Brown University, graduating in the class of 1839. He then spent three years at the Theological Institute at Newton, Mass.; was ordained to the ministry at Oxford, in 1843, but, coming west the next year, entered upon evangelical work in Rock Island, Davenport, Burlington and neighboring towns. Later, he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Rockford, Ill. In 1847 Mr. Stone came to Chicago and established "The Watchman of the Prairies," which survives to-day under the name of "The Standard," and has become the leading Baptist organ in the West. After six years of editorial work, he took up evangelistic work in Chicago, among the poor and criminal classes. During the Civil War he conducted religious services at Camp Douglas, Soldiers' Rest and the Marine Hospital. He was associated in the conduct and promotion of many educational and charitable institutions. He did much for the First Baptist Church of Chicago, and, during the latter years of his life, was attached to the Immanuel Baptist Church, which he labored to establish. Died, in July, 1890.

STONE, Melville E., journalist, banker, Manager of Associated Press, born at Hudson, Ill., August 18, 1848. Coming to Chicago in 1860, he graduated from the local high school in 1867, and, in 1870, acquired the sole proprietorship of a foundry and machine shop. Finding himself without resources after the great fire of 1871, he embarked in journalism, rising, through the successive grades of reporter, city editor, assistant editor and Washington correspondent, to the position of editor-in-chief of his own journal.

He was connected with various Chicago dailies between 1871 and 1875, and, on Christmas Day of the latter year, issued the first number of "The Chicago Daily News." He gradually disposed of his interest in this journal, entirely severing his connection therewith in 1888. Since that date he has been engaged in banking in the city of Chicago, and is also General Manager of the Associated Press.

STONE, Samuel, philanthropist, was born at Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 6, 1798; left an orphan at seven years of age, after a short term in Leicester Academy, and several years in a wholesale store in Boston, at the age of 19 removed to Rochester, N. Y., to take charge of interests in the "Holland Purchase," belonging to his father's estate; in 1843-49, was a resident of Detroit and interested in some of the early railroad enterprises centering there, but the latter year removed to Milwaukee, being there associated with Ezra Cornell in telegraph construction. In 1859 he became a citizen of Chicago, where he was one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, and a liberal patron of many enterprises of a public and benevolent character. Died, May 4, 1876.

STONE FORT, a village in the counties of Saline and Williamson. It is situated on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 57 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1900), 479.

STOREY, Wilbur F., journalist and newspaper publisher, was born at Salisbury, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819. He began to learn the printer's trade at 12, and, before he was 19, was part owner of a Democratic paper called "The Herald," published at La Porte, Ind. Later, he either edited or controlled journals published at Mishawaka, Ind., and Jackson and Detroit, Mich. In January, 1861, he became the principal owner of "The Chicago Times," then the leading Democratic organ of Chicago. His paper soon came to be regarded as the organ of the anti-war party throughout the Northwest, and, in June, 1863, was suppressed by a military order issued by General Burnside, which was subsequently revoked by President Lincoln. The net result was an increase in "The Times'" notoriety and circulation. Other charges, of an equally grave nature, relating to its sources of income, its character as a family newspaper, etc., were repeatedly made, but to all these Mr. Storey turned a deaf ear. He lost heavily in the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, appeared as the editor of "The Times," then destitute of political ties. About 1876 his health began to decline. Medical aid failed to afford relief, and, in August, 1884, he was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and his estate was placed in the hands of a conservator. On the 27th of the following October (1884), he died at his home in Chicago.

STORRS, Emery Alexander, lawyer, was born at Hinsdale, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., August 12, 1835; began the study of law with his father, later pursued a legal course at Buffalo, and, in 1853, was admitted to the bar; spent two years (1857-59) in New York City, the latter year removing to Chicago, where he attained great prominence as an advocate at the bar, as well as an orator on other occasions. Politically a Republican, he took an active part in Presidential campaigns, being a delegate-at-large from Illinois to the National Republican Conventions of 1868, '72, and '80, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents in 1872. Erratic in habits and a master of epigram and repartee, many of his speeches are quoted with relish and appreciation by those who were his contemporaries at the Chicago bar. Died suddenly, while in attendance on the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Sept. 12, 1885.

STRAWN, Jacob, agriculturist and stock-dealer, born in Somerset County, Pa., May 30, 1800; removed to Licking County, Ohio, in 1817, and to Illinois, in 1831, settling four miles southwest of Jacksonville. He was one of the first to demonstrate the possibilities of Illinois as a livestock state. Unpretentious and despising mere show, he illustrated the virtues of industry, frugality and honesty. At his death—which occurred August 23, 1865—he left an estate estimated in value at about $1,000,000, acquired by industry and business enterprise. He was a zealous Unionist during the war, at one time contributing $10,000 to the Christian Commission.

STREATOR, a city (laid out in 1868 and incorporated in 1882) in the southern part of La Salle County, 93 miles southwest of Chicago; situated on the Vermilion River and a central point for five railroads. It is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and is underlaid by coal seams (two of which are worked) and by shale and various clay products of value, adapted to the manufacture of fire and building-brick, drain-pipe, etc. The city is thoroughly modern, having gas, electric lighting, street railways, water-works, a good fire-department, and a large, improved public park. Churches and schools are numerous, as are also fine public and private buildings. One of the chief industries is the manufacture of glass, including rolled-plate.

window-glass, flint and Bohemian ware and glass bottles. Other successful industries are foundries and machine shops, flour mills, and clay working establishments. There are several banks, and three daily and weekly papers are published here. The estimated property valuation, in 1884, was $12,000,000. Streator boasts some handsome public buildings, especially the Government post-office and the Carnegie public library building, both of which have been erected within the past few years. Pop. (1890), 11,414; (1900), 14,079.

STREET, Joseph M., pioneer and early politician, settled at Shawneetown about 1812, coming from Kentucky, though believed to have been a native of Eastern Virginia. In 1827 he was a Brigadier-General of militia, and appears to have been prominent in the affairs of that section of the State. His correspondence with Governor Edwards, about this time, shows him to have been a man of far more than ordinary education, with a good opinion of his merits and capabilities. He was a most persistent applicant for office, making urgent appeals to Governor Edwards, Henry Clay and other politicians in Kentucky, Virginia and Washington, on the ground of his poverty and large family. In 1827 he received the offer of the clerkship of the new county of Peoria, but, on visiting that region, was disgusted with the prospect; returning to Shawneetown, bought a farm in Sangamon County, but, before the close of the year, was appointed Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. This was during the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians, upon which he made voluminous reports to the Secretary of War. Mr. Street was a son-in-law of Gen. Thomas Posey, a Revolutionary soldier, who was prominent in the early history of Indiana and its last Territorial Governor. (See Posey, (Gen.) Thomas.)

STREETER, Alson J., farmer and politician, was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., in 1823; at the age of two years accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling at Dixon, Lee County. He attended Knox College for three years, and, in 1849, went to California, where he spent two years in gold mining. Returning to Illinois, he purchased a farm of 240 acres near New Windsor, Mercer County, to which he has since added several thousand acres. In 1872 he was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly as a Democrat, but, in 1873, allied himself with the Greenback party, whose candidate for Congress he was in 1878, and for Governor in 1880, when he received nearly 3,000 votes more than his party's Presidential nominee, in Illinois.

In 1884 he was elected State Senator by a coalition of Greenbackers and Democrats in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, but acted as an independent throughout his entire term.

STRONG, William Emerson, soldier, was born at Granville, N. Y., in 1840; from 13 years of age, spent his early life in Wisconsin, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Racine in 1861. The same year he enlisted under the first call for troops, took part, as Captain of a Wisconsin Company, in the first battle of Bull Run; was afterwards promoted and assigned to duty as Inspector-General in the West, participated in the Vicksburg and Atlanta campaigns, being finally advanced to the rank of Brigadier-General. After some fifteen months spent in the position of Inspector-General of the Freedmen's Bureau (1865-66), he located in Chicago, and became connected with several important business enterprises, besides assisting, as an officer on the staff of Governor Cullom, in the organization of the Illinois National Guard. He was elected on the first Board of Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, and, while making a tour of Europe in the interest of that enterprise, died, at Florence, Italy, April 10, 1891.

STUART, John Todd, lawyer and Congressman, born near Lexington, Ky., Nov. 10, 1807—the son of Robert Stuart, a Presbyterian minister and Professor of Languages in Transylvania University, and related, on the maternal side, to the Todd family, of whom Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was a member. He graduated at Centre College, Danville, in 1826, and, after studying law, removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, and began practice. In 1832 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, re-elected in 1834, and, in 1836, defeated, as the Whig candidate for Congress, by Wm. L. May, though elected, two years later, over Stephen A. Douglas, and again in 1840. In 1837, Abraham Lincoln, who had been studying law under Mr. Stuart's advice and instruction, became his partner, the relationship continuing until 1841. He served in the State Senate, 1849-53, was the Bell-Everett candidate for Governor in 1860, and was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, for a third time, in 1862, but, in 1864, was defeated by Shelby M. Cullom, his former pupil. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Stuart was head of the law firm of Stuart, Edwards & Brown. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 28, 1885.

STURGES, Solomon, merchant and banker, was born at Fairfield, Conn., April 21, 1796, early manifested a passion for the sea and, in 1810, made a voyage, on a vessel of which his brother was captain, from New York to Georgetown, D. C., intending to continue it to Lisbon. At Georgetown he was induced to accept a position as clerk with a Mr. Williams, where he was associated with two other youths, as fellow-employés, who became eminent bankers and capitalists—W. W. Corcoran, afterwards the well-known banker of Washington, and George W. Peabody, who had a successful banking career in England, and won a name as one of the most liberal and public-spirited of philanthropists. During the War of 1812 young Sturges joined a volunteer infantry company, where he had, for comrades, George W. Peabody and Francis S. Key, the latter author of the popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." In 1814 Mr. Sturges accepted a clerkship in the store of his brother-in-law, Ebenezer Buckingham, at Putnam, Muskingum County, Ohio, two years later becoming a partner in the concern, where he developed that business capacity which laid the foundation for his future wealth. Before steamers navigated the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he piloted flat-boats, loaded with produce and merchandise, to New Orleans, returning overland. During one of his visits to that city, he witnessed the arrival of the "Washington," the first steamer to descend the Mississippi, as, in 1817, he saw the arrival of the "Walk-in-the-Water" at Detroit, the first steamer to arrive from Buffalo—the occasion of his visit to Detroit being to carry funds to General Cass to pay off the United States troops. About 1849 he was associated with the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal, from the Ohio River to Terre Haute, Ind., advancing money for the prosecution of the work, for which was reimbursed by the State. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and, in partnership with his brothers-in-law, C. P. and Alvah Buckingham, erected the first large grain-elevator in that city, on land leased from the Illinois Central Railroad Company, following it, two years later, by another of equal capacity. For a time, substantially all the grain coming into Chicago, by railroad, passed into these elevators. In 1857 he established the private banking house of Solomon Sturges & Sons, which, shortly after his death, under the management of his son, George Sturges, became the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago. He was intensely patriotic and, on the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, used of his means freely in support of the Government, equipping the Sturges Rifles, an independent company, at a cost of $20,000. He was also a subscriber to the first loan made by the Government, during this period, taking $100,000 in Government bonds. While devoted to his business, he was a hater of shams and corruption, and contributed freely to Christian and benevolent enterprises. Died, at the home of a daughter, at Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1864, leaving a large fortune acquired by legitimate trade.

STURTEVANT, Julian Munson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and educator, was born at Warren, Litchfield County, Conn., July 26, 1805; spent his youth in Summit County, Ohio, meanwhile preparing for college; in 1822, entered Yale College as the classmate of the celebrated Elizur Wright, graduating in 1826. After two years as Principal of an academy at Canaan, Conn., he entered Yale Divinity School, graduating there in 1829; then came west, and, after spending a year in superintending the erection of buildings, in December, 1830, as sole tutor, began instruction to a class of nine pupils in what is now Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Having been joined, the following year, by Dr. Edward Beecher as President, Mr. Sturtevant assumed the chair of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, which he retained until 1844, when, by the retirement of Dr. Beecher, he succeeded to the offices of President and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. Here he labored, incessantly and unselfishly, as a teacher during term time, and, as financial agent during vacations, in the interest of the institution of which he had been one of the chief founders, serving until 1876, when he resigned the Presidency, giving his attention, for the next ten years, to the duties of Professor of Mental Science and Science of Government, which he had discharged from 1870. In 1886 he retired from the institution entirely, having given to its service fifty-six years of his life. In 1863, Dr. Sturtevant visited Europe in the interest of the Union cause, delivering effective addresses at a number of points in England. He was a frequent contributor to the weekly religious and periodical press, and was the author of "Economics, or the Science of Wealth" (1876)—a text-book on political economy, and "Keys of Sect, or the Church of the New Testament" (1879), besides frequently occupying the pulpits of local and distant churches—having been early ordained a Congregational minister. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Missouri and that of LL.D. from Iowa University. Died, in Jacksonville, Feb. 11, 1886.—Julian M. (Sturtevant), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Jacksonville, Ill. Feb. 2, 1834; fitted for college in the preparatory department of Illinois College and graduated from the college (proper) in 1854. After leaving college he served as teacher in the Jacksonville public schools one year, then spent a year as tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of theology at Andover Theological Seminary, graduating there in 1859, meanwhile having discharged the duties of Chaplain of the Connecticut State's prison in 1858. He was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., in 1860, remaining as pastor in that city nine years. He has since been engaged in pastoral work in New York City (1869-70), Ottawa, Ill., (1870-73); Denver, Colo., (1873-77); Grinnell, Iowa, (1877-84); Cleveland, Ohio, (1884-90); Galesburg, Ill., (1890-93), and Aurora, (1893-97). Since leaving the Congregational church at Aurora, Dr. Sturtevant has been engaged in pastoral work in Chicago. He was also editor of "The Congregationalist" of Iowa (1881-84), and, at different periods, has served as Trustee of Colorado, Marietta and Knox Colleges; being still an honored member of the Knox College Board. He received the degree of D.D. from Illinois College, in 1879.

SUBLETTE, a station and village on the Illinois Central Railroad, in Lee County, 8 miles northwest of Mendota. Population, (1900), 306.

SUFFRAGE, in general, the right or privilege of voting. The qualifications of electors (or voters), in the choice of public officers in Illinois, are fixed by the State Constitution (Art. VII.), except as to school officers, which are prescribed by law. Under the State Constitution the exercise of the right to vote is limited to persons who were electors at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, or who are native or naturalized male citizens of the United States, of the age of 21 years or over, who have been residents of the State one year, of the county ninety days, and of the district (or precinct) in which they offer to vote, 30 days. Under an act passed in 1891, women, of 21 years of age and upwards, are entitled to vote for school officers, and are also eligible to such offices under the same conditions, as to age and residence, as male citizens. (See Elections; Australian Ballot.)

SULLIVAN, a city and county-seat of Moultrie County, 25 miles southeast of Decatur and 14 miles northwest of Mattoon; is on three lines of railway. It is in an agricultural and stock-raising region; contains two State banks and four weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,305; (1890), 1,468; (1900), 2,399; (1900, est.), 3,100.

SULLIVAN, William K., journalist, was born at Waterford, Ireland, Nov. 10, 1843; educated at the Waterford Model School and in Dublin; came to the United States in 1863, and, after teaching for a time in Kane County, in 1864 enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Then, after a brief season spent in teaching and on a visit to his native land, he began work as a reporter on New York papers, later being employed on "The Chicago Tribune" and "The Evening Journal," on the latter, at different times, holding the position of city editor, managing editor and correspondent. He was also a Representative from Cook County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, for three years a member of the Chicago Board of Education, and appointed United States Consul to the Bermudas by President Harrison, resigning in 1892. Died, in Chicago, January 17, 1899.

SULLIVAN, Michael Lucas, agriculturist, was born at Franklinton (a suburb of Columbus, Ohio), August 6, 1807; was educated at Ohio University and Centre College, Ky., and—after being engaged in the improvement of an immense tract of land inherited from his father near his birth-place, devoting much attention, meanwhile, to the raising of improved stock—in 1854 sold his Ohio lands and bought 80,000 acres, chiefly in Champaign and Piatt Counties, Ill., where he began farming on a larger scale than before. The enterprise proved a financial failure, and he was finally compelled to sell a considerable portion of his estate in Champaign County, known as Broad Lands, to John T. Alexander (see Alexander, John T.), retiring to a farm of 40,000 acres at Burr Oaks, Ill. He died, at Henderson, Ky., Jan. 29, 1879.

SUMMERFIELD, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 27 miles east of St. Louis; was the home of Gen. Fred. Hecker. Population (1900), 360.

SUMNER, a city of Lawrence County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 19 miles west of Vincennes, Ind.; has a fine school house, four churches, two banks, two flour mills, telephones, and one weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,037; (1900), 1,268.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. The office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction was created by act of the Legislature, at a special session held in 1854, its duties previous to that time, from 1845, having been discharged by the Secretary of State as Superintendent, ex-officio. The following is a list of the incumbents from the date of the formal creation of the office down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian W. Edwards (by appointment of the Governor), 1854-57; William H. Powell (by election), 1857-59; Newton Bateman, 1859-63; John P. Brooks, 1863-65; Newton Bateman, 1865-75; Samuel W. Etter, 1875-79; James P. Slade, 1879-83; Henry Raab, 1883-87; Richard Edwards, 1887-91; Henry Raab, 1891-95; Samuel M. Inglis, 1895-98; James H. Freeman, June, 1898, to January, 1899 (by appointment of the Governor, to fill the unexpired term of Prof. Inglis, who died in office, June 1, 1898); Alfred Baylis, 1899—.

Previous to 1870 the tenure of the office was two years, but, by the Constitution adopted that year, it was extended to four years, the elections occurring on the even years between those for Governor and other State officers except State Treasurer.

SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF THE. The following is a list of Justices of the Supreme Court of Illinois who have held office since the organization of the State Government, with the period of their respective incumbencies: Joseph Phillips, 1818-22 (resigned); Thomas C. Browne, 1818-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); William P. Foster, Oct. 9, 1818, to July 7, 1819 (resigned); John Reynolds, 1818-25; Thomas Reynolds (vice Phillips), 1822-25; William Wilson (vice Foster) 1819-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Samuel D. Lockwood, 1825-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Theophilus W. Smith, 1825-42 (resigned); Thomas Ford, Feb. 15, 1841, to August 1, 1842 (resigned); Sidney Breese, Feb. 15, 1841, to Dec. 19, 1842 (resigned)—also (by re-elections), 1857-78 (died in office); Walter B. Scates, 1841-47 (resigned)—also (vice Trumbull), 1854-57 (resigned); Samuel H. Treat, 1841-55 (resigned); Stephen A. Douglas, 1841-42 (resigned); John D. Caton (vice Ford) August, 1842, to March, 1843—also (vice Robinson and by successive re-elections), May, 1843 to January, 1864 (resigned); James Semple (vice Breese), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 16, 1843 (resigned); Richard M. Young (vice Smith), 1843-47 (resigned); John M. Robinson (vice Ford), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 27, 1843 (died in office); Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., (vice Douglas), 1843-45 (resigned)—also (vice Young), 1847-48; James Shields (vice Semple), 1843-45 (resigned); Norman H. Purple (vice Thomas), 1843-48 (retired under Constitution of 1848); Gustavus Koerner (vice Shields), 1845-48 (retired by Constitution); William A. Denning (vice Scates), 1847-48 (retired by Constitution); Lyman Trumbull, 1848-53 (resigned); Ozias C. Skinner (vice Treat), 1855-58 (resigned); Pinkney H. Walker (vice Skinner), 1858-85 (deceased); Corydon Beckwith (by appointment, vice Caton), Jan. 7, 1864, to June 6, 1864; Charles B. Lawrence (one term), 1864-73; Anthony Thornton, 1870-73 (resigned); John M. Scott (two terms), 1870-88; Benjamin R. Sheldon (two terms), 1870-88; William K. McAllister, 1870-75 (resigned); John Scholfield (vice Thornton), 1873-93 (died); T. Lyle Dickey (vice McAllister), 1875-85 (died); David J. Baker (appointed, vice Breese), July 9, 1878, to June 2, 1879—also, 1888-97; John H. Mulkey, 1879-88; Damon G. Tunncliffe (appointed, vice Walker), Feb. 15, 1885, to June 1, 1885; Simeon P. Shope, 1885-94; Joseph M. Bailey, 1888-95 (died in office). The Supreme Court, as at present constituted (1899), is as follows: Carroll C. Boggs, elected, 1897; Jesse J. Phillips (vice Scholfield, deceased) elected, 1893, and re-elected, 1897; Jacob W. Wilkin, elected, 1888, and re-elected, 1897; Joseph N. Carter, elected, 1894; Alfred M. Craig, elected, 1873, and re-elected, 1882 and '91; James H. Cartwright (vice Bailey), elected, 1895, and re-elected, 1897; Benjamin D. Magruder (vice Dickey), elected, 1885, '88 and '97. The terms of Justices Boggs, Phillips, Wilkin, Cartwright and Magruder expire in 1906; that of Justice Carter on 1903; and Justice Craig's, in 1900. Under the Constitution of 1818, the Justices of the Supreme Court were chosen by joint ballot of the Legislature, but, under the Constitutions of 1848 and 1870, by popular vote for terms of nine years each. (See Judicial System; also sketches of individual members of the Supreme Court under their proper names.)

SURVEYS, EARLY GOVERNMENT. The first United States law passed on the subject of Government surveys was dated, May 20, 1785. After reserving certain lands to be allotted by way of pensions and to be donated for school purposes, it provided for the division of the remaining public lands among the original thirteen States. This, however, was, in effect, repealed by the Ordinance of 1788. The latter provided for a rectangular system of surveys which, with but little modification, has remained in force ever since. Briefly outlined, the system is as follows: Townships, six miles square, are laid out from principal bases, each township containing thirty-six sections of one square mile, numbered consecutively, the numeration to commence at the upper right hand corner of the township. The first principal meridian (84° 51' west of Greenwich), coincided with the line dividing Indiana and Ohio. The second (1° 37' farther west) had direct relation to surveys in Eastern Illinois. The third (89° 10' 30" west of Greenwich) and the fourth (90° 29' 56" west) governed the remainder of Illinois surveys. The first Public Surveyor was Thomas Hutchins, who was called "the geographer." (See Hutchins, Thomas.)

SWEET, (Gen.) Benjamin J., soldier, was born at Kirkland, Oneida County, N. Y., April 24, 1832; came with his father, in 1848, to Sheboygan, Wis., studied law, was elected to the State Senate in 1859, and, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, being commissioned Major in 1862. Later, he resigned and, returning home, assisted in the organization of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second regiments, being elected Colonel of the former; and with it taking part in the campaign in Western Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1863 he was assigned to command at Camp Douglas, and was there on the exposure, in November, 1864, of the conspiracy to release the rebel prisoners. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.) The service which he rendered in the defeat of this bold and dangerous conspiracy evinced his courage and sagacity, and was of inestimable value to the country. After the war, General Sweet located at Lombard, near Chicago, was appointed Pension Agent at Chicago, afterwards served as Supervisor of Internal Revenue, and, in 1872, became Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington. Died, in Washington, Jan. 1, 1874. — Miss Ada C. (Sweet), for eight years (1874-82) the efficient Pension Agent at Chicago, is General Sweet's daughter.

SWEETSER, A. C., soldier and Department Commander G. A. R., was born in Oxford County, Maine, in 1839; came to Bloomington, Ill., in 1857; enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers and, later, in the Thirty-ninth; at the battle of Wierbottom Church, Va., in June, 1864, was shot through both legs, necessitating the amputation of one of them. After the war he held several offices of trust, including those of City Collector of Bloomington and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Springfield District; in 1887 was elected Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for Illinois. Died, at Bloomington, March 23, 1896.

SWETT, Leonard, lawyer, was born near Turner, Maine, August 11, 1835; was educated at Waterville College (now Colby University), but left before graduation; read law in Portland, and, while seeking a location in the West, enlisted in an Indiana regiment for the Mexican War, being attacked by climatic fever, was discharged before completing his term of enlistment. He soon after came to Bloomington, Ill., where he became the intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and David Davis, traveling the circuit with them for a number of years. He early became active in State politics, was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1858, and, in 1860, was a zealous supporter of Mr. Lincoln as a Presidential Elector for the State-at-large. In 1862 he received the Republican nomination for Congress in his District, but was defeated. Removing to Chicago in 1865, he gained increased distinction as a lawyer, especially in the management of criminal cases. In 1872 he was a supporter of Horace Greeley for President, but later returned to the Republican party, and, in the National Republican Convention of 1888, presented the name of Judge Gresham for nomination for the Presidency. Died, June 8, 1889.

SWIGERT, Charles Philip, ex-Auditor of Public Accounts, was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, Nov. 27, 1843, brought by his parents to Chicago, Ill., in childhood, and, in his boyhood, attended the Scammon School in that city. In 1854 his family removed to a farm in Kankakee County, where, between the ages of 12 and 18, he assisted his father in "breaking" between 400 and 500 acres of prairie land. On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, although scarcely 18 years of age, he enlisted as a private in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, in April, 1862, was one of twenty heroic volunteers who ran the blockade, on the gunboat Carondelet, at Island No. 10, assisting materially in the reduction of that rebel stronghold, which resulted in the capture of 7,000 prisoners. At the battle of Farmington, Miss., during the siege of Corinth, in May, 1862, he had his right arm torn from its socket by a six-pound cannon-ball, compelling his retirement from the army. Returning home, after many weeks spent in hospital at Jefferson Barracks and Quincy, Ill., he received his final discharge, Dec. 21, 1862, spent a year in school, also took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago, and having learned to write with his left hand, taught for a time in Kankakee County; served as letter-carrier in Chicago, and for a year as Deputy County Clerk of Kankakee County, followed by two terms (1867-69) as a student in the Soldiers' College at Fulton.

Ill. The latter year he entered upon the duties of Treasurer of Kankakee County, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1880, when he resigned to take the position of State Auditor, to which he was elected a second time in 1884. In all these positions Mr. Swigert has proved himself an upright, capable and high-minded public official. Of late years his residence has been in Chicago.

SWING, (Rev.) David, clergyman and pulpit orator, was born of German ancestry, at Cincinnati, Ohio, August 23, 1836. After 1837 (his father dying about this time), the family resided for a time at Reedsburgh, and, later, on a farm near Williamsburgh, in Clermont County, in the same State. In 1852, having graduated from the Miami (Ohio) University, he commenced the study of theology, but, in 1854, accepted the position of Professor of Languages in his Alma Mater, which he continued to fill for thirteen years. His first pastorate was in connection with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Chicago, which he assumed in 1866. His church edifice was destroyed in the great Chicago fire, but was later rebuilt. As a preacher he was popular; but, in April, 1874, he was placed on trial, before an ecclesiastical court of his own denomination, on charges of heresy. He was acquitted by the trial court, but, before the appeal taken by the prosecution could be heard, he personally withdrew from affiliation with the denomination. Shortly afterward he became pastor of an independent religious organization known as the "Central Church," preaching, first at McVicker's Theatre and, afterward, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. He was a fluent and popular speaker on all themes, a frequent and valued contributor to numerous magazines, as well as the author of several volumes. Among his best known books are "Motives of Life," "Truths for To-day," and "Club Essays." Died, in Chicago, Oct. 3, 1894.

SYCAMORE, the county-seat of De Kalb County (founded in 1836), 56 miles west of Chicago, at the intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railroads; lies in a region devoted to agriculture, dairying and stock-raising. The city itself contains several factories, the principal products being agricultural implements, flour, insulated wire, brick, tile, varnish, furniture, soap and carriages and wagons. There are also works for canning vegetables and fruit, besides two creameries. The town is lighted by electricity, and has high-pressure water-works. There are eleven churches, three graded public schools and a young ladies' seminary. Population (1880), 3,028; (1890), 2,987; (1900), 3,653.

TAFT, Lorado, sculptor, was born at Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., April 29, 1860; at an early age evinced a predilection for sculpture and began modeling; graduated at the University of Illinois in 1880, then went to Paris and studied sculpture in the famous Ecole des Beaux Arts until 1885. The following year he settled in Chicago, finally becoming associated with the Chicago Art Institute. He has been a lecturer on art in the Chicago University. Mr. Taft furnished the decorations of the Horticultural Building on the World's Fair Grounds, in 1893.

TALCOTT, Mancel, business man, was born in Rome, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1817; attended the common schools until 17 years of age, when he set out for the West, traveling on foot from Detroit to Chicago, and thence to Park Ridge, where he worked at farming until 1850. Then, having followed the occupation of a miner for some time, in California, with some success, he united with Horace M. Singer in establishing the firm of Singer & Talcott, stone-dealers, which lasted during most of his life. He served as a member of the Chicago City Council, on the Board of County Commissioners, as a member of the Police Board, and was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and President, for several years, of the Stock Yards National Bank. Liberal and public-spirited, he contributed freely to works of charity. Died, June 5, 1878.

TALCOTT, (Capt.) William, soldier of the War of 1812 and pioneer, was born in Gilead, Conn., March 6, 1774; emigrated to Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1810, and engaged in farming; served as a Lieutenant in the Oneida County militia during the War of 1812-14, being stationed at Sackett's Harbor under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott. In 1835, in company with his eldest son, Thomas B. Talcott, he made an extended tour through the West, finally selecting a location in Illinois at the junction of Rock River and the Pecatonica, where the town of Rockton now stands—there being only two white families, at that time, within the present limits of Winnebago County. Two years later (1837), he brought his family to this point, with his sons took up a considerable body of Government land and erected two mills, to which customers came from a long distance. In 1838 Captain Talcott took part in the organization of the first Congregational Church in that section of the State. A zealous anti-slavery man, he supported James G.

Birney (the Liberty candidate for President) in 1844, continuing to act with that party until the organization of the Republican party in 1856; was deeply interested in the War for the Union, but died before its conclusion, Sept. 2, 1864.—Maj. Thomas B. (Talcott), oldest son of the preceding, was born at Hebron, Conn., April 17, 1806; was taken to Rome, N. Y., by his father in infancy, and, after reaching maturity, engaged in mercantile business with his brother in Chemung County; in 1835 accompanied his father in a tour through the West, finally locating at Rockton, where he engaged in agriculture. On the organization of Winnebago County, in 1836, he was elected one of the first County Commissioners, and, in 1850, to the State Senate, serving four years. He also held various local offices. Died, Sept. 30, 1894.—Hon. Wait (Talcott), second son of Capt. William Talcott, was born at Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1807, and taken to Rome, N. Y., where he remained until his 19th year, when he engaged in business at Booneville and, still later, in Utica; in 1838, removed to Illinois and joined his father at Rockton, finally becoming a citizen of Rockford, where, in his later years, he was extensively engaged in manufacturing, having become, in 1854, with his brother Sylvester, a partner of the firm of J. H. Manny & Co., in the manufacture of the Manny reaper and mower. He was an original anti-slavery man and, at one time, a Free-Soil candidate for Congress, but became a zealous Republican and ardent friend of Abraham Lincoln, whom he employed as an attorney in the famous suit of McCormick vs. the Manny Reaper Company for infringement of patent. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, succeeding his brother, Thomas B., and was the first Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1862, and continuing in office some five years. Though too old for active service in the field, during the Civil War, he voluntarily hired a substitute to take his place. Mr. Talcott was one of the original incorporators and Trustees of Beloit College, and a founder of Rockford Female Seminary, remaining a trustee of each for many years. Died, June 7, 1890.—Sylvester (Talcott), third son of William Talcott, born at Rome, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1810; when of age, engaged in mercantile business in Chemung County; in 1837 removed, with other members of the family, to Winnebago County, Ill., where he joined his father in the entry of Government lands and the erection of mills, as already detailed. He became one of the first Justices of the Peace in Winnebago County, also served as Supervisor for a number of years and, although a farmer, became interested, in 1854, with his brother Wait, in the Manny Reaper Company at Rockford. He also followed the example of his brother, just named, in furnishing a substitute for the War of the Rebellion, though too old for service himself. Died, June 19, 1885.—Henry Walter (Talcott), fourth son of William Talcott, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1814; came with his father to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and was connected with his father and brothers in business. Died, Dec. 9, 1870.—Dwight Lewis (Talcott), oldest son of Henry Walter Talcott, born in Winnebago County; at the age of 17 years enlisted at Belvidere, in January, 1864, as a soldier in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; served as provost guard some two months at Fort Pickering, near Memphis, and later took part in many of the important battles of that year in Mississippi and Tennessee. Having been captured at Campbellsville, Tenn., he was taken to Andersonville, Ga., where he suffered all the horrors of that famous prison-pen, until March, 1865, when he was released, arriving at home a helpless skeleton, the day after Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Talcott subsequently settled in Muscatine County, Iowa.

TALLULA, a prosperous village of Menard County, on the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway, 24 miles northeast of Jacksonville; is in the midst of a grain, coal-mining, and stock-growing region; has a local bank and newspaper. Pop. (1890), 445; (1900), 639.

TAMAROA, a village in Perry County, situated at the junction of the Illinois Central with the Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad, 8 miles north of Duquoin, and 57 miles east-southeast of Belleville. It has a bank, a newspaper office, a large public school, five churches and two flouring mills. Coal is mined here and exported in large quantities. Pop. (1900), 853.

TAMAROA & MOUNT VERNON RAILROAD. (See Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad.)

TAXNER, Edward Allen, clergyman and educator, was born of New England ancestry, at Waverly, Ill., Nov. 29, 1837—being the first child who could claim nativity there; was educated in the local schools and at Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1857; spent four years teaching in his native place and at Jacksonville; then accepted the Professorship of Latin in Pacific University at Portland, Oregon, remaining four years, when he returned to his Alma Mater (1865), assuming there the chair of Latin and Rhetoric. In 1881 he was appointed financial agent of the latter institution, and, in 1882, its President. While in Oregon he had been ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and, for a considerable period during his connection with Illinois College, officiated as Chaplain of the Central Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, besides supplying local and other pulpits. He labored earnestly for the benefit of the institution under his charge, and, during his incumbency, added materially to its endowment and resources. Died, at Jacksonville, Feb. 8, 1892.

TANNER, John R., Governor, was born in Warrick County, Ind., April 4, 1844, and brought to Southern Illinois in boyhood, where he grew up on a farm in the vicinity of Carbondale, enjoying only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common school; in 1863, at the age of 19, enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, serving until June, 1865, when he was transferred to the Sixty-first, and finally mustered out in September following. All the male members of Governor Tanner's family were soldiers of the late war, his father dying in a rebel prison at Columbus, Miss., one of his brothers suffering the same fate from wounds at Nashville, Tenn., and another brother dying in hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. Only one of this patriotic family, besides Governor Tanner, still survives—Mr. J. M. Tanner of Clay County, who left the service with the rank of Lieutenant of the Thirtieth Illinois Cavalry. Returning from the war, Mr. Tanner established himself in business as a farmer in Clay County, later engaging successfully in the milling and lumber business as the partner of his brother. The public positions held by him, since the war, include those of Sheriff of Clay County (1870-72), Clerk of the Circuit Court (1872-76), and State Senator (1880-83). During the latter year he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving until after the accession of President Cleveland in 1885. In 1886, he was the Republican nominee for State Treasurer and was elected by an unusually large majority; in 1891 was appointed, by Governor Fifer, a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, but, in 1892, received the appointment of Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, continuing in the latter office until December, 1893. For ten years (1874-84) he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, returning to that body in 1894, when he was chosen Chairman and conducted the campaign which resulted in the unprecedented Republican successes of that year. In 1896 he received the nomination of his party for Governor, and was elected over Gov. John P. Altgeld, his Democratic opponent, by a plurality of over 113,000, and a majority, over all, of nearly 90,000 votes.

TANNER, Tazewell B., jurist, was born in Henry County, Va., and came to Jefferson County, Ill., about 1846 or '47, at first taking a position as teacher and Superintendent of Public Schools. Later, he was connected with "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper at Mount Vernon, and, in 1849, went to the gold regions of California, meeting with reasonable success as a miner. Returning in a year or two, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and, while in the discharge of his duties, prosecuted the study of law, finally, on admission to the bar, entering into partnership with the late Col. Thomas S. Casey. In 1854 he was elected Representative in the Nineteenth General Assembly, and was instrumental in securing the appropriation for the erection of a Supreme Court building at Mount Vernon. In 1862 he served as a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of that year; was elected Circuit Judge in 1873, and, in 1877, was assigned to duty on the Appellate bench, but, at the expiration of his term, declined a re-election and resumed the practice of his profession at Mount Vernon. Died, March 25, 1880.

TAXATION, in its legal sense, the mode of raising revenue. In its general sense its purposes are the support of the State and local governments, the promotion of the public good by fostering education and works of public improvement, the protection of society by the preservation of order and the punishment of crime, and the support of the helpless and destitute. In practice, and as prescribed by the Constitution, the raising of revenue is required to be done "by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons, to be elected or appointed in such manner as the General Assembly shall direct, and not otherwise." (State Constitution, 1870—Art. Revenue, Sec. 1.) The person selected under the law to make this valuation is the Assessor of the county or the township (in counties under township organization), and he is required to make a return to the County Board at its July meeting each year—the latter having authority to hear complaints of taxpayers and adjust inequalities when found to exist. It is made the duty of the Assessor to include in his return, as real-estate, all lands and the buildings or other improvements erected thereon; and, under the head of personal property, all tangible effects, besides moneys, credits, bonds or stocks, shares of stock of companies or corporations, investments, annuities, franchises, royalties, etc. Property used for school, church or cemetery purposes, as well as public buildings and other property belonging to the State and General Government, municipalities, public charities, public libraries, agricultural and scientific societies, are declared exempt. Nominally, all property subject to taxation is required to be assessed at its cash valuation; but, in reality, the valuation, of late years, has been on a basis of twenty-five to thirty-three per cent of its estimated cash value. In the larger cities, however, the valuation is often much lower than this, while very large amounts escape assessment altogether. The Revenue Act, passed at the special session of the Fortieth General Assembly (1898), requires the Assessor to make a return of all property subject to taxation in his district, at its cash valuation, upon which a Board of Review fixes a tax on the basis of twenty per cent of such cash valuation. An abstract of the property assessment of each county goes before the State Board of Equalization, at its annual meeting in August, for the purpose of comparison and equalizing valuations between counties, but the Board has no power to modify the assessments of individual tax-payers. (See State Board of Equalization.) This Board has exclusive power to fix the valuation for purposes of taxation of the capital stock or franchises of companies (except certain specified manufacturing corporations), incorporated under the State laws, together with the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railroads, and the capital stock of railroads and telegraph lines, and to fix the distribution of the latter between counties in which they lie.—The Constitution of 1848 empowered the Legislature to impose a capitation tax, of not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar, upon each free white male citizen entitled to the right of suffrage, between the ages of 21 and 60 years, but the Constitution of 1870 grants no such power, though it authorizes the extension of the "objects and subjects of taxation" in accordance with the principle contained in the first section of the Revenue Article.—Special assessments in cities, for the construction of sewers, pavements, etc., being local and in the form of benefits, cannot be said to come under the head of general taxation. The same is to be said of revenue derived from fines and penalties, which are forms of punishment for specific offenses, and go to the benefit of certain specified funds.

TAYLOR, Abner, ex-Congressman, is a native of Maine, and a resident of Chicago. He has been in active business all his life as contractor, builder and merchant, and, for some time, a member of the wholesale dry-goods firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago. He was a member of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1884, and represented the First Illinois District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, 1889 to 1893. Mr. Taylor was one of the contractors for the erection of the new State Capitol of Texas.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin, journalist, poet and lecturer, was born at Lowville, N. Y., July 19, 1819; graduated at Madison University in 1839, the next year becoming literary and dramatic critic of "The Chicago Evening Journal." Here, in a few years, he acquired a wide reputation as a journalist and poet, and was much in demand as a lecturer on literary topics. His letters from the field during the Rebellion, as war correspondent of "The Evening Journal," won for him even a greater popularity, and were complimented by translation into more than one European language. After the war, he gave his attention more unreservedly to literature, his principal works appearing after that date. His publications in book form, including both prose and poetry, comprise the following: "Attractions of Language" (1845); "January and June" (1853); "Pictures in Camp and Field" (1871); "The World on Wheels" (1873); "Old Time Pictures and Sheaves of Rhyme" (1874); "Songs of Yesterday" (1877); "Summer Savory Gleaned from Rural Nooks" (1879); "Between the Gates"—pictures of California life—(1881); "Dulce Domum, the Burden of Song" (1884), and "Theophilus Trent, or Old Times in the Oak Openings," a novel (1887). The last was in the hands of the publishers at his death, Feb. 27, 1887. Among his most popular poems are "The Isle of the Long Ago," "The Old Village Choir," and "Rhymes of the River." "The London Times" complimented Mr. Taylor with the title of "The Oliver Goldsmith of America."

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick, early Indian-trader and legislator, was born at Fairfield C. H., Va., Oct. 18, 1802—the son of a commissary in the army of the Revolution, under General Greene, and a cousin of General (later, President) Zachary Taylor; left his native State in his youth and, at an early day, came to Springfield, Ill., where he opened an Indian-trading post and general store; was elected from Sangamon County to the lower branch of the Seventh General Assembly (1830) and re-elected in 1832—the latter year being a competitor of Abraham Lincoln, whom he defeated. In 1834 he was elected to the State Senate and, at the next session of the Legislature, was one of the celebrated "Long Nine" who secured the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. He resigned before the close of his term to accept, from President Jackson, the appointment of Receiver of Public Moneys at Chicago. Here he became one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (1837), serving as one of the Commissioners to secure subscriptions of stock, and was also active in advocating the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The title of "Colonel," by which he was known during most of his life, was acquired by service, with that rank, on the staff of Gov. John Reynolds, during the Black Hawk War of 1832. After coming to Chicago, Colonel Taylor became one of the Trustees of the Chicago branch of the State Bank, and was later identified with various banking enterprises, as also a somewhat extensive operator in real estate. An active Democrat in the early part of his career in Illinois, Colonel Taylor was one of the members of his party to take ground against the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and advocated the election of General Bissell to the governorship in 1856. In 1860 he was again in line with his party in support of Senator Douglas for the Presidency, and was an opponent of the war policy of the Government still later, as shown by his participation in the celebrated "Peace Convention" at Springfield, of June 17, 1863. In the latter years of his life he became extensively interested in coal lands in La Salle and adjoining counties, and, for a considerable time, served as President of the Northern Illinois Coal & Mining Company, his home, during a part of this period, being at Mendota. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 4, 1891.

TAYLORVILLE, a city and county-seat of Christian County, on the South Fork of the Sangamon River and on the Wabash Railway at its point of intersection with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern. It is about 27 miles southeast of Springfield, and 28 miles southwest of Decatur. It has several banks, flour mills, paper mill, electric light and gas plants, water-works, two coal mines, carriage and wagon shops, a manufactory of farming implements, two daily and weekly papers, nine churches and five graded and township high schools. Much coal is mined in this vicinity. Pop. (1890), 2,839; (1900), 4,248.

TAZEWELL COUNTY, a central county on the Illinois River; was first settled in 1823 and organized in 1827; has an area of 650 square miles—was named for Governor Tazewell of Virginia. It is drained by the Illinois and Mackinaw Rivers and traversed by several lines of railway. The surface is generally level, the soil alluvial and rich, but, requiring drainage, especially on the river bottoms. Gravel, coal and sandstone are found, but, generally speaking, Tazewell is an agricultural county. The cereals are extensively cultivated; wool is also clipped, and there are dairy interests of some importance. Distilling is extensively conducted at Pekin, the county-seat, which is also the seat of other mechanical industries. (See also Pekin.) Population of the county (1880), 29,666; (1890), 29,556; (1900), 33,221.

TEMPLE, John Taylor, M.D., early Chicago physician, born in Virginia in 1804, graduated in medicine at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1830, and, in 1833, arrived in Chicago. At this time he had a contract for carrying the United States mail from Chicago to Fort Howard, near Green Bay, and the following year undertook a similar contract between Chicago and Ottawa. Having sold these out three years later, he devoted his attention to the practice of his profession, though interested, for a time, in contracts for the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Dr. Temple was instrumental in erecting the first house (after Rev. Jesse Walker's missionary station at Wolf Point), for public religious worship in Chicago, and, although himself a Baptist, it was used in common by Protestant denominations. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of Rush Medical College, though he later became a convert to homeopathy, and finally, removing to St. Louis, assisted in founding the St. Louis School of Homeopathy, dying there, Feb. 24, 1877.

TENURE OF OFFICE. (See Elections.)

TERRE HAUTE, ALTON & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & ALTON RAILROAD (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD, a corporation operating no line of its own within the State, but the lessee and operator of the following lines (which see): St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, 158.3 miles; Terre Haute & Peoria, 145.12 miles; East St. Louis & Carondelet, 12.74 miles—total length of leased lines in Illinois, 316.16 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad was incorporated in Indiana in 1847, as the Terre Haute & Richmond, completed a line between the points named in the title, in 1852, and took its present name in 1866. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company purchased a controlling interest in its stock in 1893.

TERRE HAUTE & PEORIA RAILROAD. (Vandalia Line), a line of road extending from Terre Haute, Ind., to Peoria, Ill., 145.12 miles, with 28.78 miles of trackage, making in all 173.9 miles in operation, all being in Illinois—operated by the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company. The gauge is standard, and the rails are steel. (HISTORY.) It was organized Feb. 7, 1887, successor to the Illinois Midland Railroad. The latter was made up by the consolidation (Nov. 4, 1874) of three lines: (1) The Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1869 and opened in 1874; (2) the Paris & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1861 and opened in December, 1872; and (3) the Paris & Terre Haute Railroad, chartered in 1873 and opened in 1874—the consolidated lines assuming the name of the Illinois Midland Railroad. In 1886 the Illinois Midland was sold under foreclosure and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and is operated as a part of the "Vandalia System." The capital stock (1898) was $3,764,200; funded debt, $2,230,000,—total capital invested, $6,227,481.

TEUTOPOLIS, a village of Effingham County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, 4 miles east of Effingham; was originally settled by a colony of Germans from Cincinnati. Population (1900), 498.

THOMAS, Horace H., lawyer and legislator, was born in Vermont, Dec. 18, 1831, graduated at Middlebury College, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Chicago, where he commenced practice. At the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted and was commissioned Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the Ohio. At the close of the war he took up his residence in Tennessee, serving as Quartermaster upon the staff of Governor Brownlow. In 1867 he returned to Chicago and resumed practice. He was elected a Representative in the Legislature in 1878 and re-elected in 1880, being chosen Speaker of the House during his latter term. In 1888 he was elected State Senator from the Sixth District, serving during the sessions of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies. In 1897, General Thomas was appointed United States Appraiser in connection with the Custom House in Chicago.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, jurist and United States Senator, was born at Hagerstown, Md., claiming direct descent from Lord Baltimore. Taken west in childhood, he grew to manhood and settled at Lawrenceburg, Indiana Territory, in 1803; in 1805 was Speaker of the Territorial Legislature and, later, represented the Territory as Delegate in Congress. On the organization of Illinois Territory (which he had favored), he removed to Kaskaskia, was appointed one of the first Judges for the new Territory, and, in 1818, as Delegate from St. Clair County, presided over the first State Constitutional Convention, and, on the admission of the State, became one of the first United States Senators—Governor Edwards being his colleague. Though an avowed advocate of slavery, he gained no little prominence as the author of the celebrated "Missouri Compromise," adopted in 1820. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1823, serving until 1829. He subsequently removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he died by suicide, May 4, 1853.—Jesse Burgess (Thomas), Jr., nephew of the United States Senator of the same name, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, July 31, 1806, was educated at Transylvania University, and, being admitted to the bar, located at Edwardsville, Ill. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as Secretary of the State Senate in 1830, being re-elected in 1832; in 1834 was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Madison County, but, in February following, was appointed Attorney-General, serving only one year. He afterwards held the position of Circuit Judge (1837-39), his home being then in Springfield; in 1843 he became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of the Governor, as successor to Stephen A. Douglas, and was afterwards elected to the same office by the Legislature, remaining until 1848. During a part of his professional career he was the partner of David Prickett and William L. May, at Springfield, and afterwards a member of the Galena bar, finally removing to Chicago, where he died, Feb. 21, 1850.—Jesse B. (Thomas) third, clergyman and son of the last named; born at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary; practiced law for a time in Chicago, but finally entered the Baptist ministry, serving churches at Waukegan, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and San Francisco (1862-69). He then became pastor of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, remaining until 1874, when he returned to Brooklyn. In 1887 he became Professor of Biblical History in the Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., where he has since resided. He is the author of several volumes, and, in 1866, received the degree of D.D. from the old University of Chicago.

THOMAS, John, pioneer and soldier of the Black Hawk War, was born in Wythe County, Va., Jan. 11, 1800. At the age of 18 he accompanied his parents to St. Clair County, Ill., where the family located in what was then called the Alexander settlement, near the present site of Shiloh. When he was 22 he rented a farm (although he had not enough money to buy a horse) and married. Six years later he bought and stocked a farm, and, from that time forward, rapidly accumulated real property, until he became one of the most extensive owners of farming land in St. Clair County. In early life he was fond of military exercise, holding various offices in local organizations and serving as a Colonel in the Black Hawk War. In 1824 he was one of the leaders of the party opposed to the amendment of the State Constitution to sanction slavery, was a zealous opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and a firm supporter of the Republican party from the date of its formation. He was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1838, '62, '64, '73 and '74; and to the State Senate in 1878, serving four years in the latter body. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 16, 1894, in the 95th year of his age.

THOMAS, John R., ex-Congressman, was born at Mount Vernon, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846. He served in the Union Army during the War of the Rebellion, rising from the ranks to a captaincy. After his return home he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. From 1873 to 1876 he was State's Attorney, and, from 1879 to 1889, represented his District in Congress. In 1897, Mr. Thomas was appointed by President McKinley an additional United States District Judge for Indian Territory. His home is now at Vanita, in that Territory.

THOMAS, William, pioneer lawyer and legislator, was born in what is now Allen County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1802; received a rudimentary education, and served as deputy of his father (who was Sheriff), and afterwards of the County Clerk; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1823; in 1826 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he taught school, served as a private in the Winnebago War (1827), and at the session of 1828-29, reported the proceedings of the General Assembly for "The Vandalia Intelligencer"; was State's Attorney and School Commissioner of Morgan County; served as Quartermaster and Commissary in the Black Hawk War (1831-32), first under Gen. Joseph Duncan and, a year later, under General Whiteside; in 1839 was appointed Circuit Judge, but legislated out of office two years later. It was as a member of the Legislature, however, that he gained the greatest prominence, first as State Senator in 1834-40, and Representative in 1846-48 and 1850-52, when he was especially influential in the legislation which resulted in establishing the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, and the Hospital for the Insane (the first in the State) at Jacksonville—serving, for a time, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the latter. He was also prominent in connection with many enterprises of a local character, including the establishment of the Illinois Female College, to which, although without children of his own, he was a liberal contributor. During the first year of the war he was a member of the Board of Army Auditors by appointment of Governor Yates. Died, at Jacksonville, August 22, 1889.

THORNTON, Anthony, jurist, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., Nov. 9, 1814—being descended from a Virginia family. After the usual primary instruction in the common schools, he spent two years in a high school at Gallatin, Tenn., when he entered Centre College at Danville, Ky., afterwards continuing his studies at Miami University, Ohio, where he graduated in 1834. Having studied law with an uncle at Paris, Ky., he was licensed to practice in 1836, when he left his native State with a view to settling in Missouri, but, visiting his uncle, Gen. William F. Thornton, at Shelbyville, Ill., was induced to establish himself in practice there. He served as a member of the State Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, and as Representative in the Seventeenth General Assembly (1850-52) for Shelby County. In 1864 he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and, in 1870, to the Illinois Supreme Court, but served only until 1873, when he resigned. In 1879 Judge Thornton removed to Decatur, Ill., but subsequently returned to Shelbyville, where (1898) he now resides.

THORNTON, William Fitzhugh, Commissioner of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, was born in Hanover County, Va., Oct. 4, 1789; in 1806, went to Alexandria, Va., where he conducted a drug business for a time, also acting as associate editor of "The Alexandria Gazette." Subsequently removing to Washington City, he conducted a paper there in the interest of John Quincy Adams for the Presidency. During the War of 1812-14 he served as a Captain of cavalry, and, for a time, as staff-officer of General Winder. On occasion of the visit of Marquis La Fayette to America (1824-25) he accompanied the distinguished Frenchman from Baltimore to Richmond. In 1829 he removed to Kentucky, and, in 1833, to Shelbyville, Ill., where he soon after engaged in mercantile business, to which he added a banking and brokerage business in 1859, with which he was actively associated until his death. In 1836, he was appointed, by Governor Duncan, one of the Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as President of the Board until 1842. In 1840, he made a visit to London, as financial agent of the State, in the interest of the Canal, and succeeded in making a sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 on what were then considered favorable terms. General Thornton was an ardent Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Democrat. Died, at Shelbyville, Oct. 21, 1873.

TILLSON, John, pioneer, was born at Halifax, Mass., March 13, 1796; came to Illinois in 1819, locating at Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he became a prominent and enterprising operator in real estate, doing a large business for eastern parties; was one of the founders of Hillsboro Academy and an influential and liberal friend of Illinois College, being a Trustee of the latter from its establishment until his death; was supported in the Legislature of 1827 for State Treasurer, but defeated by James Hall. Died, at Peoria, May 11, 1853.—Christiana Holmes (Tillson), wife of the preceding, was born at Kingston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1798; married to John Tillson in 1822, and immediately came to Illinois to reside; was a woman of rare culture and refinement, and deeply interested in benevolent enterprises. Died, in New York City, May 29, 1872.—Charles Holmes (Tillson), son of John and Christiana Holmes Tillson, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Sept. 15, 1823; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1844; studied law in St. Louis and at Transylvania University, was admitted to the bar in St. Louis and practiced there some years—also served several terms in the City Council, and was a member of the National Guard of Missouri in the War of the Rebellion. Died, Nov. 25, 1865.—John (Tillson), Jr., another son, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Oct. 12, 1825; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, but did not graduate from the latter; graduated from Transylvania Law School, Ky., in 1847, and was admitted to the bar at Quincy, Ill., the same year; practiced two years at Galena, when he returned to Quincy. In 1861 he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, became its Lieutenant-Colonel, on the promotion of Col. J. D. Morgan to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy, and, in July, 1865, was mustered out with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General; for two years later held a commission as Captain in the regular army. During a portion of 1869-70 he was editor of "The Quincy Whig"; in 1873 was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly to succeed Nehemiah Bushnell, who had died in office, and, during the same year, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Quincy District, serving until 1881. Died, August 6, 1892.

TILLSON, Robert, pioneer, was born in Halifax County, Mass., August 12, 1800; came to Illinois in 1822, and was employed, for several years, as a clerk in the land agency of his brother, John Tillson, at Hillsboro. In 1826 he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Holmes, Jr., in St. Louis, but, in 1828, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he opened the first general store in that city; also served as Postmaster for some ten years. During this period he built the first two-story frame building erected in Quincy, up to that date. Retiring from the mercantile business in 1840 he engaged in real estate, ultimately becoming the proprietor of considerable property of this character; was also a contractor for furnishing cavalry accouterments to the Government during the war. Soon after the war he erected one of the handsomest business blocks existing in the city at that time. Died, in Quincy, Dec. 27, 1892.

TINCHER, John L., banker, was born in Kentucky in 1821; brought by his parents to Vermilion County, Ind., in 1829, and left an orphan at 17; attended school in Coles County, Ill., and was employed as clerk in a store at Danville, 1843-53. He then became a member of the firm of Tinchcr & English, merchants, later establishing a bank, which became the First National Bank of Danville. In 1864 Mr. Tinchcr was elected Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly and, two years later, to the Senate, being re-elected in 1870. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, in Springfield, Dec. 17, 1871, while in attendance on the adjourned session of that year.

TIPTON, Thomas F., lawyer and jurist, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, August 29, 1832; has been a resident of McLean County, Ill., from the age of 10 years, his present home being at Bloomington. He was admitted to the bar in 1857, and, from January, 1867, to December, 1868, was State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1870 he was elected Judge of the same circuit, and under the new Constitution, was chosen Judge of the new Fourteenth Circuit. From 1877 to 1879 he represented the (then) Thirteenth Illinois District in Congress, but, in 1878, was defeated by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee. In 1891 he was re-elected to a seat on the Circuit bench for the Bloomington Circuit, but resumed practice at the expiration of his term in 1897.

TISKILWA, a village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 7 miles southwest of Princeton; has creameries and cheese factories, churches, school, library, water-works, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 965.

TODD, (Col.) John, soldier, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1750; took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Va., in 1774, as Adjutant-General of General Lewis; settled as a lawyer at Fincastle, Va., and, in 1775, removed to Fayette County, Ky., the next year locating near Lexington. He was one of the first two Delegates from Kentucky County to the Virginia House of Burgesses, and, in 1778, accompanied Col. George Rogers Clark on his expedition against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. In December, 1778, he was appointed by Gov. Patrick Henry, Lieutenant-Commandant of Illinois County, embracing the region northwest of the Ohio River, serving two years; in 1780, was again a member of the Virginia Legislature, where he procured grants of land for public schools and introduced a bill for negro-emancipation. He was killed by Indians, at the battle of Blue Licks, Ky., August 19, 1782.

TODD, (Dr.) John, physician, born near Lexington, Ky., April 27, 1787, was one of the earliest graduates of Transylvania University, also graduating at the Medical University of Philadelphia; was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky troops in the War of 1812, and captured at the battle of River Raisin. Returning to Lexington after his release, he practiced there and at Bardstown, removed to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1817, and, in 1827, to Springfield, where he had been appointed Register of the Land Office by President John Quincy Adams, but was removed by Jackson in 1829. Dr. Todd continued to reside at Springfield until his death, which occurred, Jan. 9, 1865. He was a grandson of John Todd, who was appointed Commandant of Illinois County by Gov. Patrick Henry in 1778, and an uncle of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.—John Blair Smith (Todd), son of the preceding, was born at Lexington, Ky., April 4, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1817; graduated at the United States Military Academy in 1837, serving afterwards in the Florida and Mexican wars and on the frontier; resigned, and was an Indian-trader in Dakota, 1856-61; the latter year, took his seat as a Delegate in Congress from Dakota, then served as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, 1861-62; was again Delegate in Congress in 1863-65, Speaker of the Dakota Legislature in 1867, and Governor of the Territory, 1869-71. Died, at Yankton City, Jan. 5, 1872.

TOLEDO, a village and the county-seat of Cumberland County, on the Illinois Central Railroad; founded in 1854; has five churches, a graded school, two banks, creamery, flour mill, elevator, and two weekly newspapers. There are no manufacturing, the leading industry in the surrounding country being agriculture. Pop. (1890), 676; (1900), 818.

TOLEDO, CINCINNATI & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WARSAW RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILWAY, a line of railroad wholly within the State of Illinois, extending from Effner, at the Indiana State line, west to the Mississippi River at Warsaw. The length of the whole line is 230.7 miles, owned entirely by the company. It is made up of a division from Effner to Peoria (110.9 miles)—which is practically an air-line throughout nearly its entire length—and the Peoria and Warsaw Division (108.8 miles) with branches from La Harpe to Iowa Junction (10.4 miles) and 0.6 of a mile connecting with the Keokuk bridge at Hamilton.—(HISTORY.) The original charter for this line was granted, in 1863, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad; the main line was completed in 1868, and the La Harpe & Iowa Junction branch in 1873. Default was made in 1873, the road sold under foreclosure, in 1880, and reorganized as the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and the line leased for 49½ years to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company. The latter defaulted in July, 1884, and, a year later, the Toledo, Peoria & Western was transferred to trustees for the first mortgage bond-holders, was sold under foreclosure in October, 1886, and, in March, 1887, the present company, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, was organized for the purpose of taking over the property. In 1893 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company obtained a controlling interest in the stock, and, in 1894, an agreement, for joint ownership and management, was entered into between that corporation and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The total capitalization, in 1898, was $9,712,433, of which $4,076,900 was in stock and $4,895,000 in bonds.

TOLEDO, ST. LOUIS & KANSAS CITY RAILROAD. This line crosses the State in a northeast direction from East St. Louis to Humrick, near the Indiana State line, with Toledo as its eastern terminus. The length of the entire line is 450.72 miles, of which 179½ miles are operated in Illinois.—(HISTORY.) The Illinois portion of the line grew out of the union of charters granted to the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes and the Charleston, Neoga & St. Louis Railroad Companies, which were consolidated in 1881 with certain Indiana lines under the name of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad. During 1883 a narrow-gauge road was constructed from Ridge Farm, in Vermilion County, to East St. Louis (172 miles). In 1885 this was sold under foreclosure and, in June, 1886, consolidated with the main line under the name of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad. The whole line was changed to standard gauge in 1887-89, and otherwise materially improved, but, in 1893, went into the hands of receivers. Plans of reorganization have been under consideration, but the receivers were still in control in 1898.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

TOLONO, a city in Champaign County, situated at the intersection of the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads, 9 miles south of Champaign and 37 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is the business center of a prosperous agricultural region. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank, a button factory, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 905; (1890), 902; (1900), 845.

TONICA, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 9 miles south of La Salle; the district is agricultural, but the place has some manufactures and a newspaper. Population (1890), 473; (1900), 497.

TONTY, Chevalier Henry de, explorer and soldier, born at Gaeta, Italy, about 1650. What is now known as the Tontine system of insurance undoubtedly originated with his father. The younger Tonty was adventurous, and, even as a youth, took part in numerous land and naval encounters. In the course of his experience he lost a hand, which was replaced by an iron or copper substitute. He embarked with La Salle in 1678, and aided in the construction of a fort at Niagara. He advanced into the country of the Illinois and established friendly relations with them, only to witness the defeat of his putative savage allies by the Iroquois. After various encounters (chiefly under the direction of La Salle) with the Indians in Illinois, he returned to Green Bay in 1681. The same year—under La Salle's orders—he began the erection of Fort St. Louis, on what is now called "Starved Rock" in La Salle County. In 1682 he descended the Mississippi to its mouth, with La Salle, but was ordered back to Mackinaw for assistance. In 1684 he returned to Illinois and successfully repulsed the Iroquois from Fort St. Louis. In 1686 he again descended the Mississippi in search of La Salle. Disheartened by the death of his commander and the loss of his early comrades, he took up his residence with the Illinois Indians. Among them he was found by Iberville in 1700, as a hunter and fur-trader. He died, in Mobile, in September, 1704. He was La Salle's most efficient coadjutor, and next to his ill-fated leader, did more than any other of the early French explorers to make Illinois known to the civilized world.

TOPOGRAPHY. Illinois is, generally speaking, an elevated table-land. If low water at Cairo be adopted as the maximum depression, and the summits of the two ridges hereinafter mentioned as the highest points of elevation, the altitude of this table land above the sea-level varies from 300 to 850 feet, the mean elevation being about 600 feet. The State has no mountain chains, and its few hills are probably the result of unequal denudation during the drift epoch. In some localities, particularly in the valley of the upper Mississippi, the streams have cut channels from 200 to 300 feet deep through the nearly horizontal strata, and here are found precipitous scarps, but, for the most part, the fundamental rocks are covered by a thick layer of detrital material. In the northwest there is a broken tract of uneven ground; the central portion of the State is almost wholly flat prairie, and, in the alluvial lands in the State, there are many deep valleys, eroded by the action of streams. The surface generally slopes toward the south and southwest, but the uniformity is broken by two ridges, which cross the State, one in either extremity. The northern ridge crosses the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock, with an extreme altitude of 800 to 850 feet above sea-level, though the altitude of Mount Morris, in Ogle County, exceeds 900 feet. That in the south consists of a range of hills in the latitude of Jonesboro, and extending from Shawneetown to Grand Tower. These hills are also about 800 feet above the level of the ocean. The highest point in the State is in Jo Daviess County, just south of the Wisconsin State line (near Scale's Mound) reaching an elevation of 1,257 feet above sea-level, while the highest in the south is in the northeast corner of Pope County—1,046 feet—a spur of the Ozark mountains. The following statistics regarding elevations are taken from a report of Prof. C. W. Rolfe, of the University of Illinois, based on observations made under the auspices of the Illinois Board of World's Fair Commissioners: The lowest gauge of the Ohio river, at its mouth (above sea-level), is 268.58 feet, and the mean level of Lake Michigan at Chicago 581.28 feet. The altitudes of a few prominent points are as follows: Highest point in Jackson County, 695 feet; "Bald Knob" in Union County, 985; highest point in Cook County (Barrington), 818; in La Salle County (Mendota), 747; in Livingston (Strawn), 770; in Will (Monee), 804; in Pike (Arden), 790; in Lake (Lake Zurich), 880; in Bureau, 910; in Boone, 1,010; in Lee (Carnahan), 1,017; in Stephenson (Waddam's Grove), 1,018; in Kane (Briar Hill), 974; in Winnebago, 985. The elevations of important towns are: Peoria, 465; Jacksonville, 602; Springfield, 596; Galesburg, 755; Joliet, 537; Rockford, 728; Bloomington, 821. Outside of the immediate valleys of the streams, and a few isolated groves or copses, little timber is found in the northern and central portions of the State, and such growth as there is, lacks the thriftiness characteristic of the forests in the Ohio valley. These forests cover a belt extending some sixty miles north of Cairo, and, while they generally include few coniferous trees, they abound in various species of oak, black and white walnut, white and yellow poplar, ash, elm, sugar-maple, linden, honey locust, cottonwood, mulberry, sycamore, pecan, persimmon, and (in the immediate valley of the Ohio)

the cypress. From a commercial point of view, Illinois loses nothing through the lack of timber over three-fourths of the State's area. Chicago is an accessible market for the product of the forests of the upper lakes, so that the supply of lumber is ample, while extensive coal-fields supply abundant fuel. The rich soil of the prairies, with its abundance of organic matter (see Geological Formations), more than compensates for the want of pine forests, whose soil is ill adapted to agriculture. About two-thirds of the entire boundary of the State consists of navigable waters. These, with their tributary streams, ensure sufficient drainage.

TORRENS LAND TITLE SYSTEM. A system for the registration of titles to, and incumbrances upon, land, as well as transfers thereof, intended to remove all unnecessary obstructions to the cheap, simple and safe sale, acquisition and transfer of realty. The system has been in successful operation in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and British Columbia for many years, and it is also in force in some States in the American Union. An act providing for its introduction into Illinois was first passed by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly, and approved, June 13, 1895. The final legislation in reference thereto was enacted by the succeeding Legislature, and was approved, May 1, 1897. It is far more elaborate in its consideration of details, and is believed to be, in many respects, much better adapted to accomplish the ends in view, than was the original act of 1895. The law is applicable only to counties of the first and second class, and can be adopted in no county except by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the same—the vote "for" or "against" to be taken at either the November or April elections, or at an election for the choice of Judges. Thus far the only county to adopt the system has been Cook, and there it encountered strong opposition on the part of certain parties of influence and wealth. After its adoption, a test case was brought, raising the question of the constitutionality of the act. The issue was taken to the Supreme Court, which tribunal finally upheld the law.—The Torrens system substitutes a certificate of registration and of transfer for the more elaborate deeds and mortgages in use for centuries. Under it there can be no actual transfer of a title until the same is entered upon the public land register, kept in the office of the Registrar, in which case the deed or mortgage becomes a mere power of attorney to authorize the transfer to be made, upon the principle of an ordinary stock transfer, or of the registration of a United States bond, the actual transfer and public notice thereof being simultaneous. A brief synopsis of the provisions of the Illinois statute is given below: Records of deeds are made Registrars, and required to give bonds of either $50,000 or $200,000, according to the population of the county. Any person or corporation, having an interest in land, may make application to any court having chancery jurisdiction, to have his title thereto registered. Such application must be in writing, signed and verified by oath, and must conform, in matters of specification and detail, with the requirements of the act. The court may refer the application to one of the standing examiners appointed by the Registrar, who are required to be competent attorneys and to give bond to examine into the title, as well as the truth of the applicant's statements. Immediately upon the filing of the application, notice thereof is given by the clerk, through publication and the issuance of a summons to be served, as in other proceedings in chancery, against all persons mentioned in the petition as having or claiming any interest in the property described. Any person interested, whether named as a defendant or not, may enter an appearance within the time allowed. A failure to enter an appearance is regarded as a confession by default. The court, in passing upon the application, is in no case bound by the examiner's report, but may require other and further proof; and, in its final adjudication, passes upon all questions of title and incumbrance, directing the Registrar to register the title in the party in whom it is to be vested, and making provision as to the manner and order in which incumbrances thereon shall appear upon the certificate to be issued. An appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, if prayed at the time of entering the decree, upon like terms as in other cases in chancery; and a writ of error may be sued out from that tribunal within two years after the entry of the order or decree. The period last mentioned may be said to be the statutory period of limitation, after which the decree of the court must be regarded as final, although safeguards are provided for those who may have been defrauded, and for a few other classes of persons. Upon the filing of the order or decree of the court, it becomes the duty of the Registrar to issue a certificate of title, the form of which is prescribed by the act, making such notations at the end as shall show and preserve the priorities of all estates, mortgages, incumbrances and changes to which the owner's title is subject. For the purpose of preserving evidence of the owner's handwriting, a receipt for the certificate, duly witnessed or acknowledged, is required of him, which is preserved in the Registrar's office. In case any registered owner should desire to transfer the whole or any part of his estate, or any interest therein, he is required to execute a conveyance to the transferee, which, together with the certificate of title last issued, must be surrendered to the Registrar. That official thereupon issues a new certificate, stamping the word "cancelled" across the surrendered certificate, as well as upon the corresponding entry in his books of record. When land is first brought within the operation of the act, the receiver of the certificate of title is required to pay to the Registrar one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the land, the aggregate so received to be deposited with and invested by the County Treasurer, and reserved as an indemnity fund for the reimbursement of persons sustaining any loss through any omission, mistake or malfeasance of the Registrar or his subordinates. The advantage claimed for the Torrens system is, chiefly, that titles registered thereunder can be dealt with more safely, quickly and inexpensively than under the old system; it being possible to close the entire transaction within an hour or two, without the need of an abstract of title, while (as the law is administered in Cook County) the cost of transfer is only $8. It is asserted that a title, once registered, can be dealt with almost as quickly and cheaply, and quite as safely, as shares of stock or registered bonds.

TLOULON, the county-seat of Stark County, on the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, 37 miles north-northwest of Peoria, and 11 miles southeast of Galva. Besides the county court-house, the town has five churches and a high school, an academy, steam granite works, two banks, and two weekly papers. Population (1880), 967; (1890), 945; (1900), 1,057.

TOWER HILL, a village of Shelby County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroads, 7 miles east of Pana; has bank, grain elevators, and coal mine. Pop. (1900), 615.

TOWNSHEND, Richard W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Prince George's County, Md., April 30, 1840. Between the ages of 10 and 18 he attended public and private schools at Washington, D. C. In 1858 he came to Illinois, where he began teaching, at the same time reading law with S. S. Marshall, at McLeansboro, where he was admitted to the bar in 1862 and where he began practice. From 1863 to 1868 he was Circuit Clerk of Hamilton County, and, from 1868 to 1872, Prosecuting Attorney for the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. In 1873 he removed to Shawneetown, where he became an officer of the Gallatin National Bank. From 1864 to 1875 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, in 1872. For twelve years (1877 to 1889) he represented his District in Congress; was re-elected in 1888, but died, March 9, 1889, a few days after the beginning of his seventh term.

TRACY, John M., artist, was born in Illinois about 1842; served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War; studied painting in Paris in 1866-76; established himself as a portrait painter in St. Louis and, later, won a high reputation as a painter of animals, being regarded as an authority on the anatomy of the horse and the dog. Died, at Ocean Springs, Miss., March 20, 1893.

TREASURERS. (See State Treasurers.)

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel, lawyer and jurist, was born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., June 21, 1811, worked on his father's farm and studied law at Richfield, where he was admitted to practice. In 1834 he came to Springfield, Ill., traveling most of the way on foot. Here he formed a partnership with George Forquer, who had held the offices of Secretary of State and Attorney-General. In 1839 he was appointed a Circuit Judge, and, on the reorganization of the Supreme Court in 1841, was elevated to the Supreme bench, being acting Chief Justice at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. Having been elected to the Supreme bench under the new Constitution, he remained in office until March, 1855, when he resigned to take the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. This position he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred at Springfield, March 27, 1887. Judge Treat's judicial career was one of the longest in the history of the State, covering a period of forty-eight years, of which fourteen were spent upon the Supreme bench, and thirty-two in the position of Judge of the United States District Court.

TREATIES. (See Greenville, Treaty of; Indian Treaties.)

TREE, Lambert, jurist, diplomat and ex-Congressman, was born in Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1832, of an ancestry distinguished in the War of the Revolution. He received a superior classical and professional education, and was admitted to the bar, at Washington, in October, 1855. Removing to Chicago soon afterward, his professional career has been chiefly connected with that city. In 1864 he was chosen President of the Law Institute, and served as Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, from 1870 to 1875, when he resigned. The three following years he spent in foreign travel, returning to Chicago in 1878. In that year, and again in 1880, he was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourth Illinois District, but was defeated by his Republican opponent. In 1885 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator, but was defeated by John A. Logan, by one vote. In 1884 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention which first nominated Grover Cleveland, and, in July, 1885, President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, conferring the Russian mission upon him in September, 1888. On March 3, 1889, he resigned this post and returned home. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison a Commissioner to the International Monetary Conference at Washington. The year before he had attended (although not as a delegate) the International Conference, at Brussels, looking to the suppression of the slave-trade, where he exerted all his influence on the side of humanity. In 1892 Belgium conferred upon him the distinction of "Councillor of Honor" upon its commission to the World's Columbian Exposition. In 1896 Judge Tree was one of the most earnest opponents of the free-silver policy, and, after the Spanish-American War, a zealous advocate of the policy of retaining the territory acquired from Spain.

TREMONT, a town of Tazewell County, on the Peoria Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 9 miles southeast of Pekin; has two banks, two telephone exchanges, and one newspaper. Pop. (1900), 768.

TRENTON, a town of Clinton County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 31 miles east of St. Louis; in agricultural district; has creamery, milk condensery, two coal mines, six churches, a public school and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,384; (1900), 1,706; (1904), about 2,000.

TROY, a village of Madison County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis railroad, 21 miles northeast of St. Louis; has churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,080.

TRUITT, James Madison, lawyer and soldier, a native of Trimble County, Ky., was born Feb. 12, 1842, but lived in Illinois since 1843, his father having settled near Carrollton that year; was educated at Hillsboro and at McKendree College; enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers in 1862, and was promoted from the ranks to Lieutenant. After the war he studied law with Jesse J. Phillips, now of the Supreme Court, and, in 1872, was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1888, a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Truitt has been twice a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General. His home is at Hillsboro, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. Died July 26, 1900.

TRUMBULL, Lyman, statesman, was born at Colchester, Conn., Oct. 12, 1813, descended from a historical family, being a grand-nephew of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, from whom the name "Brother Jonathan" was derived as an appellation for Americans. Having received an academic education in his native town, at the age of 16 he began teaching a district school near his home, went South four years later, and engaged in teaching at Greenville, Ga. Here he studied law with Judge Hiram Warner, afterwards of the Supreme Court, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. Leaving Georgia the same year, he came to Illinois on horseback, visiting Vandalia, Belleville, Jacksonville, Springfield, Tremont and La Salle, and finally reaching Chicago, then a village of four or five thousand inhabitants. At Jacksonville he obtained a license to practice from Judge Lockwood, and, after visiting Michigan and his native State, he settled at Belleville, which continued to be his home for twenty years. His entrance into public life began with his election as Representative in the General Assembly in 1840. This was followed, in February, 1841, by his appointment by Governor Carlin, Secretary of State, as the successor of Stephen A. Douglas, who, after holding the position only two months, had resigned to accept a seat on the Supreme bench. Here he remained two years, when he was removed by Governor Ford, March 4, 1843, but, five years later (1848), was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, was re-elected in 1852, but resigned in 1853 on account of impaired health. A year later (1854) he was elected to Congress from the Belleville District as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, but, before taking his seat, was promoted to the United States Senate, as the successor of General Shields in the memorable contest of 1855, which resulted in the defeat of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Trumbull's career of eighteen years in the United States Senate (being re-elected in 1861 and 1867) is one of the most memorable in the history of that body, covering, as it does, the whole history of the war for the Union, and the period of reconstruction which followed it. During this period, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, he had more to do in shaping legislation on war and reconstruction measures than any other single member of that body. While he disagreed with a large majority of his Republican associates on the question of Andrew Johnson's impeachment, he was always found in sympathy with them on the vital questions affecting the war and restoration of the Union. The Civil Rights Bill and Freedmen's Bureau Bills were shaped by his hand. In 1873 he joined in the "Liberal Republican" movement and afterwards co-operated with the Democratic party, being their candidate for Governor in 1880. From 1863 his home was in Chicago, where, after retiring from the Senate, he continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred in that city, June 25, 1896.

TUG MILLS. These were a sort of primitive machine used in grinding corn in Territorial and early State days. The mechanism consisted of an upright shaft, into the upper end of which were fastened bars, resembling those in the capstan of a ship. Into the outer end of each of these bars was driven a pin. A belt, made of a broad strip of ox-hide, twisted into a sort of rope, was stretched around these pins and wrapped twice around a circular piece of wood called a trundle head, through which passed a perpendicular flat bar of iron, which turned the mill-stone, usually about eighteen inches in diameter. From the upright shaft projected a beam, to which were hitched one or two horses, which furnished the motive power. Oxen were sometimes employed as motive power in lieu of horses. These rudimentary contrivances were capable of grinding about twelve bushels of corn, each, per day.

TULEY, Murray Floyd, lawyer and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1827, of English extraction and descended from the early settlers of Virginia. His father died in 1832, and, eleven years later, his mother, having married Col. Richard J. Hamilton, for many years a prominent lawyer of Chicago, removed with her family to that city. Young Tuley began reading law with his step-father and completed his studies at the Louisville Law Institute in 1847, the same year being admitted to the bar in Chicago. About the same time he enlisted in the Fifth Illinois Volunteers for service in the Mexican War, and was commissioned First Lieutenant. The war having ended, he settled at Santa Fe, N. M., where he practiced law, also served as Attorney-General and in the Territorial Legislature. Returning to Chicago in 1854, he was associated in practice, successively, with Andrew Harvie, Judge Gary and J. N. Barker, and finally as head of the firm of Tuley, Stiles & Lewis. From 1869 to 1873 he was Corporation Counsel, and during this time framed the General Incorporation Act for Cities, under which the City of Chicago was reincorporated. In 1879 he was elevated to the bench of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected every six years thereafter, his last election being in 1897. He is now serving his fourth term, some ten years of his incumbency having been spent in the capacity of Chief Justice.

TUNNICLIFFE, Damon G., lawyer and jurist, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., August 20, 1829; at the age of 20, emigrated to Illinois, settling in Vermont, Fulton County, where, for a time, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He subsequently studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he established himself at Macomb, McDonough County, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. In 1868 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, from February to June, 1885, by appointment of Governor Oglesby, occupied a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, vice Pinkney H. Walker, deceased, who had been one of his first professional preceptors.

TURCHIN, John Basil (Ivan Vasilevitch Turchinoff), soldier, engineer and author, was born in Russia, Jan. 30, 1822. He graduated from the artillery school at St. Petersburg, in 1841, and was commissioned ensign; participated in the Hungarian campaign of 1849, and, in 1852, was assigned to the staff of the Imperial Guards; served through the Crimean War, rising to the rank of Colonel, and being made senior staff officer of the active corps. In 1856 he came to this country, settling in Chicago, and, for five years, was in the service of the Illinois Central Railway Company as topographical engineer. In 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after leading his regiment in Missouri, Kentucky and Alabama, was, on July 7, 1862, promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, being attached to the Army of the Cumberland until 1864, when he resigned. After the war he was, for six years, solicitor of patents at Chicago, but, in 1873, returned to engineering. In 1879 he established a Polish colony at Radom, in Washington County, in this State, and settled as a farmer. He is an occasional contributor to the press, writing usually on military or scientific subjects, and is the author of the "Campaign and Battle of Chickamauga" (Chicago, 1888).

TURNER (now WEST CHICAGO), a town and manufacturing center in Winfield Township, Du Page County, 30 miles west of Chicago, at the junction of two divisions of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. The town has a rolling mill, manufactories of wagons and pumps, and railroad repair shops. It also has five churches, a graded school, and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 1,877; with suburb, 2,270.

TURNER, (Col.) Henry L., soldier and real-estate operator, was born at Oberlin, Ohio, August 26, 1845, and received a part of his education in the college there. During the Civil War he served as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, and later, with the same rank in a colored regiment, taking part in the operations about Richmond, the capture of Fort Fisher, of Wilmington and of Gen. Joe Johnston's army. Coming to Chicago after the close of the war, he became connected with the business office of "The Advance," but later was employed in the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Philadelphia. On the failure of that concern, in 1872, he returned to Chicago and bought "The Advance," which he conducted some two years, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate business, with which he has since been identified—being President of the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1888. He has also been President of the Western Publishing Company and a Trustee of Oberlin College. Colonel Turner is an enthusiastic member of the Illinois National Guard and, on the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, promptly resumed his connection with the First Regiment of the Guard, and finally led it to Santiago de Cuba during the fighting there—his regiment being the only one from Illinois to see actual service in the field during the progress of the war. Colonel Turner won the admiration of his command and the entire nation by the manner in which he discharged his duty. The regiment was mustered out at Chicago, Nov. 17, 1898, when he retired to private life.

TURNER, John Bice, Railway President, was born at Colchester, Delaware County, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1799; after a brief business career in his native State, he became identified with the construction and operation of railroads. Among the works with which he was thus connected, were the Delaware Division of the New York & Erie and the Troy & Schenectady Roads. In 1843 he came to Chicago, having previously purchased a large body of land at Blue Island. In 1847 he joined with W. B. Ogden and others, in resuscitating the Galena & Chicago Union Railway, which had been incorporated in 1836. He became President of the Company in 1850, and assisted in constructing various sections of road in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, which have since become portions of the Chicago & Northwestern system. He was also one of the original Directors of the North Side Street Railway Company, organized in 1859. Died, Feb. 26, 1871.

TURNER, Jonathan Baldwin, educator and agriculturist, was born in Templeton, Mass., Dec. 7, 1805; grew up on a farm and, before reaching his majority, began teaching in a country school. After spending a short time in an academy at Salem, in 1827 he entered the preparatory department of Yale College, supporting himself, in part, by manual labor and teaching in a gymnasium. In 1829 he matriculated in the classical department at Yale, graduated in 1833, and the same year accepted a position as tutor in Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., which had been opened, three years previous, by the late Dr. J. M. Sturtevant. In the next fourteen years he gave instruction in nearly every branch embraced in the college curriculum, though holding, during most of this period, the chair of Rhetoric and English Literature. In 1847 he retired from college duties to give attention to scientific agriculture, in which he had always manifested a deep interest. The cultivation and sale of the Osage orange as a hedge plant now occupied his attention for many years, and its successful introduction in Illinois and other Western States—where the absence of timber rendered some substitute a necessity for fencing purposes—was largely due to his efforts. At the same time he took a deep interest in the cause of practical scientific education for the industrial classes, and, about 1850, began formulating that system of industrial education which, after twelve years of labor and agitation, he had the satisfaction of seeing recognized in the act adopted by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln, in July, 1862, making liberal donations of public lands for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States, out of which grew the University of Illinois at Champaign. While Professor Turner had zealous collaborators in this field, in Illinois and elsewhere, to him, more than to any other single man in the Nation, belongs the credit for this magnificent achievement. (See Education, and University of Illinois.) He was also one of the chief factors in founding and building up the Illinois State Teachers' Association, and the State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies. His address on "The Millennium of Labor," delivered at the first State Agricultural Fair at Springfield, in 1853, is still remembered as marking an era in industrial progress in Illinois. A zealous champion of free thought, in both political and religious affairs, he long bore the reproach which attached to the radical Abolitionist, only to enjoy, in later years, the respect universally accorded to those who had the courage and independence to avow their honest convictions. Prof. Turner was twice an unsuccessful candidate for Congress—once as a Republican and once as an "Independent"—and wrote much on political, religious and educational topics. The evening of an honored and useful life was spent among friends in Jacksonville, which was his home for more than sixty years, his death taking place in that city, Jan. 10, 1899, at the advanced age of 93 years.—Mrs. Mary Turner Carriel, at the present time (1899) one of the Trustees of the University of Illinois, is Prof. Turner's only daughter.

TURNER, Thomas J., lawyer and Congressman, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, April 5, 1815. Leaving home at the age of 18, he spent three years in Indiana and in the mining districts about Galena and in Southern Wisconsin, locating in Stephenson County, in 1836, where he was admitted to the bar in 1840, and elected Probate Judge in 1841. Soon afterwards Governor Ford appointed him Prosecuting Attorney, in which capacity he secured the conviction and punishment of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. In 1846 he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and, the following year, founded "The Prairie Democrat" (afterward "The Freeport Bulletin"), the first newspaper published in the county. Elected to the Legislature in 1854, he was chosen Speaker of the House, the next year becoming the first Mayor of Freeport. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861, and, in May of that year, was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers, but resigned in 1862. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1871, was again elected to the Legislature, where he received the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator against General Logan. In 1871 he removed to Chicago, and was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the office of State's Attorney. In February, 1874, he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for medical treatment, and died there, April 3 following.

TUSCOLA, a city and the county-seat of Douglas County, located at the intersection of the Illinois Central and two other trunk lines of railway, 22 miles south of Champaign, and 36 miles east of Decatur. Besides a brick court-house it has five churches, a graded school, a national bank, two weekly newspapers and two establishments for the manufacture of carriages and wagons. Population (1880), 1,457; (1890), 1,897; (1900), 2,569.

TUSCOLA, CHARLESTON & VINCENNES RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TUTHILL, Richard Stanley, jurist, was born at Vergennes, Jackson County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1841. After passing through the common schools of his native county, he took a preparatory course in a high school at St. Louis and in Illinois College, Jacksonville, when he entered Middlebury College, Vt., graduating there in 1863. Immediately thereafter he joined the Federal army at Vicksburg, and, after serving for some time in a company of scouts attached to General Logan's command, was commissioned a Lieutenant in the First Michigan Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, meanwhile being twice promoted. During this time he was with General Sherman in the march to Meridian, and in the Atlanta campaign, also took part with General Thomas in the operations against the rebel General Hood in Tennessee, and in the battle of Nashville. Having resigned his commission in May, 1865, he took up the study of law, which he had prosecuted as he had opportunity while in the army, and was admitted to the bar at Nashville in 1866, afterwards serving for a time as Prosecuting Attorney on the Nashville circuit. In 1873 he removed to Chicago, two years later was elected City Attorney and re-elected in 1877; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880 and, in 1884, was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District, serving until 1886. In 1887 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Rogers, was re-elected for a full term in 1891, and again in 1897.

TYNDALE, Sharon, Secretary of State, born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1816; at the age of 17 came to Belleville, Ill., and was engaged for a time in mercantile business, later being employed in a surveyor's corps under the internal improvement system of 1837. Having married in 1839, he returned soon after to Philadelphia, where he engaged in mercantile business with his father;

then came to Illinois, a second time, in 1845, spending a year or two in business at Peoria. About 1847 he returned to Belleville and entered upon a course of mathematical study, with a view to fitting himself more thoroughly for the profession of a civil engineer. In 1851 he graduated in engineering at Cambridge, Mass., after which he was employed for a time on the Sunbury & Erie Railroad, and later on certain Illinois railroads. In 1857 he was elected County Surveyor of St. Clair County, and, in 1861, by appointment of President Lincoln, became Postmaster of the city of Belleville. He held this position until 1864, when he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State and was elected, remaining in office four years. He was an earnest advocate, and virtually author, of the first act for the registration of voters in Illinois, passed at the session of 1865. After retiring from office in 1869, he continued to reside in Springfield, and was employed for a time in the survey of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railway—now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central. At an early hour on the morning of April 29, 1871, while going from his home to the railroad station at Springfield, to take the train for St. Louis, he was assassinated upon the street by shooting, as supposed for the purpose of robbery—his dead body being found a few hours later at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Tyndale was a brother of Gen. Hector Tyndale of Pennsylvania, who won a high reputation by his services during the war. His second wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Shadrach Penn, an editor of considerable reputation who was the contemporary and rival of George D. Prentice at Louisville, for some years.

"UNDERGROUND RAILROAD," THE. A history of Illinois would be incomplete without reference to the unique system which existed there, as in other Northern States, from forty to seventy years ago, known by the somewhat mysterious title of "The Underground Railroad." The origin of the term has been traced (probably in a spirit of facetiousness) to the expression of a Kentucky planter who, having pursued a fugitive slave across the Ohio River, was so surprised by his sudden disappearance, as soon as he had reached the opposite shore, that he was led to remark, "The nigger must have gone off on an underground road." From "underground road" to "underground railroad," the transition would appear to have been easy, especially in view of the increased facility with which the work was performed when railroads came into use. For readers of the present generation, it may be well to explain what "The Underground Railroad" really was. It may be defined as the figurative appellation for a spontaneous movement in the free States—extending, sometimes, into the slave States themselves—to assist slaves in their efforts to escape from bondage to freedom. The movement dates back to a period close to the Revolutionary War, long before it received a definite name. Assistance given to fugitives from one State by citizens of another, became a cause of complaint almost as soon as the Government was organized. In fact, the first President himself lost a slave who took refuge at Portsmouth, N. H., where the public sentiment was so strong against his return, that the patriotic and philosophic "Father of his Country" chose to let him remain unmolested, rather than "excite a mob or riot, or even uneasy sensations, in the minds of well-disposed citizens." That the matter was already one of concern in the minds of slaveholders, is shown by the fact that a provision was inserted in the Constitution for their conciliation, guaranteeing the return of fugitives from labor, as well as from justice, from one State to another.

In 1793 Congress passed the first Fugitive Slave Law, which was signed by President Washington. This law provided that the owner, his agent or attorney, might follow the slave into any State or Territory, and, upon oath or affidavit before a court or magistrate, be entitled to a warrant for his return. Any person who should hinder the arrest of the fugitive, or who should harbor, aid or assist him, knowing him to be such, was subject to a fine of $500 for each offense.—In 1850, fifty-seven years later, the first act having proved inefficacious, or conditions having changed, a second and more stringent law was enacted. This is the one usually referred to in discussions of the subject. It provided for an increased fine, not to exceed $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, with liability for civil damages to the party injured. No proof of ownership was required beyond the statement of a claimant, and the accused was not permitted to testify for himself. The fee of the United States Commissioner, before whom the case was tried, was ten dollars if he found for the claimant; if not, five dollars. This seemed to many an indirect form of bribery; clearly, it made it to the Judge's pecuniary advantage to decide in favor of the claimant. The law made it possible and easy for a white man to arrest, and carry into slavery, any free negro who could not immediately prove, by other witnesses, that he was born free, or had purchased his freedom.

Instead of discouraging the disposition, on the part of the opponents of slavery, to aid fugitives in their efforts to reach a region where they would be secure in their freedom, the effect of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 (as that of 1793 had been in a smaller degree) was the very opposite of that intended by its authors—unless, indeed, they meant to make matters worse. The provisions of the act seemed, to many people, so unfair, so one-sided, that they rebelled in spirit and refused to be made parties to its enforcement. The law aroused the anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and stimulated the active friends of the fugitives to take greater risks in their behalf. New efforts on the part of the slaveholders were met by a determination to evade, hinder and nullify the law.

And here a strange anomaly is presented. The slaveholder, in attempting to recover his slave, was acting within his constitutional and legal rights. The slave was his property in law. He had purchased or inherited his bondman on the same plane with his horse or his land, and, apart from the right to hold a human being in bondage, regarded his legal rights to the one as good as the other. From a legal standpoint his position was impregnable. The slave was his, representing so much of money value, and whoever was instrumental in the loss of that slave was, both theoretically and technically, a partner in robbery. Therefore he looked on "The Underground Railway" as the work of thieves, and entertained bitter hatred toward all concerned in its operation. On the other hand, men who were, in all other respects, good citizens—often religiously devout and pillars of the church—became bold and flagrant violators of the law in relation to this sort of property. They set at nought a plain provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress for its enforcement. Without hope of personal gain or reward, at the risk of fine and imprisonment, with the certainty of social ostracism and bitter opposition, they harbored the fugitive and helped him forward on every occasion. And why? Because they saw in him a man, with the same inherent right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" that they themselves possessed. To them this was a higher law than any Legislature, State or National, could enact. They denied that there could be truly such a thing as property in man. Believing that the law violated human rights, they justified themselves in rendering it null and void.

For the most part, the "Underground Railroad" operators and promoters were plain, obscure men, without hope of fame or desire for notoriety. Yet there were some whose names are conspicuous in history, such as Wendell Phillips, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Theodore Parker of Massachusetts; Gerrit Smith and Thurlow Weed of New York; Joshua R. Giddings of Ohio, and Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. These had their followers and sympathizers in all the Northern States, and even in some portions of the South. It is a curious fact, that some of the most active spirits connected with the "Underground Railroad" were natives of the South, or had resided there long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the "institution." Levi Coffin, who had the reputation of being the "President of the Underground Railroad"—at least so far as the region west of the Ohio was concerned—was an active operator on the line in North Carolina before his removal from that State to Indiana in 1826. Indeed, as a system, it is claimed to have had its origin at Guilford College, in the "Old North State" in 1819, though the evidence of this may not be conclusive.

Owing to the peculiar nature of their business, no official reports were made, no lists of officers, conductors, station agents or operators preserved, and few records kept which are now accessible. Consequently, we are dependent chiefly upon the personal recollection of individual operators for a history of their transactions. Each station on the road was the house of a "friend" and it is significant, in this connection, that in every settlement of Friends, or Quakers, there was sure to be a house of refuge for the slave. For this reason it was, perhaps, that one of the most frequently traveled lines extended from Virginia and Maryland through Eastern Pennsylvania, and then on towards New York or directly to Canada. From the proximity of Ohio to Virginia and Kentucky, and the fact that it offered the shortest route through free soil to Canada, it was traversed by more lines than any other State, although Indiana was pretty thoroughly "grid-ironed" by roads to freedom. In all, however, the routes were irregular, often zigzag, for purposes of security, and the "conductor" was any one who conveyed fugitives from one station to another. The "train" was sometimes a farm-wagon, loaded with produce for market at some town (or depot) on the line, frequently a closed carriage, and it is related that once, in Ohio, a number of carriages conveying a large party, were made to represent a funeral procession. Occasionally the train ran on foot, for convenience of side-tracking into the woods or a cornfield, in case of pursuit by a wild locomotive.

Then, again, there were not wanting lawyers who, in case the operator, conductor or station agent got into trouble, were ready, without fee or reward, to defend either him or his human freight in the courts. These included such names of national repute as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Rutherford B. Hayes, Richard H. Dana, and Isaac N. Arnold, while, taking the whole country over, their "name was legion." And there were a few men of wealth, like Thomas Garrett of Delaware, willing to contribute money by thousands to their assistance. Although technically acting in violation of law—or, as claimed by themselves, in obedience to a "higher law"—the time has already come when there is a disposition to look upon the actors as, in a certain sense, heroes, and their deeds as fitly belonging to the field of romance.

The most comprehensive collection of material relating to the history of this movement has been furnished in a recent volume entitled, "The Underground Railroad from Slavery to Freedom," by Prof. Wilbur H. Siebert, of Ohio State University; and, while it is not wholly free from errors, both as to individual names and facts, it will probably remain as the best compilation of history bearing on this subject—especially as the principal actors are fast passing away. One of the interesting features of Prof. Siebert's book is a map purporting to give the principal routes and stations in the States northwest of the Ohio, yet the accuracy of this, as well as the correctness of personal names given, has been questioned by some best informed on the subject. As might be expected from its geographical position between two slave States—Kentucky and Missouri—on the one hand, and the lakes offering a highway to Canada on the other, it is naturally to be assumed that Illinois would be an attractive field, both for the fugitive and his sympathizer.

The period of greatest activity of the system in this State was between 1840 and 1861—the latter being the year when the pro-slavery party in the South, by their attempt forcibly to dissolve the Union, took the business out of the hands of the secret agents of the "Underground Railroad," and—in a certain sense—placed it in the hands of the Union armies. It was in 1841 that Abraham Lincoln—then a conservative opponent of the extension of slavery—on an appeal from a judgment, rendered by the Circuit Court in Tazewell County, in favor of the holder of a note given for the service of the indentured slave-girl "Nance," obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Illinois upholding the doctrine that the girl was free under the Ordinance of 1787 and the State Constitution, and that the note, given to the person who claimed to be her owner, was void. And it is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, in the second year of the War of the Rebellion, issued the Proclamation of Emancipation which finally resulted in striking the shackles from the limbs of every slave in the Union.

In the practical operation of aiding fugitives in Illinois, it was natural that the towns along the border upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, should have served as a sort of entrepôts, or initial stations, for the reception of this class of freight—especially if adjacent to some anti-slavery community. This was the case at Chester, from which access was easy to Sparta, where a colony of Covenanters, or Seceders, was located, and whence a route extended, by way of Oakdale, Nashville and Centralia, in the direction of Chicago. Alton offered convenient access to Bond County, where there was a community of anti-slavery people at an early day, or the fugitives could be forwarded northward by way of Jerseyville, Waverly and Jacksonville, about each of which there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Quincy, in spite of an intense hostility among the mass of the community to anything savoring of abolitionism, became the theater of great activity on the part of the opponents of the institution, especially after the advent there of Dr. David Nelson and Dr. Richard Eells, both of whom had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people of Missouri by extending aid to fugitives. The former was a practical abolitionist who, having freed his slaves in his native State of Virginia, removed to Missouri and attempted to establish Marion College, a few miles from Palmyra, but was soon driven to Illinois. Locating near Quincy, he founded the "Mission Institute" there, at which he continued to disseminate his anti-slavery views, while educating young men for missionary work. The "Institute" was finally burned by emissaries from Missouri, while three young men who had been connected with it, having been caught in Missouri, were condemned to twelve years' confinement in the penitentiary of that State—partly on the testimony of a negro, although a negro was not then a legal witness in the courts against a white man. Dr. Eells was prosecuted before Stephen A. Douglas (then a Judge of the Circuit Court), and fined for aiding a fugitive to escape, and the judgment against him was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court after his death, in 1852, ten years after the original indictment.

A map in Professor Siebert's book, showing the routes and principal stations of the "Underground Railroad," makes mention of the following places in Illinois, in addition to those already referred to: Carlinville, in Macoupin County; Payson and Mendon, in Adams; Washington, in Tazewell; Metamora, in Woodford; Magnolia, in Putnam; Galesburg, in Knox; Princeton (the home of Owen Lovejoy and the Bryants), in Bureau; and many more. Ottawa appears to have been the meeting point of a number of lines, as well as the home of a strong colony of practical abolitionists. Cairo also became an important transfer station for fugitives arriving by river, after the completion of the Illinois Central Railroad, especially as it offered the speediest way of reaching Chicago, towards which nearly all the lines converged. It was here that the fugitives could be most safely disposed of by placing them upon vessels, which, without stopping at intermediate ports, could soon land them on Canadian soil.

As to methods, these differed according to circumstances, the emergencies of the occasion, or the taste, convenience or resources of the operator. Deacon Levi Morse, of Woodford County, near Metamora, had a route towards Magnolia, Putnam County; and his favorite "car" was a farm wagon in which there was a double bottom. The passengers were snugly placed below, and grain sacks, filled with bran or other light material, were laid over, so that the whole presented the appearance of an ordinary load of grain on its way to market. The same was true as to stations and routes. One, who was an operator, says: "Wherever an abolitionist happened on a fugitive, or the converse, there was a station, for the time, and the route was to the next anti-slavery man to the east or the north. As a general rule, the agent preferred not to know anything beyond the operation of his own immediate section of the road. If he knew nothing about the operations of another, and the other knew nothing of his, they could not be witnesses in court.

We have it on the authority of Judge Harvey B. Hurd, of Chicago, that runaways were usually forwarded from that city to Canada by way of the Lakes, there being several steamers available for that purpose. On one occasion thirteen were put aboard a vessel under the eyes of a United States Marshal and his deputies. The fugitives, secreted in a woodshed, one by one took the places of colored stevedores carrying wood aboard the ship. Possibly the term, "There's a nigger in the woodpile," may have originated in this incident. Thirteen was an "unlucky number" in this instance—for the masters.

Among the notable trials for assisting runaways in violation of the Fugitive Slave Law, in addition to the case of Dr. Eells, already mentioned, were those of Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, and Deacon Cushing of Will County, both of whom were defended by Judge James Collins of Chicago. John Hossack and Dr. Joseph Stout of Ottawa, with some half-dozen of their neighbors and friends, were tried at Ottawa, in 1859, for assisting a fugitive and acquitted on a technicality. A strong array of attorneys, afterwards widely known through the northern part of the State, appeared for the defense, including Isaac N. Arnold, Joseph Knox, B. C. Cook, J. V. Eustace, Edward S. Leland and E. C. Larned. Joseph T. Morse, of Woodford County, was also arrested, taken to Peoria and committed to jail, but acquitted on trial.

Another noteworthy case was that of Dr. Samuel Willard (now of Chicago) and his father, Julius A. Willard, charged with assisting in the escape of a fugitive at Jacksonville, in 1843, when the Doctor was a student in Illinois College. "The National Corporation Reporter," a few years ago, gave an account of this affair, together with a letter from Dr. Willard, in which he states that, after protracted litigation, during which the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was ended by his pleading guilty before Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, when he was fined one dollar and costs—the latter amounting to twenty dollars. The Doctor frankly adds: "My father, as well as myself, helped many fugitives afterwards." It did not always happen, however, that offenders escaped so easily.

Judge Harvey B. Hurd, already referred to, and an active anti-slavery man in the days of the Fugitive Slave Law, relates the following: Once, when the trial of a fugitive was going on before Justice Kercheval, in a room on the second floor of a two-story frame building on Clark Street in the city of Chicago, the crowd in attendance filled the room, the stairway and the adjoining sidewalk. In some way the prisoner got mixed in with the audience, and passed down over the heads of those on the stairs, where the officers were unable to follow.

In another case, tried before United States Commissioner Geo. W. Meeker, the result was made to hinge upon a point in the indictment to the effect that the fugitive was "copper-colored." The Commissioner, as the story goes, being inclined to favor public sentiment, called for a large copper cent, that he might make comparison. The decision was, that the prisoner was "off color," so to speak, and he was hustled out of the room before the officers could re-arrest him, as they had been instructed to do.

Dr. Samuel Willard, in a review of Professor Siebert's book, published in "The Dial" of Chicago, makes mention of Henry Irving and William Chauncey Carter as among his active allies at Jacksonville, with Rev. Bilious Pond and Deacon Lyman of Farmington (near the present village of Farmingdale in Sangamon County), Luther Ransom of Springfield, Andrew Borders of Randolph County, Joseph Gerrish of Jersey and William T. Allan of Henry, as their coadjutors in other parts of the State. Other active agents or promoters, in the same field, included such names as Dr. Charles V. Dyer, Philo Carpenter, Calvin De Wolf, L. C. P. Freer, Zebina Eastman, James H. Collins, Harvey B. Hurd, J. Young Scammon, Col. J. F. Farnsworth and others of Chicago, whose names have already been mentioned; Rev. Asa Turner, Deacon Ballard, J. K. Van Dorn and Erastus Benton, of Quincy and Adams County; President Rufus Blanchard of Knox College, Galesburg; John Leeper of Bond; the late Prof. J. B. Turner and Elihu Wolcott of Jacksonville; Capt. Parker Morse and his four sons—Joseph T., Levi P., Parker, Jr., and Mark—of Woodford County; Rev. William Sloane of Randolph; William Strawn of La Salle, besides a host who were willing to aid their fellow men in their aspirations to freedom, without advertising their own exploits.

Among the incidents of "Underground Railroad" in Illinois is one which had some importance politically, having for its climax a dramatic scene in Congress, but of which, so far as known, no full account has ever been written. About 1855, Ephraim Lombard, a Mississippi planter, but a New Englander by birth, purchased a large body of prairie land in the northeastern part of Stark County, and, taking up his residence temporarily in the village of Bradford, began its improvement. He had brought with him from Mississippi a negro, gray-haired and bent with age, a slave of probably no great value. "Old Mose," as he was called, soon came to be well known and a favorite in the neighborhood. Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that, by virtue of the Dred Scott decision (then of recent date), he had a constitutional right to take his slaves wherever he pleased, and that "Old Mose" was just as much his property in Illinois as in Mississippi. It soon became evident to some, that his bringing of the negro to Illinois was an experiment to test the law and the feelings of the Northern people. This being the case, a shrewd play would have been to let him have his way till other slaves should have been brought to stock the new plantation. But this was too slow a process for the abolitionists, to whom the holding of a slave in the free State of Illinois appeared an unbearable outrage. It was feared that he might take the old negro back to Mississippi and fail to bring any others. It was reported, also, that "Old Mose" was ill-treated; that he was given only the coarsest food in a back shed, as if he were a horse or a dog, instead of being permitted to eat at table with the family. The prairie citizen of that time was very particular upon this point of etiquette. The hired man or woman, debarred from the table of his or her employer, would not have remained a day. A quiet consultation with "Old Mose" revealed the fact that he would hail the gift of freedom joyously. Accordingly, one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars and, before morning, he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by the member of Congress to friends in Canada.

There was a great commotion in Bradford over the "stealing" of "Old Mose." Lombard and his friends denounced the act in terms bitter and profane, and threatened vengeance upon the perpetrators. The conductors were known only to a few, and they kept their secret well. Lovejoy's part in the affair, however, soon leaked out. Lombard returned to Mississippi, where he related his experiences to Mr. Singleton, the Representative in Congress from his district. During the next session of Congress, Singleton took occasion, in a speech, to sneer at Lovejoy as a "nigger-stealer," citing the case of "Old Mose." Mr. Lovejoy replied in his usual fervid and dramatic style, making a speech which ensured his election to Congress for life—"Is it desired to call attention to this fact of my assisting fugitive slaves?" he said. "Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Ill., three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every slave that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible Demon of Slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the homeless? I bid you defiance, in the name of my God!"

With another incident of an amusing character this article may be closed: Hon. J. Young Scammon, of Chicago, being accused of conniving at the escape of a slave from officers of the law, was asked by the court what he would do if summoned as one of a posse to pursue and capture a fugitive. "I would certainly obey the summons," he replied, "but—I should probably stub my toe and fall down before I reached him."

NOTE.—Those who wish to pursue the subject of the "Underground Railroad" in Illinois further, are referred to the work of Dr. Siebert, already mentioned, and to the various County Histories which have been issued and may be found in the public libraries; also for interesting incidents, to "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin," Johnson's "From Dixie to Canada," Petit's Sketches, "Still, Underground Railroad," and a pamphlet of the same title by James H. Fairchild, ex-President of Oberlin College.

UNDERWOOD, William H., lawyer, legislator and jurist, was born at Schoharie Court House, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1818, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Belleville, Ill., where he began practice in 1840. The following year he was elected State's Attorney, and re-elected in 1843. In 1846 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1848-54, sat as Judge of the Second Circuit. During this period he declined a nomination to Congress, although equivalent to an election. In 1856 he was elected State Senator, and re-elected in 1860. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1870, was again elected to the Senate, retiring to private life in 1872. Died, Sept. 23, 1875.

UNION COUNTY, one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the time of its admission as a State—having been organized, under the Territorial Government, in January, 1818. It is situated in the southern division of the State, bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and has an area of 400 square miles. The eastern and interior portions are drained by the Cache River and Clear Creek. The western part of the county comprises the broad, rich bottom lands lying along the Mississippi, but is subject to frequent overflow, while the eastern portion is hilly, and most of its area originally heavily timbered. The county is especially rich in minerals. Iron-ore, lead, bituminous coal, chalk, alum and potter's clay are found in considerable abundance. Several lines of railway (the most important being the Illinois Central) either cross or tap the county. The chief occupation is agriculture, although manufacturing is carried on to a limited extent. Fruit is extensively cultivated. Jonesboro is the county-seat, and Cobden and Anna important shipping stations. The latter is the location of the Southern Hospital for the Insane. The population of the county, in 1890, was 21,529. Being next to St. Clair, Randolph and Gallatin, one of the earliest settled counties in the State, many prominent men found their first home, on coming into the State, at Jonesboro, and this region, for a time, exerted a strong influence in public affairs. Pop. (1900), 22,610.

UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA, a secret political and patriotic order which had its origin early in the late Civil War, for the avowed purpose of sustaining the cause of the Union and counteracting the machinations of the secret organizations designed to promote the success of the Rebellion. The first regular Council of the order was organized at Pekin, Tazewell County, June 25, 1862, consisting of eleven members, as follows: John W. Glasgow, Dr. D. A. Cheever, Hart Montgomery, Maj. Richard N. Cullom (father of Senator Cullom), Alexander Small, Rev. J. W. M. Vernon, George H. Harlow (afterward Secretary of State), Charles Turner, Col. Jonathan Merriam, Henry Pratt and L. F. Garrett. One of the number was a Union refugee from Tennessee, who dictated the first oath from memory, as administered to members of a somewhat similar order which had been organized among the Unionists of his own State. It solemnly pledged the taker, (1) to preserve inviolate the secrets and business of the order; (2) to "support, maintain, protect and defend the civil liberties of the Union of these United States against all enemies, either domestic or foreign, at all times and under all circumstances," even "if necessary, to the sacrifice of life"; (3) to aid in electing only true Union men to offices of trust in the town, county, State and General Government; (4) to assist, protect and defend any member of the order who might be in peril from his connection with the order, and (5) to obey all laws, rules or regulations of any Council to which the taker of the oath might be attached. The oath was taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, the taker pledging his sacred honor to its fulfillment. A special reason for the organization existed in the activity, about this time, of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," a disloyal organization which had been introduced from the South, and which afterwards took the name, in the North, of "American Knights" and "Sons of Liberty." (See Secret Treasonable Societies.) Three months later, the organization had extended to a number of other counties of the State and, on the 25th of September following, the first State Council met at Bloomington—twelve counties being represented—and a State organization was effected. At this meeting the following general officers were chosen: Grand President—Judge Mark Bangs, of Marshall County (now of Chicago); Grand Vice-President—Prof. Daniel Wilkin, of McLean; Grand Secretary—George H. Harlow, of Tazewell; Grand Treasurer—H. S. Austin, of Peoria, Grand Marshal—J. R. Gorin, of Macon; Grand Herald—A. Gould, of Henry; Grand Sentinel—John E. Rosette, of Sangamon. An Executive Committee was also appointed, consisting of Joseph Medill of "The Chicago Tribune"; Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Morgan County; J. K. Warren, of Macon; Rev. J. C. Rybolt, of La Salle; the President, Judge Bangs; Enoch Emery, of Peoria; and John E. Rosette. Under the direction of this Committee, with Mr. Medill as its Chairman, the constitution and by-laws were thoroughly revised and a new ritual adopted, which materially changed the phraseology and removed some of the crudities of the original obligation, as well as increased the beauty and impressiveness of the initiatory ceremonies. New signs, grips and pass-words were also adopted, which were finally accepted by the various organizations of the order throughout the Union, which, by this time, included many soldiers in the army, as well as civilians. The second Grand (or State) Council was held at Springfield, January 14, 1863, with only seven counties represented. The limited representation was discouraging, but the members took heart from the inspiring words of Governor Yates, addressed to a committee of the order who waited upon him. At a special session of the Executive Committee, held at Peoria, six days later, a vigorous campaign was mapped out, under which agents were sent into nearly every county in the State. In October, 1862, the strength of the order in Illinois was estimated at three to five thousand; a few months later, the number of enrolled members had increased to 50,000—so rapid had been the growth of the order. On March 25, 1863, a Grand Council met in Chicago—404 Councils in Illinois being represented, with a number from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At this meeting a Committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization for a National Grand Council, which was carried out at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th of May following—the constitution, ritual and signs of the Illinois organization being adopted with slight modifications. The revised obligation—taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—bound members of the League to “support, protect and defend the Government of the United States and the flag thereof, against all enemies, foreign and domestic,” and to “bear true faith and allegiance to the same”; to “defend the State against invasion or insurrection”; to support only “true and reliable men” for offices of trust and profit; to protect and defend worthy members, and to preserve inviolate the secrets of the order. The address to new members was a model of impressiveness and a powerful appeal to their patriotism. The organization extended rapidly, not only throughout the Northwest, but in the South also, especially in the army. In 1864 the number of Councils in Illinois was estimated at 1,300, with a membership of 175,000; and it is estimated that the total membership, throughout the Union, was 2,000,000. The influence of the silent, but zealous and effective, operations of the organization, was shown, not only in the stimulus given to enlistments and support of the war policy of the Government, but in the raising of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field. Within a few weeks before the fall of Vicksburg, over $25,000 in cash, besides large quantities of stores, were sent to Col. John Williams (then in charge of the Sanitary Bureau at Springfield), as the direct result of appeals made through circulars sent out by the officers of the “League.” Large contributions of money and supplies also reached the sick and wounded in hospital through the medium of the Sanitary Commission in Chicago. Zealous efforts were made by the opposition to get at the secrets of the order, and, in one case, a complete copy of the ritual was published by one of their organs; but the effect was so far the reverse of what was anticipated, that this line of attack was not continued. During the stormy session of the Legislature in 1863, the League is said to have rendered effective service in protecting Governor Yates from threatened assassination. It continued its silent but effective operations until the complete overthrow of the rebellion, when it ceased to exist as a political organization.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The following is a list of United States senators from Illinois, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union until 1899, with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian Edwards, 1818-24; Jesse B. Thomas, Sr., 1818-29; John McLean, 1824-25 and 1829-30; Elias Kent Kane, 1825-35; David Jewett Baker, Nov. 12 to Dec. 11, 1830; John M. Robinson, 1830-41; William L. D. Ewing, 1835-37; Richard M. Young, 1837-43; Samuel McRoberts, 1841-43; Sidney Brees, 1843-49; James Semple, 1843-47; Stephen A. Douglas, 1847-61; James Shields, 1849-55; Lyman Trumbull, 1855-73; Orville H. Browning, 1861-63; William A. Richardson, 1863-65; Richard Yates, 1865-71; John A. Logan, 1871-77 and 1879-86; Richard J. Oglesby, 1873-79; David Davis, 1877-83; Shelby M. Cullom, first elected in 1883, and re-elected in '89 and '95, his third term expiring in 1901; Charles B. Farwell, 1887-91; John McAuley Palmer, 1891-97; William E. Mason, elected in 1897, for the term expiring, March 4, 1903.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The New). One of the leading educational institutions of the country, located at Chicago. It is the outgrowth of an attempt, put forth by the American Educational Society (organized at Washington in 1888), to supply the place which the original institution of the same name had been designed to fill. (See University of Chicago—The Old.) The following year, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York tendered a contribution of $600,000 toward the endowment of the enterprise, conditioned upon securing additional pledges to the amount of $400,000 by June 1, 1890. The offer was accepted, and the sum promptly raised. In addition, a site, covering four blocks of land in the city of Chicago, was secured—two and one-half blocks being acquired by purchase for $282,500, and one and one-half (valued at $125,000) donated by Mr. Marshall Field. A charter was secured and an organization effected, Sept. 10, 1890. The Presidency of the institution was tendered to, and accepted by, Dr. William R. Harper. Since that time the University has been the recipient of other generous benefactions by Mr. Rockefeller and others, until the aggregate donations (1898) exceed $10,000,000. Of this amount over one-half has been contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, while he has pledged himself to make additional contributions of $2,000,000, conditioned upon the raising of a like sum, from other donors, by Jan. 1, 1900. The buildings erected on the campus, prior to 1896, include a chemical laboratory costing $182,000; a lecture hall, $150,000; a physical laboratory $150,000; a museum, $100,000; an academy dormitory, $30,000; three dormitories for women, $150,000; two dormitories for men, $100,000, to which several important additions were made during 1896 and '97. The faculty embraces over 150 instructors, selected with reference to their fitness for their respective departments from among the most eminent scholars in America and Europe. Women are admitted as students and graduated upon an equality with men. The work of practical instruction began in October, 1892, with 589 registered students, coming from nearly every Northern State, and including 250 graduates from other institutions, to which accessions were made, during the year, raising the aggregate to over 900. The second year the number exceeded 1,100; the third, it rose to 1,750, and the fourth (1895-96), to some 2,000, including representatives from every State of the Union, besides many from foreign countries. Special features of the institution include the admission of graduates from other institutions to a post-graduate course, and the University Extension Division, which is conducted largely by means of lecture courses, in other cities, or through lecture centers in the vicinity of the University, non-resident students having the privilege of written examinations. The various libraries embrace over 300,000 volumes, of which nearly 60,000 belong to what are called the "Departmental Libraries," besides a large and valuable collection of maps and pamphlets.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The Old), an educational institution at Chicago, under the care of the Baptist denomination, for some years known as the Douglas University. Senator Stephen A. Douglas offered, in 1854, to donate ten acres of land, in what was then near the southern border of the city of Chicago, as a site for an institution of learning, provided buildings costing $100,000, be erected thereon within a stipulated time. The corner-stone of the main building was laid, July 4, 1857, but the financial panic of that year prevented its completion, and Mr. Douglas extended the time, and finally deeded the land to the trustees without reserve. For eighteen years the institution led a precarious existence, struggling under a heavy debt. By 1885, mortgages to the amount of $920,000 having accumulated, the trustees abandoned further effort, and acquiesced in the sale of the property under foreclosure proceedings. The original plan of the institution contemplated preparatory and collegiate departments, together with a college of law and a theological school.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, the leading educational institution under control of the State, located at Urbana and adjoining the city of Champaign. The Legislature at the session of 1863 accepted a grant of 480,000 acres of land under Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, making an appropriation of public lands to States—30,000 acres for each Senator and each Representative in Congress—establishing colleges for teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts, though not to the exclusion of classical and scientific studies. Land-scrip under this grant was issued and placed in the hands of Governor Yates, and a Board of Trustees appointed under the State law was organized in March, 1867, the institution being located the same year. Departments and courses of study were established, and Dr. John M. Gregory, of Michigan, was chosen Regent (President).—The land-scrip issued to Illinois was sold at an early day for what it would bring in open market, except 25,000 acres, which was located in Nebraska and Minnesota. This has recently been sold, realizing a larger sum than was received for all the scrip otherwise disposed of. The entire sum thus secured for permanent endowment aggregates $613,026. The University revenues were further increased by donations from Congress to each institution organized under the Act of 1862, of $15,000 per annum for the maintenance of an Agricultural Experiment Station, and, in 1890, of a similar amount for instruction—the latter to be increased $1,000 annually until it should reach $25,000.—A mechanical building was erected in 1871, and this is claimed to have been the first of its kind in America intended for strictly educational purposes. What was called "the main building" was formally opened in December, 1873. Other buildings embrace a "Science Hall," opened in 1892; a new "Engineering Hall," 1894; a fine Library Building, 1897. Eleven other principal structures and a number of smaller ones have been erected as conditions required. The value of property aggregates nearly $2,500,000, and appropriations from the State, for all purposes, previous to 1904, foot up $5,123,517.90.—Since 1871 the institution has been open to women. The courses of study embrace agriculture, chemistry, polytechnics, military tactics, natural and general sciences, languages and literature, economics, household science, trade and commerce. The Graduate School dates from 1891. In 1896 the Chicago College of Pharmacy was connected with the University: a College of Law and a Library School were opened in 1897, and the same year the Chicago College of Physicians and Surgeons was affiliated as the College of Medicine—a School of Dentistry being added to the latter in 1901. In 1885 the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred from Normal, Ill., and an Agricultural Experiment Station established in 1888, from which bulletins are sent to farmers throughout the State who may desire them.—The first name of the Institution was "Illinois Industrial University," but, in 1885, this was changed to "University of Illinois." In 1887 the Trustees (of whom there are nine) were made elective by popular vote—three being elected every two years, each holding office six years. Dr. Gregory, having resigned the office of Regent in 1880, was succeeded by Dr. Selim H. Peabody, who had been Professor of Mechanical and Civil Engineering. Dr. Peabody resigned in 1891. The duties of Regent were then discharged by Prof. Thomas J. Burrill until August, 1894, when Dr. Andrew Sloan Draper, former State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of New York, was installed as President, serving until 1904.—The corps of instruction (1904) includes over 100 Professors, 60 Associate and Assistant Professors and 200 Instructors and Assistants, besides special lecturers, demonstrators and clerks. The number of students has increased rapidly in recent years, as shown by the following totals for successive years from 1890-91 to 1903-04, inclusive: 519; 583; 714; 748; 810; 852; 1,075; 1,582; 1,824; 2,234; 2,505; 2,932; 3,289; 3,589. Of the last number, 2,271 were men and 718 women. During 1903-04 there were in all departments at Urbana, 2,547 students (256 being in the Preparatory Academy); and in the three Professional Departments in Chicago, 1,042, of whom 694 were in the College of Medicine, 185 in the School of Pharmacy, and 163 in the School of Dentistry. The University Library contains 63,700 volumes and 14,500 pamphlets, not including 5,350 volumes and 15,850 pamphlets in the State Laboratory of Natural History.—The University occupies a conspicuous and attractive site, embracing 220 acres adjacent to the line between Urbana and Champaign, and near the residence portion of the two cities. The athletic field of 11 acres, on which stand the gymnasium and armory, is enclosed with an ornamental iron fence. The campus, otherwise, is an open and beautiful park with fine landscape effects.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES. In addition to the 102 counties into which Illinois is divided, acts were passed by the General Assembly, at different times, providing for the organization of a number of others, a few of which were subsequently organized under different names, but the majority of which were never organized at all—the proposition for such organization being rejected by vote of the people within the proposed boundaries, or allowed to lapse by non-action. These unorganized counties, with the date of the several acts authorizing them, and the territory which they were intended to include, were as follows: Allen County (1841)—comprising portions of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties; Audobon (Audubon) County (1843)—from portions of Montgomery, Fayette and Shelby; Benton County (1843)—from Morgan, Greene and Macoupin; Coffee County (1837)—with substantially the same territory now comprised within the boundaries of Stark County, authorized two years later; Dane County (1839)—name changed to Christian in 1840; Harrison County (1855)—from McLean, Champaign and Vermilion, comprising territory since partially incorporated in Ford County; Holmes County (1857)—from Champaign and Vermilion; Marquette County (1843), changed (1847) to Highland—comprising the northern portion of Adams, (this act was accepted, with Columbus as the county-seat, but organization finally vacated); Michigan County (1837)—from a part of Cook; Milton County (1843)—from the south part of Vermilion; Okaw County (1841)—comprising substantially the same territory as Moultrie, organized under act of 1843; Oregon County (1851)—from parts of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties, and covering substantially the same territory as proposed to be incorporated in Allen County ten years earlier. The last act of this character was passed in 1867, when an attempt was made to organize Lincoln County out of parts of Champaign and Vermilion, but which failed for want of an affirmative vote.

UPPER ALTON, a city of Madison County, situated on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles northeast of Alton—laid out in 1816. It has several churches, and is the seat of Shurtleff College and the Western Military Academy, the former founded about 1831, and controlled by the Baptist denomination. Beds of excellent clay are found in the vicinity and utilized in pottery manufacture. Pop. (1890), 1,803; (1900), 2,373.

UPTON, George Putnam, journalist, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 25, 1834; graduated from Brown University in 1854, removed to Chicago in 1855, and began newspaper work on "The Native American," the following year taking the place of city editor of "The Evening Journal." In 1862, Mr. Upton became musical critic on "The Chicago Tribune," serving for a time also as its war correspondent in the field, later (about 1881) taking a place on the general editorial staff, which he still retains. He is regarded as an authority on musical and dramatic topics. Mr. Upton is also a stockholder in, and, for several years, has been Vice-President of the "Tribune" Company. Besides numerous contributions to magazines, his works include: "Letters of Peregrine Pickle" (1869); "Memories, a Story of German Love," translated from the German of Max Muller (1879); "Woman in Music" (1880); "Lives of German Composers" (3 vols.—1883-84); besides four volumes of standard operas, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies (1885-88).

URBANA, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Champaign County, on the "Big Four," the Illinois Central and the Wabash Railways: 130 miles south of Chicago and 31 miles west of Danville; in agricultural and coal-mining region. The mechanical industries include extensive railroad shops, manufacture of brick, suspenders and lawn-mowers. The Cunningham Deaconesses' Home and Orphanage is located here. The city has water-works, gas and electric light plants, electric car-lines (local and interurban), superior schools, nine churches, three banks and three newspapers. Urbana is the seat of the University of Illinois. Pop. (1890), 3,511; (1900), 5,728.

USREY, William J., editor and soldier, was born at Washington (near Natchez), Miss., May 16, 1827; was educated at Natchez, and, before reaching manhood, came to Macon County, Ill., where he engaged in teaching until 1846, when he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, for the Mexican War. In 1855, he joined with a Mr. Wingate in the establishment, at Decatur, of "The Illinois State Chronicle," of which he soon after took sole charge, conducting the paper until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Illinois Volunteers and was appointed Adjutant. Although born and educated in a slave State, Mr. Usrey was an earnest opponent of slavery, as proved by the attitude of his paper in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was one of the most zealous endorsers of the proposition for a conference of the Anti-Nebraska editors of the State of Illinois, to agree upon a line of policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, and, when that body met at Decatur, on Feb. 22, 1856, he served as its Secretary, thus taking a prominent part in the initial steps which resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. (See Anti-Nebraska

Editorial Convention.) After returning from the war he resumed his place as editor of "The Chronicle," but finally retired from newspaper work in 1871. He was twice Postmaster of the city of Decatur, first previous to 1850, and again under the administration of President Grant; served also as a member of the City Council and was a member of the local Post of the G. A. R., and Secretary of the Macon County Association of Mexican War Veterans. Died, at Decatur, Jan. 20, 1894.

UTICA, (also called North Utica), a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 10 miles west of Ottawa, situated on the Illinois River opposite "Starved Rock," also believed to stand on the site of the Kaskaskia village found by the French Explorer, La Salle, when he first visited Illinois. "Utica cement" is produced here; it also has several factories or mills, besides banks and a weekly paper. Population (1880), 767; (1890), 1,094; (1900), 1,150.

VAN ARNAM, John, lawyer and soldier, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., March 3, 1820. Having lost his father at five years of age, he went to live with a farmer, but ran away in his boyhood; later, began teaching, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in New York City, beginning practice at Marshall, Mich. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and, as a member of the firm of Walker, Van Arnam & Dexter, became prominent as a criminal lawyer and railroad attorney, being for a time Solicitor of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1862 he assisted in organizing the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned its Colonel, but was compelled to resign on account of illness. After spending some time in California, he resumed practice in Chicago in 1865. His later years were spent in California, dying at San Diego, in that State, April 6, 1890.

VANDALIA, the principal city and county-seat of Fayette County. It is situated on the Kaskaskia River, 30 miles north of Centralia, 62 miles south by west of Decatur, and 63 miles east-northeast of St. Louis. It is an intersecting point for the Illinois Central and the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute Railroads. It was the capital of the State from 1820 to 1839, the seat of government being removed to Springfield, the latter year, in accordance with act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1837. It contains a court house (old State Capitol building), six churches, two banks, three weekly papers, a graded school, flour, saw and paper mills, foundry, stove and heating mill, carriage and wagon and brick works. Pop. (1890), 2,144; (1900), 2,665.

VANDEVEER, Horatio M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Washington County, Ind., March 1, 1816; came with his family to Illinois at an early age, settling on Clear Creek, now in Christian County; taught school and studied law, using books borrowed from the late Hon. John T. Stuart of Springfield; was elected first County Recorder of Christian County and, soon after, appointed Circuit Clerk, filling both offices three years. He also held the office of County Judge from 1848 to 1857; was twice chosen Representative in the General Assembly (1842 and 1850) and once to the State Senate (1862); in 1846, enlisted and was chosen Captain of a company for the Mexican War, but, having been rejected on account of the quota being full, was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster, in this capacity serving on the staff of General Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista. Among other offices held by Mr. Vandever, were those of Postmaster of Taylorville, Master in Chancery, Presidential Elector (1848), Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and Judge of the Circuit Court (1870-79). In 1868 Judge Vandever established the private banking firm of H. M. Vandever & Co., at Taylorville, which, in conjunction with his sons, he continued successfully during the remainder of his life. Died, March 12, 1894.

VAN HORNE, William C., Railway Manager and President, was born in Will County, Ill., February, 1843; began his career as a telegraph operator on the Illinois Central Railroad in 1856, was attached to the Michigan Central and Chicago & Alton Railroads (1858-72), later being General Manager or General Superintendent of various other lines (1872-79). He next served as General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, but soon after became General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, which he assisted to construct to the Pacific Coast; was elected Vice-President of the line in 1884, and its President in 1888. His services have been recognized by conferring upon him the order of knighthood by the British Government.

VASSEUR, Noel C., pioneer Indian-trader, was born of French parentage in Canada, Dec. 25, 1799; at the age of 17 made a trip with a trading party to the West, crossing Wisconsin by way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the route pursued by Joliet and Marquette in 1673; later, was associated with Gurdon S. Hubbard in the service of the American Fur Company, in 1820 visiting the region now embraced in Iroquois County, where he and Hubbard subsequently established a trading post among the Pottawatomie Indians, believed to have been the site of the present town of Iroquois. The way of reaching their station from Chicago was by the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers to the Kankakee, and ascending the latter and the Iroquois. Here Vasseur remained in trade until the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi, in which he served as agent of the Government. While in the Iroquois region he married Watseka, a somewhat famous Pottawatomie woman, for whom the town of Watseka was named, and who had previously been the Indian wife of a fellow-trader. His later years were spent at Bourbonnais Grove, in Kankakee County, where he died, Dec. 12, 1879.

VENICE, a city of Madison County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis and 2 miles north of East St. Louis; is touched by six trunk lines of railroad, and at the eastern approach to the new "Merchants' Bridge," with its round-house, has two ferries to St. Louis, street car line, electric lights, water-works, some manufactures and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 932; (1900), 2,450.

VENICE & CARONDELET RAILROAD. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

VERMILION COUNTY, an eastern county, bordering on the Indiana State line, and drained by the Vermilion and Little Vermilion Rivers, from which it takes its name. It was originally organized in 1826, when it extended north to Lake Michigan. Its present area is 926 square miles. The discovery of salt springs, in 1819, aided in attracting immigration to this region, but the manufacture of salt was abandoned many years ago. Early settlers were Seymour Treat, James Butler, Henry Johnston, Harvey Lidington, Gurdon S. Hubbard and Daniel W. Beckwith. James Butler and Achilles Morgan were the first County Commissioners. Many interesting fossil remains have been found, among them the skeleton of a mastodon (1868). Fire clay is found in large quantities, and two coal seams cross the county. The surface is level and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief agricultural product, although oats, wheat, rye, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Stock-raising and wool-growing are important industries. There are also several manufactories, chiefly at Danville, which is the county-seat. Coal mining is carried on extensively, especially in the vicinity of Danville. Population (1880), 41,588; (1890), 49,905; (1900), 65,635.

VERMILION RIVER, a tributary of the Illinois; rises in Ford and the northern part of McLean County, and, running northwestward through Livingston and the southern part of La Salle Counties, enters the Illinois River nearly opposite the city of La Salle; has a length of about 80 miles.

VERMILION RIVER, an affluent of the Wabash, formed by the union of the North, Middle and South Forks, which rise in Illinois, and come together near Danville in this State. It flows southeastward, and enters the Wabash in Vermilion County, Ind. The main stream is about 28 miles long. The South Fork, however, which rises in Champaign County and runs eastward, has a length of nearly 75 miles. The Little Vermilion River enters the Wabash about 7 or 8 miles below the Vermilion, which is sometimes called the Big Vermilion, by way of distinction.

VERMONT, a village in Fulton County, at junction of Galesburg and St. Louis Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 24 miles north of Beardstown; has a carriage manufactory, flour and saw-mills, brick and tile works, electric light plant, besides two banks, four churches, two graded schools, and one weekly newspaper. An artesian well has been sunk here to the depth of 2,600 feet. Pop. (1900), 1,195.

VERSAILLES, a town of Brown County, on the Wabash Railway, 48 miles east of Quincy; is in a timber and agricultural district; has a bank and weekly newspaper. Population (1900), 524.

VIENNA, the county-seat of Johnson County, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, 36 miles north-northwest of Cairo. It has a court house, several churches, a graded school, banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 494; (1890), 828; (1900), 1,217.

VIGO, Francois, pioneer and early Indian-trader, was born at Mondovi, Sardinia (Western Italy), in 1747, served as a private soldier, first at Havana and afterwards at New Orleans. When he left the Spanish army he came to St. Louis, then the military headquarters of Spain for Upper Louisiana, where he became a partner of Commandant de Leba, and was extensively engaged in the fur-trade among the Indians on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. On the occupation of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark in 1778, he rendered valuable aid to the Americans, turning out supplies to feed Clark's destitute soldiers, and accepting Virginia Continental money, at par, in payment, incurring liabilities in excess of $20,000. This, followed by the confiscation policy of the British Colonel Hamilton, at Vincennes, where Vigo had considerable property, reduced him to extreme penury. H. W. Beckwith says that, towards the close of his life, he lived on his little homestead near Vincennes, in great poverty but cheerful to the last. He was never recompensed during his life for his sacrifices in behalf of the American cause, though a tardy restitution was attempted, after his death, by the United States Government, for the benefit of his heirs. He died, at a ripe old age, at Vincennes, Ind., March 22, 1835.

VILLA RIDGE, a village of Pulaski County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 10 miles north of Cairo. Population, 500.

VINCENNES, Jean Baptiste Bissot, a Canadian explorer, born at Quebec, January, 1688, of aristocratic and wealthy ancestry. He was closely connected with Louis Joliet — probably his brother-in-law, although some historians say that he was the latter's nephew. He entered the Canadian army as ensign in 1701, and had a long and varied experience as an Indian fighter. About 1725 he took up his residence on what is now the site of the present city of Vincennes, Ind., which is named in his honor. Here he erected an earth fort and established a trading-post. In 1726, under orders, he co-operated with D'Artaguette (then the French Governor of Illinois) in an expedition against the Chickasaws. The expedition resulted disastrously. Vincennes and D'Artaguette were captured and burned at the stake, together with Father Senat (a Jesuit priest) and others of the command. (See also D'Artaguette; French Governors of Illinois.)

VIRDEN, a city of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 21 miles south by west from Springfield, and 31 miles east-southeast of Jacksonville. It has five churches, two banks, two newspapers, telephone service, electric lights, grain elevators, machine shop, and extensive coal mines. Pop. (1900), 2,280; (school census 1903), 3,651.

VIRGINIA, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Cass County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 15 miles north of Jacksonville, and 33 miles west-northwest of Springfield. It lies in the heart of a rich agricultural region. There is a flouring mill here, besides manufactory of wagons and cigars. The city has two National and one State bank, five churches, a high school, and two weekly papers. Pop (1890), 1,602; (1900), 1,600.

VOCKE, William, lawyer, was born at Minden, Westphalia (Germany), in 1839, the son of a Government Secretary in the Prussian service. Having lost his father at an early age, he emigrated to America in 1856, and, after a short stay in New York, came to Chicago, where he found employment as a paper-carrier for "The Staats-Zeitung," meanwhile giving his attention to the study of law. Later, he became associated with a real-estate firm; on the commencement of the Civil War, enlisted as a private in a three-months' regiment, and, finally, in the Twenty-fourth Illinois (the first Hecker regiment), in which he rose to the rank of Captain. Returning from the army, he was employed as city editor of "The Staats-Zeitung," but, in 1865, became Clerk of the Chicago Police Court, serving until 1869. Meanwhile he had been admitted to the bar, and, on retirement from office, began practice, but, in 1870, was elected Representative in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, in which he bore a leading part in framing "the burnt record act" made necessary by the fire of 1871. He has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, having been, for a number of years, attorney for the German Consulate at Chicago, also serving, for several years, on the Chicago Board of Education. Mr. Vocke is a man of high literary tastes, as shown by his publication, in 1869, of a volume of poems translated from the German, which has been highly commended, besides a legal work on "The Administration of Justice in the United States, and a Synopsis of the Mode of Procedure in our Federal and State Courts and All Federal and State Laws relating to Subjects of Interest to Aliens," which has been published in the German Language, and is highly valued by German lawyers and business men. Mr. Vocke was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872 at Philadelphia, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency a second time.

VOLK, Leonard Wells, a distinguished Illinois sculptor, born at Wellstown (afterwards Wells), N. Y., Nov. 7, 1828. Later, his father, who was a marble cutter, removed to Pittsfield, Mass., and, at the age of 16, Leonard began work in his shop. In 1848 he came west and began modeling in clay and drawing at St. Louis, being only self-taught. He married a cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, and the latter, in 1855, aided him in the prosecution of his art studies in Italy. Two years afterward he settled in Chicago, where he modeled the first portrait bust ever made in the city, having for his subject his first patron—the "Little Giant." The next year (1858) he made a life-size marble statue of Douglas. In 1860 he made a portrait bust of Abraham Lincoln, which passed into the possession of the Chicago Historical Society and was destroyed in the great fire of 1871. In 1868-69, and again in 1871-72, he revisited Italy for purposes of study. In 1867 he was elected academician of the Chicago Academy, and was its President for eight years. He was genial, companionable and charitable, and always ready to assist his younger and less fortunate professional brethren. His best known works are the Douglas Monument, in Chicago, several soldiers' monuments in different parts of the country, the statuary for the Henry Keep mausoleum at Watertown, N. Y., life-size statues of Lincoln and Douglas, in the State House at Springfield, and numerous portrait busts of men eminent in political, ecclesiastical and commercial life. Died, at Osceola, Wis., August 18, 1895.

VOSS, Arno, journalist, lawyer and soldier, born in Prussia, April 16, 1821; emigrated to the United States and was admitted to the bar in Chicago, in 1848, the same year becoming editor of "The Staats-Zeitung"; was elected City Attorney in 1852, and again in 1853; in 1861 became Major of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, but afterwards assisted in organizing the Twelfth Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel, still later serving with his command in Virginia. He was at Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of that place in September, 1862, but succeeded in cutting his way, with his command, through the rebel lines, escaping into Pennsylvania. Compelled by ill-health to leave the service in 1863, he retired to a farm in Will County, but, in 1869, returned to Chicago, where he served as Master in Chancery and was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1876, but declined a re-election in 1878. Died, in Chicago, March 23, 1888.

WABASH, CHESTER & WESTERN RAILROAD, a railway running from Chester to Mount Vernon, Ill., 63.33 miles, with a branch extending from Chester to Menard, 1.5 miles; total mileage, 64.83. It is of standard gauge, and almost entirely laid with 60-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) It was organized, Feb. 20, 1878, as successor to the Iron Mountain, Chester & Eastern Railroad. During the fiscal year 1893-94 the Company purchased the Tamaroa & Mount Vernon Railroad, extending from Mount Vernon to Tamaroa, 22.5 miles. Capital stock (1898), $1,250,000; bonded indebtedness, $690,000; total capitalization, $2,028,573.

WABASH COUNTY, situated in the southeast corner of the State; area 220 square miles. The county was carved out from Edwards in 1824, and the first court house built at Centerville, in May, 1826. Later, Mount Carmel was made the county-seat. (See Mount Carmel.) The Wabash River drains the county on the east; other streams are the Bon Pas, Coffee and Crawfish Creeks. The surface is undulating with a fair growth of timber. The chief industries are the raising of live-stock and the cultivation of cereals. The wool-crop is likewise valuable. The county is crossed by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Cairo and Vincennes Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. Population (1880), 4,945; (1890), 11,866; (1900), 12,583.

WABASH RAILROAD, an extensive railroad system connecting the cities of Detroit and Toledo, on the east, with Kansas City and Council Bluffs, on the west, with branches to Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and Altamont, Ill., and to Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa. The total mileage (1898) is 1,874.96 miles, of which 677.4 miles are in Illinois—all of the latter being the property of the company, besides 176.7 miles of yard-tracks, sidings and spurs. The company has trackage privileges over the Toledo, Peoria & Western (6.5 miles) between Elvaston and Keokuk bridge, and over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (21.8 miles) between Camp Point and Quincy.—(HISTORY.) A considerable portion of this road in Illinois is constructed on the line upon which the Northern Cross Railroad was projected, in the "internal improvement" scheme adopted in 1837, and embraces the only section of road completed under that scheme—that between the Illinois River and Springfield. (1) The construction of this section was begun by the State, May 11, 1837, the first rail laid, May 9, 1838, the road completed to Jacksonville, Jan. 1, 1840, and to Springfield, May 13, 1842. It was operated for a time by "mule power," but the income was insufficient to keep the line in repair and it was finally abandoned. In 1847 the line was sold for $21,100 to N. H. Ridgely and Thomas Mather of Springfield, and by them transferred to New York capitalists, who organized the Sangamon & Morgan Railroad Company, reconstructed the road from Springfield to Naples and opened it for business in 1849. (2) In 1853 two corporations were organized in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, under the name of the Toledo & Illinois Railroad and the Lake Erie, Wabash & St. Louis Railroad, which were consolidated as the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, June 25, 1856. In 1858 these lines were sold separately under foreclosure, and finally reorganized, under a special charter granted by the Illinois Legislature, under the name of the Great Western Railroad Company. (3) The Quincy & Toledo Railroad, extending from Camp Point to the Illinois River opposite Meredosia, was constructed in 1858-59, and that, with the Illinois & Southern Iowa (from Clayton to Keokuk), was united, July 1, 1865, with the eastern divisions extending to Toledo, the new organization taking the name of the main line, (Toledo, Wabash & Western). (4) The Hannibal & Naples Division (49.6 miles), from Bluffs to Hannibal, Mo., was chartered in 1863, opened for business in 1870 and leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western. The latter defaulted on its interest in 1875, was placed in the hands of a receiver and, in 1877, was turned over to a new company under the name of the Wabash Railway Company. (5) In 1868 the company, as it then existed, promoted and secured the construction, and afterwards acquired the ownership, of a line extending from Decatur to East St. Louis (110.5 miles) under the name of the Decatur & East St. Louis Railroad. (6) The Eel River Railroad, from Butler to Logansport, Ind., was acquired in 1877, and afterwards extended to Detroit under the name of the Detroit, Butler & St. Louis Railroad, completing the connection from Logansport to Detroit.—In November, 1879, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company was organized, took the property and consolidated it with certain lines west of the Mississippi, of which the chief was the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. A line had been projected from Decatur to Chicago as early as 1870, but, not having been constructed in 1881, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific purchased what was known as the Chicago & Paducah Railroad, uniting with the main line at Bement, and (by way of the Decatur and St. Louis Division) giving a direct line between Chicago and St. Louis. At this time the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific was operating the following additional leased lines: Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur (67.2 miles); Hannibal & Central Missouri (70.2 miles); Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington (36.7 miles), and the Lafayette Bloomington & Muncie (80 miles). A connection between Chicago on the west and Toledo and Detroit on the east was established over the Grand Trunk road in 1882, but, in 1890, the company constructed a line from Montpelier, Ohio, to Clark, Ind. (149.7 miles), thence by track lease to Chicago (17.5 miles), giving an independent line between Chicago and Detroit by what is known to investors as the Detroit & Chicago Division.

The total mileage of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific system, in 1884, amounted to over 3,600 miles; but, in May of that year, default having been made in the payment of interest, the work of disintegration began. The main line east of the Mississippi and that on the west were separated, the latter taking the name of the "Wabash Western." The Eastern Division was placed in the hands of a receiver, so remaining until May, 1889, when the two divisions, having been bought in by a purchasing committee, were consolidated under the present name. The total earnings and income of the road in Illinois, for the fiscal year 1898, were $4,402,621, and the expenses $4,836,110. The total capital invested (1898) was $139,889,643, including capital stock of $52,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $81,534,000.

WABASH RIVER, rises in northwestern Ohio, passes into Indiana, and runs northwest to Huntington. It then flows nearly due west to Logansport, thence southwest to Covington, finally turning southward to Terre Haute, a few miles below which it strikes the western boundary of Indiana. It forms the boundary between Illinois and Indiana (taking into account its numerous windings) for some 200 miles. Below Vincennes it runs in a south-southwesterly direction, and enters the Ohio at the south-west extremity of Indiana, near latitude 37° 49' north. Its length is estimated at 557 miles.

WAIT, William Smith, pioneer, and original suggestor of the Illinois Central Railroad, was born in Portland, Maine, March 5, 1789, and educated in the public schools of his native place. In his youth he entered a book-publishing house in which his father was a partner, and was for a time associated with the publication of a weekly paper. Later the business was conducted at Boston, and extended over the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, the subject of this sketch making extensive tours in the interest of the firm. In 1817 he made a tour to the West, reaching St. Louis, and, early in the following year, visited Bond County, Ill., where he made his first entry of land from the Government. Returning to Boston a few months later, he continued in the service of the publishing firm until 1820, when he again came to Illinois, and, in 1821, began farming in Ripley Township, Bond County. Returning East in 1824, he spent the next ten years in the employment of the publishing firm, with occasional visits to Illinois. In 1835 he located permanently near Greenville, Bond County, and engaged extensively in farming and fruit-raising, planting one of the largest apple orchards in the State at that early day. In 1845 he presided as chairman over the National Industrial Convention in New York, and, in 1848, was nominated as the candidate of the National Reform Association for Vice-President on the ticket with Gerrit Smith of New York, but declined. He was also prominent in County and State Agricultural Societies. Mr Wait has been credited with being one of the first (if not the very first) to suggest the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, which he did as early as 1835; was also one of the prime movers in the construction of the Mississippi & Atlantic Railroad—now the "Vandalia Line"—giving much time to the latter enterprise from 1846 for many years, and was one of the original incorporators of the St. Louis & Illinois Bridge Company. Died, July 17, 1865.

WALKER, Cyrus, pioneer, lawyer, born in Rockbridge County, Va., May 14, 1791; was taken while an infant to Adair County, Ky., and came to Macomb, Ill., in 1833, being the second lawyer to locate in McDonough County. He had a wide reputation as a successful advocate, especially in criminal cases, and practiced extensively in the courts of Western Illinois and also in Iowa. Died, Dec. 1, 1875. Mr. Walker was uncle of the late Pinkney H. Walker of the Supreme Court, who studied law with him. He was Whig candidate for Presidential Elector for the State-at-large in 1840.

WALKER, James Barr, clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, July 29, 1805; in his youth served as errand-boy in a country store near Pittsburg and spent four years in a printing office; then became clerk in the office of Mordecai M. Noah, in New York, studied law and graduated from Western Reserve College, Ohio; edited various religious papers, including "The Watchman of the Prairies" (now "The Advance") of Chicago, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, and for some time was lecturer on "Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion" at Oberlin College and Chicago Theological Seminary. He was author of several volumes, one of which—"The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," published anonymously under the editorship of Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (1855)—ran through several editions and was translated into five different languages, including Hindustanee. Died, at Wheaton, Ill., March 6, 1887.

WALKER, James Monroe, corporation lawyer and Railway President, was born at Claremont, N. H., Feb. 14, 1820. At fifteen he removed with his parents to a farm in Michigan; was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, graduating from the latter in 1849. He then entered a law office as clerk and student, was admitted to the bar the next year, and soon after elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw County; was also local attorney for the Michigan Central Railway, for which, after his removal to Chicago in 1853, he became General Solicitor. Two years later the firm of Sedgwick & Walker, which had been organized in Michigan, became attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and, until his death, Mr. Walker was associated with this company, either as General Solicitor, General Counsel or President, filling the latter position from 1870 to 1875. Mr. Walker organized both the Chicago and Kansas City stock-yards, and was President of these corporations, as also of the Wilmington Coal Company, down to the time of his death, which occurred on Jan. 22, 1881, as a result of heart disease.

WALKER, (Rev.) Jesse, Methodist Episcopal missionary, was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 9, 1766; in 1800 removed to Tennessee, became a traveling preacher in 1802, and, in 1806, came to Illinois under the presiding-elder-ship of Rev. William McKendree (afterwards Bishop), locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held a camp meeting near Edwardsville—the first on Illinois soil. Later, he transferred his labors to Northern Illinois; was at Peoria in 1824; at Ottawa in 1825, and devoted much time to missionary work among the Pottawatomes, maintaining a school among them for a time. He visited Chicago in 1826, and there is evidence that he was a prominent resident there for several years, occupying a log house, which he used as a church and living-room, on "Wolf Point" at the junction of the North and South Branches of the Chicago River. While acting as superintendent of the Fox River mission, his residence appears to have been at Plainfield, in the northern part of Will County. Died, Oct. 5, 1835.

WALKER, Pinkney H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Adair County, Ky., June 18, 1815. His boyhood was chiefly passed in farm work and as clerk in a general store; in 1834 he came to Illinois, settling at Rushville, where he worked in a store for four years. In 1838 he removed to Macomb, where he began attendance at an academy and the study of law with his uncle, Cyrus Walker, a leading lawyer of his time. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, practicing at Macomb until 1848, when he returned to Rushville. In 1853 he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1855. This position he resigned in 1858, having been appointed, by Governor Bissell, to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court occasioned by the resignation of Judge Skinner. Two months later he was elected to the same position, and re-elected in 1867 and '76. He presided as Chief Justice from January, 1864, to June, '67, and again from June, 1874, to June, '75. Before the expiration of his last term he died, Feb. 7, 1885.

WALL, George Willard, lawyer, politician and Judge, was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, April 22, 1839; brought to Perry County, Ill., in infancy, and received his preparatory education at McKendree College, finally graduating from the University of Michigan in 1858, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1859, when he began practice at Duquoin, Ill. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, from 1864 to '68, served as State's Attorney for the Third Judicial District; was also a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. In 1872 he was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress, although running ahead of his ticket. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Third Circuit, and re-elected in '79, '85 and '91, much of the time since 1877 being on duty upon the Appellate bench. His home is at Duquoin.

WALLACE, (Rev.) Peter, D.D., clergyman and soldier; was born in Mason County, Ky., April 11, 1813; taken in infancy to Brown County, Ohio, where he grew up on a farm until 15 years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, where he became a contractor and builder, following this occupation for a number of years. He was converted in 1835 at Springfield, Ill., and, some years later, having decided to enter the ministry, was admitted to the Illinois Conference as a deacon by Bishop E. S. James in 1855, and placed in charge of the Danville Circuit. Two years later he was ordained by Bishop Scott, and, in the next few years, held pastorates at various places in the central and eastern parts of the State. From 1867 to 1874 he was Presiding Elder of the Mattoon and Quincy Districts, and, for six years, held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of Chaddock College at Quincy, from which he received the degree of D.D. in 1881. In the second year of the Civil War he raised a company in Sangamon County, was chosen its Captain and assigned to the Seventy-third Illinois Volunteers, known as the "preachers' regiment"—all of its officers being ministers. In 1864 he was compelled by ill-health to resign his commission. While pastor of the church at Saybrook, Ill., he was offered the position of Postmaster of that place, which he decided to accept, and was allowed to retire from the active ministry. On retirement from office, in 1884, he removed to Chicago. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor Fifer the first Chaplain of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, but retired some four years afterward, when he returned to Chicago. Dr. Wallace was an eloquent and effective preacher and continued to preach, at intervals, until within a short time of his decease, which occurred in Chicago, Feb. 21, 1897, in his 84th year. A zealous patriot, he frequently spoke very effectively upon the political rostrum. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and took pride in the fact that the first vote he ever cast was for Abraham Lincoln, for Representative in the Legislature, in 1834. He was a Knight Templar, Vice-President of the Tippecanoe Club of Chicago, and, at his death, Chaplain of America Post, No. 708, G. A. R.

WALLACE, William Henry Lamb, lawyer and soldier, was born at Urbana, Ohio, July 8, 1821; brought to Illinois in 1833, his father settling near La Salle and, afterwards, at Mount Morris, Ogle County, where young Wallace attended the Rock River Seminary; was admitted to the bar in 1845; in 1846 enlisted as a private in the First Illinois Volunteers (Col. John J. Hardin's regiment), for the Mexican War, rising to the rank of Adjutant and participating in the battle of Buena Vista (where his commander was killed), and in other engagements. Returning to his profession at Ottawa, he served as District Attorney (1852-56), then became partner of his father-in-law, Col. T. Lyle Dickey, afterwards of the Supreme Court. In April, 1861, he was one of the first to answer the call for troops by enlisting, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois (three-months' men), afterwards re-enlisting for three years. As commander of a brigade he participated in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in February, 1862, receiving promotion as Brigadier-General for gallantry. At Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh), as commander of Gen. C. F. Smith's Division, devolving on him on account of the illness of his superior officer, he showed great courage, but fell mortally wounded, dying at Charleston, Tenn., April 10, 1862. His career promised great brilliancy and his loss was greatly deplored.—Martin R. M. (Wallace), brother of the preceding, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1829, came to La Salle County, Ill., with his father's family and was educated in the local schools and at Rock River Seminary; studied law at Ottawa, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, soon after locating in Chicago. In 1861 he assisted in organizing the Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, of which he became Lieutenant-Colonel, and was complimented, in 1865, with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. After the war he served as Assessor of Internal Revenue (1866-69); County Judge (1869-77); Prosecuting Attorney (1884); and, for many years past, has been one of the Justices of the Peace of the city of Chicago.

WALNUT, a town of Bureau County, on the Mendota and Fulton branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 26 miles west of Mendota; is in a farming and stock-raising district; has two banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 605; (1900), 791.

WAR OF 1812. Upon the declaration of war by Congress, in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies, and most of the other tribes of Indians in the Territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with the British. The savages had been hostile and restless for some time previous, and blockhouses and family forts had been erected at a number of points, especially in the settlements most exposed to the incursions of the savages. Governor Edwards, becoming apprehensive of an outbreak, constructed Fort Russell, a few miles from Edwardsville. Taking the field in person, he made this his headquarters, and collected a force of 350 mounted volunteers, who were later reinforced by two companies of rangers, under Col. William Russell, numbering about 100 men. An independent company of twenty-one spies, of which John Reynolds—afterwards Governor—was a member, was also formed and led by Capt. Samuel Judy. The Governor organized his little army into two regiments under Colonels Rector and Stephenson, Colonel Russell serving as second to the commander-in-chief, other members of his staff being Secretary Nathaniel Pope and Robert K. McLaughlin. On Oct. 18, 1812, Governor Edwards, with his men, set out for Peoria, where it was expected that their force would meet that of General Hopkins, who had been sent from Kentucky with a force of 2,000 men. En route, two Kickapoo villages were burned, and a number of Indians unnecessarily slain by Edwards' party. Hopkins had orders to disperse the Indians on the Illinois and Wabash Rivers, and destroy their villages. He determined, however, on reaching the headwaters of the Vermilion to proceed no farther. Governor Edwards reached the head of Peoria Lake, but, failing to meet Hopkins, returned to Fort Russell. About the same time Capt. Thomas E. Craig led a party, in two boats, up the Illinois River to Peoria. His boats, as he alleged, having been fired upon in the night by Indians, who were harbored and protected by the French citizens of Peoria, he burned the greater part of the village, and capturing the population, carried them down the river, putting them on shore, in the early part of the winter, just below Alton. Other desultory expeditions marked the campaigns of 1813 and 1814. The Indians meanwhile gaining courage, remote settlements were continually harassed by marauding bands. Later in 1814, an expedition, led by Major (afterwards President) Zachary Taylor, ascended the Mississippi as far as Rock Island, where he found a large force of Indians, supported by British regulars with artillery. Finding himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, Major Taylor retreated down the river. On the site of the present town of Warsaw he threw up fortifications, which he named Fort Edwards, from which point he was subsequently compelled to retreat. The same year the British, with their Indian allies, descended from Mackinac, captured Prairie du Chien, and burned Forts Madison and Johnston, after which they retired to Cap au Gris. The treaty of Ghent, signed Dec. 24, 1814, closed the war, although no formal treaties were made with the tribes until the year following.

WAR OF THE REBELLION. At the outbreak of the Civil War, the executive chair, in Illinois, was occupied by Gov. Richard Yates. Immediately upon the issuance of President Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), the Governor issued his proclamation summoning the Legislature together in special session and, the same day, issued a call for "six regiments of militia," the quota assigned to the State under call of the President. Public excitement was at fever heat, and dormant patriotism in both sexes was aroused as never before. Party lines were broken down and, with comparatively few exceptions, the mass of the people were actuated by a common sentiment of patriotism. On April 19, Governor Yates was instructed, by the Secretary of War, to take possession of Cairo as an important strategic point. At that time, the State militia organizations were few in number and poorly equipped, consisting chiefly of independent companies in the larger cities. The Governor acted with great promptitude, and, on April 21, seven companies, numbering 595 men, commanded by Gen. Richard K. Swift of Chicago, were en route to Cairo. The first volunteer company to tender its services, in response to Governor Yates' proclamation, on April 16, was the Zouave Grays of Springfield. Eleven other companies were tendered the same day, and, by the evening of the 18th, the number had been increased to fifty. Simultaneously with these proceedings, Chicago bankers tendered to the Governor a war loan of $500,000, and those of Springfield, $100,000. The Legislature, at its special session, passed acts increasing the efficiency of the militia law, and provided for the creation of a war fund of $2,000,000. Besides the six regiments already called for, the raising of ten additional volunteer regiments and one battery of light artillery was authorized. The last of the six regiments, apportioned to Illinois under the first presidential call, was dispatched to Cairo early in May. The six regiments were numbered the Seventh to Twelfth, inclusive—the earlier numbers, First to Sixth, being conceded to the six regiments which had served in the war with Mexico. The regiments were commanded, respectively, by Colonels John Cook, Richard J. Oglesby, Eleazer A. Paine, James D. Morgan, William H. L. Wallace, and John McArthur, constituting the "First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers." Benjamin M. Prentiss, having been chosen Brigadier-General on arrival at Cairo, assumed command, relieving General Swift. The quota under the second call, consisting of ten regiments, was mustered into service within sixty days, 200 companies being tendered immediately. Many more volunteered than could be accepted, and large numbers crossed to Missouri and enlisted in regiments forming in that State. During June and July the Secretary of War authorized Governor Yates to recruit twenty-two additional regiments (seventeen infantry and five cavalry), which were promptly raised. On July 22, the day following the defeat of the Union army at Bull Run, President Lincoln called for 500,000 more volunteers. Governor Yates immediately responded with an offer to the War Department of sixteen more regiments (thirteen of infantry and three of cavalry), and a battalion of artillery, adding, that the State claimed it as her right, to do her full share toward the preservation of the Union. Under supplemental authority, received from the Secretary of War in August, 1861, twelve additional regiments of infantry and five of cavalry were raised, and, by December, 1861, the State had 43,000 volunteers in the field and 17,000 in camps of instruction. Other calls were made in July and August, 1862, each for 300,000 men. Illinois' quota, under both calls, was over 52,000 men, no regard being paid to the fact that the State had already furnished 16,000 troops in excess of its quotas under previous calls. Unless this number of volunteers was raised by September 1, a draft would be ordered. The tax was a severe one, inasmuch as it would fall chiefly upon the prosperous citizens, the floating population, the idle and the extremely poor having already followed the army's march, either as soldiers or as camp-followers. But recruiting was actively carried on, and, aided by liberal bounties in many of the counties, in less than a fortnight the 52,000 new troops were secured, the volunteers coming largely from the substantial classes—agricultural, mercantile, artisan and professional. By the end of December, fifty-nine regiments and four batteries had been dispatched to the front, besides a considerable number to fill up regiments already in the field, which had suffered severely from battle, exposure and disease. At this time, Illinois had an aggregate of over 135,000 enlisted men in the field. The issue of President Lincoln's preliminary proclamation of emancipation, in September, 1862, was met by a storm of hostile criticism from his political opponents, who—aided by the absence of so large a proportion of the loyal population of the State in the field—were able to carry the elections of that year. Consequently, when the Twenty-third General Assembly convened in regular session at Springfield, on Jan. 5, 1863, a large majority of that body was not only opposed to both the National and State administrations, but avowedly opposed to the further prosecution of the war under the existing policy. The Legislature reconvened in June, but was prorogued by Governor Yates. Between Oct. 1, 1863, and July 1, 1864, 16,000 veterans re-enlisted and 87,000 new volunteers were enrolled; and, by the date last mentioned, Illinois had furnished to the Union army 244,496 men, being 14,596 in excess of the allotted quotas, constituting fifteen per cent of the entire population. These were comprised in 151 regiments of infantry, 17 of cavalry and two complete regiments of artillery, besides twelve independent batteries. The total losses of Illinois organizations, during the war, has been reported at 34,834, of which 5,874 were killed in battle, 4,020 died from wounds, 22,786 from disease and 2,154 from other causes—being a total of thirteen per cent of the entire force of the State in the service. The part which Illinois played in the contest was conspicuous for patriotism, promptness in response to every call, and the bravery and efficiency of its troops in the field—reflecting honor upon the State and its history. Nor were its loyal citizens—who, while staying at home, furnished moral and material support to the men at the front—less worthy of praise than those who volunteered. By upholding the Government—National and State—and by their zeal and energy in collecting and sending forward immense quantities of supplies—surgical, medical and other—often at no little sacrifice, they contributed much to the success of the Union arms. WAR OF THE REBELLION (HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS). The following is a list of the various military organizations mustered into the service during the Civil War (1861-65), with the terms of service and a summary of the more important events in the history of each, while in the field:

SEVENTH INFANTRY. Illinois having sent six regiments to the Mexican War, by courtesy the numbering of the regiments which took part in the war for the Union began with number Seven. A number of regiments which responded to the first call of the President, claimed the right to be recognized as the first regiment in the field, but the honor was finally accorded to that organized at Springfield by Col. John Cook, and hence his regiment was numbered Seventh. It was mustered into the service, April 25, 1861, and remained at Mound City during the three months' service, the period of its first enlistment. It was subsequently reorganized and mustered for the three years' service, July 25, 1861, and was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Cherokee, Allatoona Pass, Salkahatchie Swamp, Bentonville and Columbia. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., Dec. 22, 1861, was mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, July 11.

EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for three months' service, April 26, 1861, Richard J. Oglesby of Decatur, being appointed Colonel. It remained at Cairo during its term of service, when it was mustered out. July 25, 1861, it was reorganized and mustered in for three years' service. It participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Port Gibson, Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill, Vicksburg, Brownsville, and Spanish Fort; re-enlisted as veterans, March 24, 1864; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, May 4, 1866, paid off and discharged, May 13, having served five years.

NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Springfield, April 26, 1861, for the term of three months, under Col. Eleazer A. Paine. It was reorganized at Cairo, in August, for three years, being composed of companies from St. Clair, Madison, Montgomery, Pulaski, Alexander and Mercer Counties; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson (Tenn.), Meed Creek Swamps, Salem, Wyatt, Florence, Montezuma, Athens and Grenada. The regiment was mounted, March 15, 1863, and so continued during the remainder of its service. Mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865.

TENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service for three months, on April 29, 1861, at Cairo, and on July 29, 1861, was mustered into the service for three years, with Col. James D. Morgan in command. It was engaged at Sykeston, New Madrid, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw, Chattahoochie, Savannah and Bentonville. Re-enlisted as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864, and mustered out of service, July 4, 1865, at Louisville, and received final discharge and pay, July 11, 1865, at Chicago.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, April 30, 1861, for three months. July 30, the regiment was mustered out, and re-enlisted for three years' service. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Tallahatchie, Vicksburg, Liverpool Heights, Yazoo City, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards Brigadier-General and killed at Shiloh, was its first Colonel. Mustered out of service, at Baton Rouge, July 14, 1865; paid off and discharged at Springfield.

TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service for three years, August 1, 1861; was engaged at Columbus, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Lay's Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kenesaw, Nickajack Creek, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Atlanta, Allatoona and Goldsboro. On Jan. 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. John McArthur was its first Colonel, succeeded by Augustus L. Chetlain, both being promoted to Brigadier-Generals. Mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, at Springfield, July 18.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments organized under the act known as the "Ten Regiment Bill"; was mustered into service on May 24, 1861, for three years, at Dixon, with John B. Wyman as Colonel; was engaged at Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Rossville and Ringgold Gap. Mustered out at Springfield, June 18, 1864, having served three years and two months.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments raised under the "Ten Regiment Bill," which anticipated the requirements of the General Government by organizing, equipping and drilling a regiment in each Congressional District in the State for thirty days, unless sooner required for service by the United States. It was mustered in at Jacksonville for three years, May 25, 1861, under command of John M. Palmer as its first Colonel; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora, Vicksburg, Jackson, Fort Beauregard and Meridian; consolidated with the Fifteenth Infantry, as a veteran battalion (both regiments having enlisted as veterans), on July 1, 1864. In October, 1864, the major part of the battalion was captured by General Hood and sent to Andersonville. The remainder participated in the "March to the Sea," and through the campaign in the Carolinas. In the spring of 1865 the battalion organization was discontinued, both regiments having been filled up by recruits. The regiment was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 16, 1865; and arrived at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge. The aggregate number of men who belonged to this organization was 1,980, and the aggregate mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, 480. During its four years and four months of service, the regiment marched 4,490 miles, traveled by rail, 2,330 miles, and, by river, 4,490 miles—making an aggregate of 11,670 miles.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Raised under the "Ten Regiment Act," in the (then) First Congressional District; was organized at Freeport, and mustered into service, May 24, 1861. It was engaged at Sedalia, Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora Hill, Vicksburg, Fort Beauregard, Champion Hill, Allatoona and Bentonville. In March, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in July, 1864, was consolidated with the Fourteenth Infantry as a Veteran Battalion. At Big Shanty and Ackworth a large portion of the battalion was captured by General Hood. At Raleigh the Veteran Battalion was discontinued and the Fifteenth reorganized. From July 1, to Sept. 1, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Kearney. Having been mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, it was sent to Springfield for final payment and discharge—having served four years and four months. Miles marched, 4,299; miles by rail, 2,403, miles by steamer, 4,310; men enlisted from date of organization, 1,963; strength at date of muster-out, 640.

SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Quincy under the "Ten-Regiment Act," May 24, 1861. The regiment was engaged at New Madrid, Tiptonville, Corinth, Buzzards' Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochee River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, Fayetteville, Averysboro and Bentonville. In December, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans; was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 8, 1865, after a term of service of four years and three months, and, a week later, arrived at Springfield, where it received its final pay and discharge papers.

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill., on May 24, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.). Greenfield (Ark.), Shiloh, Corinth, Hatchie and Vicksburg. In May, 1864, the term of enlistment having expired, the regiment was ordered to Springfield for pay and discharge. Those men and officers who re-enlisted, and those whose term had not expired, were consolidated with the Eighth Infantry, which was mustered out in the spring of 1866.

EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized under the provisions of the "Ten Regiment Bill," at Anna, and mustered into the service on May 28, 1861, the term of enlistment being for three years. The regiment participated in the capture of Fort McHenry, and was actively engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Dec. 16, 1865, and Dec. 31, thereafter, arrived at Springfield, Ill., for payment and discharge. The aggregate enlistments in the regiment, from its organization to date of discharge (rank and file), numbered 2,043.

NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the United States service for three years, June 17, 1861, at Chicago, embracing four companies which had been accepted under the call for three months' men; participated in the battle of Stone River and in the Tullahoma and Chattanooga campaigns; was also engaged at Davis' Cross Roads, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Resaca. It was mustered out of service on July 9, 1864, at Chicago. Originally consisting of nearly 1,000 men, besides a large number of recruits received during the war, its strength at the final muster-out was less than 350.

TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Organized, May 14, 1861, at Joliet, and June 13, 1861, and mustered into the service for a term of three years. It participated in the following engagements, battles, sieges, etc.: Fredericktown (Mo.), Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Thompson's Plantation, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. After marching through the Carolinas, the regiment was finally ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out, July 16, 1865, receiving its final discharge at Chicago, on July 24.

TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized under the "Ten Regiment Bill," from the (then) Seventh Congressional District, at Mattoon, and mustered into service for three years, June 28, 1861. Its first Colonel was U. S. Grant, who was in command until August 7, when he was commissioned Brigadier-General. It was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Chattanooga, in February, 1864. From June, 1864, to December, 1865, it was on duty in Texas. Mustered out at San Antonio, Dec. 16, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 18, 1866.

TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Belleville, and mustered into service, for three years, at Caseyville, Ill., June 25, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Charleston (Mo.), Sikestown, Tiptonville, Farmington, Corinth, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, and all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, except Rocky Face Ridge. It was mustered out at Springfield, July 7, 1864, the veterans and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, being consolidated with the Forty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. The organization of the Twenty-third Infantry Volunteers commenced, at Chicago, under the popular name of the "Irish Brigade," immediately upon the opening of hostilities at Sumter. The formal muster of the regiment, under the command of Col. James A. Mulligan, was made, June 15, 1861, at Chicago, when it was occupying barracks known as Kane's brewery near the river on West Polk Street. It was early ordered to Northern Missouri, and was doing garrison duty at Lexington, when, in September, 1861, it surrendered with the rest of the garrison, to the forces under the rebel General Price, and was paroled. From Oct. 8, 1861, to June 14, 1862, it was detailed to guard prisoners at Camp Douglas. Thereafter it participated in engagements in the Virginias, as follows: at South Fork, Greenland Gap, Philippi, Hedgeville, Leetown, Maryland Heights, Snicker's Gap, Kernstown, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Charlestown, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, Harrisonburg, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. It also took part in the siege of Richmond and the pursuit of Lee, being present at the surrender at Appomattox. In January and February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Greenland Gap, W. Va. In August, 1864, the ten companies of the Regiment, then numbering 440, were consolidated into five companies and designated, "Battalion, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry." The regiment was thanked by Congress for its part at Lexington, and was authorized to inscribe Lexington upon its colors. (See also Mulligan, James A.)

TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY, (known as the First Hecker Regiment). Organized at Chicago, with two companies—to-wit: the Union Cadets and the Lincoln Rifles—from the three months' service, in June, 1861, and mustered in, July 8, 1861. It participated in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and other engagements in the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out of service at Chicago, August 6, 1864. A fraction of the regiment, which had been recruited in the field, and whose term of service had not expired at the date of muster-out, was organized into one company and attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and mustered out at Camp Butler, August 1, 1865.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized from the counties of Kankakee, Iroquois, Ford, Vermilion, Douglas, Coles, Champaign and Edgar, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 4, 1861. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, in the siege of Corinth, the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, and innumerable skirmishes; was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 5, 1864. During its three years' service the regiment traveled 4,962 miles, of which 3,252 were on foot, the remainder by steamboat and railroad.

TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, consisting of seven companies, at Springfield, August 31, 1861. On Jan. 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. It was authorized by the commanding General to inscribe upon its banners "New Madrid"; "Island No. 10"; "Farmington"; "Siege of Corinth"; "Tuka"; "Corinth—3d and 4th, 1862"; "Resaca"; "Kenesaw"; "Ezra Church"; "Atlanta"; "Jonesboro"; "Griswoldville"; "McAllister"; "Savannah"; "Columbia," and "Bentonville." It was mustered out at Louisville, July 20, 1865, and paid off and discharged, at Springfield, July 28—the regiment having marched, during its four years of service, 6,931 miles, and fought twenty-eight hard battles, besides innumerable skirmishes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. First organized, with only seven companies, at Springfield, August 10, 1861, and organization completed by the addition of three more companies, at Cairo, on September 1. It took part in the battle of Belmont, the siege of Island No. 10, and the battles of Farmington, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Calhoun, Adairsville, Dallas, Pine Top Mountain and Kenesaw Mountain, as well as in the investment of Atlanta; was relieved from duty, August 25, 1864, while at the front, and mustered out at Springfield, September 20. Its veterans, with the recruits whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with the Ninth Infantry.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Composed of companies from Pike, Fulton, Schuyler, Mason, Scott and Menard Counties; was organized at Springfield, August 15, 1861, and mustered into service for three years. It participated in the battles of Shiloh and Metamora, the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Jackson, Mississippi, and Fort Beauregard, and in the capture of Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and Mobile. From June, 1864, to March, 1866, it was stationed in Texas, and was mustered out at Brownsville, in that State, March 15, 1866, having served four years and seven months. It was discharged, at Springfield, May 13, 1866.

TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, August 19, 1861, and was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the sieges of Corinth, Vicksburg and Mobile. Eight companies were detailed for duty at Holly Springs, and were there captured by General Van Dorn, in December, 1862, but were exchanged, six months later. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, from June, 1864, to November, 1865, was on duty in Texas. It was mustered out of service in that State, Nov. 6, 1865, and received final discharge on November 28.

THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, August 28, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, the siege of Corinth, Median Station, Raymond, Champion Hills, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, Big Shanty, Atlanta, Savannah, Pocatigo, Orangeburg, Columbia, Cheraw, and Fayetteville; mustered out, July 17, 1865, and received final payment and discharge at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Cairo, and there mustered into service on Sept. 18, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the two expeditions against Vicksburg, at Thompson's Hill, Ingram Heights, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hill, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station and Jonesboro; also participated in the "March to the Sea" and took part in the battles and skirmishes at Columbia, Cheraw, Fayetteville and Bentonville. A majority of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in March, 1864. It was mustered out at Louisville, July 19, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, July 23.

THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Dec. 31, 1861. By special authority from the War Department, it originally consisted of ten companies of infantry, one of cavalry, and a battery. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the sieges of Corinth and Vicksburg, and in the battles of La Grange, Grand Junction, Metamora, Harrisonburg, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Alatoona, Savannah, Columbia, Cheraw and Bentonville. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in June, 1865, was ordered to Fort Leavenworth. Mustered out there, Sept. 16, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield.

THIRTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Springfield in September, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, the assault and siege of Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Fort Esperanza, and in the expedition against Mobile. The regiment veteranized at Vicksburg, Jan. 1, 1864; was mustered out, at the same point, Nov. 24, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, Dec. 6 and 7, 1865. The aggregate enrollment of the regiment was between 1,900 and 2,000.

THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 7, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Murfreesboro, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and, after participating in the "March to the Sea" and through the Carolinas, took part in the battle of Bentonville. After the surrender of Johnston, the regiment went with Sherman's Army to Washington, D. C., and took part in the grand review, May 24, 1865; left Washington, June 12, and arrived at Louisville, Ky., June 18, where it was mustered out, on July 12; was discharged and paid at Chicago, July 17, 1865.

THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur on July 3, 1861, and its services tendered to the President, being accepted by the Secretary of War as "Col. G. A. Smith's Independent Regiment of Illinois Volunteers," on July 23, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 12. It was engaged at Pea Ridge and in the siege of Corinth, also participated in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Dallas and Kenesaw. Its final muster-out took place at Springfield, Sept. 27, 1864, the regiment having marched (exclusive of railroad and steamboat transportation) 3,056 miles.

THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Camp Hammond, near Aurora, Ill., and mustered into service, Sept. 23, 1861, for a term of three years. The regiment, at its organization, numbered 965 officers and enlisted men, and had two companies of Cavalry ("A" and "B"), 186 officers and men. It was engaged at Leetown, Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, the siege of Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. Mustered out, Oct. 8, 1865, and disbanded, at Springfield, Oct. 27, having marched and been transported, during its term of service, more than 10,000 miles.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Familiarly known as "Fremont Rifles"; organized in August, 1861, and mustered into service, Sept. 18. The regiment was presented with battle-flags by the Chicago Board of Trade. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Neosho, Prairie Grove and Chalk Bluffs, the siege of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Yazoo City and Morgan's Bend. In October, 1863, it was ordered to the defense of the frontier along the Rio Grande; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; took part in the siege and storming of Fort Blakely and the capture of Mobile; from July, 1865, to May, 1866, was again on duty in Texas; was mustered out at Houston, May 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield, May 31, having traveled some 17,000 miles, of which nearly 3,300 were by marching.

THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, in September, 1861. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Fredericktown, Perryville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Pine Top, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; from June to December, 1865, was on duty in Louisiana and Texas; was mustered out at Victoria, Texas, Dec. 31, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield.

THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. The organization of this Regiment was commenced as soon as the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached Chicago. General Thomas O. Osborne was one of its contemplated field officers, and labored zealously to get it accepted under the first call for troops, but did not accomplish his object. The regiment had already assumed the name of the "Yates Phalanx" in honor of Governor Yates. It was accepted by the War Department on the day succeeding the first Bull Run disaster (July 22, 1861), and Austin Light, of Chicago, was appointed Colonel. Under his direction the organization was completed, and the regiment left Camp Mather, Chicago, on the morning of Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Malvern Hill (the second), Morris Island, Fort Wagner, Drury's Bluff, and in numerous engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, including the capture of Fort Gregg, and was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox. In the meantime the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Hilton Head, S. C., in September, 1863. It was mustered out at Norfolk, Dec. 6, 1865, and received final discharge at Chicago, December 16.

FORTIETH INFANTRY. Enlisted from the counties of Franklin, Hamilton, Wayne, White, Wabash, Marion, Clay and Fayette, and mustered into service for three years at Springfield, August 10, 1861. It was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth, at Jackson (Miss.), in the siege of Vicksburg, at Missionary Ridge, New Hope Church, Black Jack Knob, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Ezra Chapel, Griswoldville, siege of Savannah, Columbia (S. C.), and Bentonville. It re-enlisted, as veterans, at Scottsboro, Ala., Jan. 1, 1864, and was mustered out at Louisville, July 24, 1865, receiving final discharge at Springfield.

FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur during July and August, 1861, and was mustered into service, August 5. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, the second battle of Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg and Jackson, in the Red River campaign, at Guntown, Kenesaw Mountain and Allatoona, and participated in the "March to the Sea." It re-enlisted, as veterans, March 17, 1864, at Vicksburg, and was consolidated with the Fifty-third Infantry, Jan. 4, 1865, forming Companies G and H.

FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, July 22, 1861; was engaged at Island No. 10, the siege of Corinth, battles of Farmington, Columbia (Tenn.), was besieged at Nashville, engaged at Stone River, in the Tullahoma campaign, at Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Pine and Kenesaw Mountains, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy Station, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville. It re-enlisted, as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864; was stationed in Texas from July to December, 1865; was mustered out at Indianola, in that State, Dec. 16, 1865, and finally discharged, at Springfield, Jan. 12, 1866.

FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield in September, 1861, and mustered into service on Oct. 12. The regiment took part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh and in the campaigns in West Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas; was mustered out at Little Rock, Nov. 30, 1865, and returned to Springfield for final pay and discharge, Dec. 14, 1865.

FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized in August, 1861, at Chicago, and mustered into service, Sept. 13, 1861; was engaged at Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Hoover's Gap, Shelbyville, Tullahoma, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Rocky Face Ridge, Adairsville, Dallas, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Gulp's Farm, Chattahoochee River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans in Tennessee, in January, 1864. From June to September, 1865, it was stationed in Louisiana and Texas, was mustered out at Port Lavaca, Sept. 25, 1865, and received final discharge, at Springfield, three weeks later.

FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Originally called the "Washburne Lead Mine Regiment"; was organized at Galena, July 23, 1861, and mustered into service at Chicago, Dec. 25, 1861. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, battle of Medan, the campaign against Vicksburg, the Meridian raid, the Atlanta campaign, the "March to the Sea," and the advance through the Carolinas. The regiment veteranized in January, 1864; was mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 12, 1865, and arrived in Chicago, July 15, 1865, for final pay and discharge. Distance marched in four years, 1,750 miles.

FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Dec. 28, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, battle of Metamora, siege of Vicksburg (where five companies of the regiment were captured), in the reduction of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakeley, and the capture of Mobile. It was mustered in as a veteran regiment, Jan. 4, 1864. From May, 1865, to January, 1866, it was on duty in Louisiana; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, Jan. 20, 1866, and, on Feb. 1, 1866, finally paid and discharged at Springfield.

FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Peoria, Ill., on August 16, 1861. The regiment took part in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10; also participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, the second battle of Corinth, the capture of Jackson, the siege of Vicksburg, the Red River expedition and the battle of Pleasant Hill, and in the struggle at Lake Chicot. It was ordered to Chicago to assist in quelling an anticipated riot, in 1864, but, returning to the front, took part in the reduction of Spanish Fort and the capture of Mobile; was mustered out, Jan. 21, 1866, at Selma, Ala., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final pay and discharge. Those members of the regiment who did not re-enlist as veterans were mustered out, Oct. 11, 1864.

On the 7th of June, 1865, it was mustered out, and started for Springfield, where, on the 21st of June, it was paid off and disbanded.

ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Knoxville, in August, 1862, and mustered in, September 1 and 2. It was engaged at Resaca, Camp Creek, Burnt Hickory, Big Shanty, Peach Tree Creek and Averysboro; mustered out of service June 6, 1865, and started home, arriving at Chicago on the 9th, and, June 14, received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD INFANTRY. Recruited wholly in Fulton County, and mustered into the service, Oct. 2, 1862. It took part in the Grierson raid, the sieges of Vicksburg, Jackson, Atlanta and Savannah, and the battles of Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain and Griswoldsville; was also in the campaign through the Carolinas. The regiment was mustered out at Louisville, June 21, and received final discharge at Chicago, July 9, 1865. The original strength of the regiment was 808, and 84 recruits were enlisted.

ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Ottawa, in August, 1862, and composed almost entirely of La Salle County men. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Harts-ville, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Peach Tree Creek, Utoy Creek, Jonesboro and Bentonville, besides many severe skirmishes; was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 6, 1865, and, a few days later, received final discharge at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 2, 1862, at Dixon, and participated in the Atlanta campaign, being engaged at Resaca, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta, and almost constantly skirmishing; also took part in the "March to the Sea" and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the battles of Averysboro and Bentonville. It was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 7, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Chicago, June 17.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Lincoln, Sept. 18, 1862, eight of the ten companies having been recruited in Logan County, the other two being from Sangamon and Menard Counties. It aided in the defense of Jackson, Tenn., where Company "C" was captured and paroled, being exchanged in the summer of 1863; took part in the siege of Vicksburg, the Yazoo expedition, the capture of Little Rock, the battle of Clarendon, and performed service at various points in Arkansas. It was mustered out, July 12, 1865, at Pine Bluff, Ark., and arrived at Springfield, July 24, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

It participated in the battles of Tupelo and Nashville, and in the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, and was mustered out, July 15, 1865, at Mobile, and finally discharged at Springfield, August 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Mattoon, Sept. 6, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Milton, Hoover's Gap, and Farmington; also took part in the entire Atlanta campaign, marching as cavalry and fighting as infantry. Later, it served as mounted infantry in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, taking a prominent part in the capture of Selma. The regiment was discharged at Springfield, July 11, 1865—the recruits, whose terms had not expired, being transferred to the Sixty-first Volunteer Infantry.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service, Sept. 10, 1862, at Springfield; took part in the Vicksburg campaign and in the battles of Port Gibson, Raymond and Champion Hills, the siege of Vicksburg, the Meridian raid, the Yazoo expedition, and the capture of Mobile. On the 16th of August, 1865, eleven days less than three years after the first company went into camp at Springfield, the regiment was mustered out at Chicago. Colonel Howe's history of the battle-flag of the regiment, stated that it had been borne 4,100 miles, in fourteen skirmishes, ten battles and two sieges of forty-seven days and nights, and thirteen days and nights, respectively.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 3, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta and Jonesboro, and in the "March to the Sea" and the Carolina campaign, being engaged at Averysboro and Bentonville. It was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 9, 1865, and finally discharged at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton and mustered in, Sept. 4, 1862, and participated in the siege of Vicksburg. Six companies were engaged in skirmish line, near Humboldt, Tenn., and the regiment took part in the capture of Little Rock and in the fight at Clarendon, Ark. It was mustered out July 12, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Chicago, Sept. 6, 1862; took part in the first campaign against Vicksburg, and in the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg under Grant, the capture of Jackson (Miss.), the battles of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, the Meridian raid, and in the fighting at Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta and Jonesboro; also accompanied Sherman in his march through Georgia and the Carolinas, taking part in the battle of Bentonville; was mustered out at Chicago. June 17, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Mustered in, Dec. 18, 1862, but remained in service less than five months, when, its number of officers and men having been reduced from 860 to 161 (largely by desertions), a number of officers were dismissed, and the few remaining officers and men were formed into a detachment, and transferred to another Illinois regiment.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Pontiac, in August, 1862, and mustered into the service Sept. 8. Prior to May, 1864, the regiment was chiefly engaged in garrison duty. It marched with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign and through Georgia and the Carolinas, and took part in the battles of Resaca, Buzzard's Roost, Lost Mountain, Dallas, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Averysboro and Bentonville. It received final pay and discharge at Chicago, June 10, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Oct. 25, 1862; was engaged at Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, Jackson (Miss.), and in the Red River expedition. While on this expedition almost the entire regiment was captured at the battle of Mansfield, and not paroled until near the close of the war. The remaining officers and men were consolidated with the Seventy-seventh Infantry in January, 1865, and participated in the capture of Mobile. Six months later its regimental reorganization, as the One Hundred and Thirtieth, was ordered. It was mustered out at New Orleans, August 15, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, August 31.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized in September, 1862, and mustered into the service, Nov. 13, with 815 men, exclusive of officers. In October, 1863, it was consolidated with the Twenty-ninth Infantry, and ceased to exist as a separate organization. Up to that time the regiment had been in but a few conflicts and in no pitched battle.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in for 100 days from June 1, 1864. The regiment remained on duty at Paducah until the expiration of its service, when it moved to Chicago, and was mustered out, Oct. 17, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in, May 31, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Columbus, Ky., and mustered out of service, Oct. 25, 1864, at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered in for 100-days' service at Mattoon, June 6, 1864, having a strength of 852 men. It was chiefly engaged, during its term of service, in doing garrison duty and guarding railroads. It was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 28, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Enlisted about the first of May, 1864, for 100 days, and went into camp at Centralia, Ill., but was not mustered into service until June 1, following. Its principal service was garrison duty, with occasional scouts and raids amongst guerrillas. At the end of its term of service the regiment re-enlisted for fifteen days; was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 22, 1864, and discharged eight days later.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, with ex-Gov. John Wood as its Colonel, and mustered in, June 5, 1864, for 100 days. Was on duty at Memphis, Tenn., and mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 4, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, and mustered in, June 21, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and in Western Missouri. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Oct. 14, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-day's regiment, at Peoria, June 1, 1864; was engaged in garrison duty at Columbus and Cairo, in making reprisals for guerrilla raids, and in the pursuit of the Confederate General Price in Missouri. The latter service was rendered, at the President's request, after the term of enlistment had expired. It was mustered out at Peoria, Oct. 25, 1864, having been in the service nearly five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTIETH INFANTRY. Organized as a 100-days' regiment, at Springfield, June 18, 1864, and mustered into service on that date. The regiment was engaged in guarding railroads between Memphis and Holly Springs, and in garrison duty at Memphis. After the term of enlistment had expired and the regiment had been mustered out, it aided in the pursuit of General Price through Missouri; was finally discharged at Chicago, after serving about five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-days' regiment, at Elgin, June 16, 1864—strength, 842 men; departed for the field, June 27, 1864; was mustered out at Chicago, Oct. 10, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Freeport as a battalion of eight companies, and sent to Camp Butler, where two companies were added and the regiment mustered into service for 100 days, June 18, 1864. It was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., five days later, and assigned to duty at White's Station, eleven miles from that city, where it was employed in guarding the Memphis & Charleston railroad. It was mustered out at Chicago, on Oct. 27, 1864, the men having voluntarily served one month beyond their term of enlistment.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Mattoon, and mustered in, June 11, 1864, for 100 days. It was assigned to garrison duty, and mustered out at Mattoon, Sept. 26, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton, in 1864, as a one-year regiment; was mustered into the service, Oct. 21, its strength being 1,159 men. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, June 9, 1864; strength, 880 men. It departed for the field, June 12, 1864; was mustered out, Sept. 23, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 18, 1864, for one year. Was assigned to the duty of guarding drafted men at Brighton, Quincy, Jacksonville and Springfield, and mustered out at Springfield, July 5, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered into service for one year, Feb. 18 and 19, 1865; was engaged chiefly on guard or garrison duty, in scouting and in skirmishing with guerrillas. Mustered out at Nashville, Jan. 22, 1866, and received final discharge at Springfield, Feb. 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for the term of one year; was assigned to garrison and guard duty and mustered out, Sept. 5, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn.; arrived at Springfield, Sept. 9, 1865, where it was paid off and discharged.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 11, 1865, and mustered in for one year; was engaged in garrison and guard duty; mustered out, Jan. 27, 1866, at Dalton, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Feb. 14, 1865, for one year; was on duty in Tennessee and Georgia, guarding railroads and garrisoning towns. It was mustered out, Jan. 16, 1866, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY. This regiment was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the United States service, Feb. 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the State, recruited, under the call of Dec. 19, 1864. It was engaged in guard duty, with a few guerrilla skirmishes, and was present at the surrender of General Warford's army, at Kingston, Ga.; was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge, Feb. 8, 1866.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in, Feb. 18, 1865, for one year; was mustered out of service, to date Sept. 11, at Memphis, Tenn., and arrived at Camp Butler, Sept. 9, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered in, Feb. 27, 1865, for one year; was not engaged in any battles. It was mustered out, Sept. 15, 1865, and moved to Springfield, Ill., and, Sept. 24, received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for one year. Sept. 18, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and ordered to Springfield for final payment and discharge, where it arrived, Sept. 22; was paid off and discharged at Camp Butler, Sept. 29.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in Feb. 28, 1865, for one year, 904 strong. On Sept. 4, 1865, it was mustered out of service, and moved to Camp Butler, where it received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered in during the months of February and March, 1865, from the northern counties of the State, for the term of one year. The officers of the regiment have left no written record of its history, but its service seems to have been rendered chiefly in Tennessee in the neighborhood of Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga. Judging by the muster-rolls of the Adjutant-General, the regiment would appear to have been greatly depleted by desertions and otherwise, the remnant being finally mustered out, Sept. 20, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY. Organized — consisting of seven companies, A, B, C, D, E, F and G—at Alton, in 1861, and mustered into the United States service, July 3. After some service in Missouri, the regiment participated in the battle of Lexington, in that State, and was surrendered, with the remainder of the garrison, Sept. 20, 1861. The officers were paroled, and the men sworn not to take up arms again until discharged. No exchange having been effected in November, the non-commissioned officers and privates were ordered to Springfield and discharged. In June, 1862, the regiment was reorganized at Benton Barracks, Mo., being afterwards employed in guarding supply trains and supply depots at various points. Mustered out, at Benton Barracks, July 14, 1862.

SECOND CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, August 12, 1861, with Company M (which joined the regiment some months later), numbering 47 commissioned officers and 1,040 enlisted men. This number was increased by recruits and re-enlistments, during its four and a half year's term of service, to 2,236 enlisted men and 145 commissioned officers. It was engaged at Belmont; a portion of the regiment took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson and Shiloh, another portion at Merriweather's Ferry, Bolivar and Holly Springs, and participated in the investment of Vicksburg. In January, 1864, the major part of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, later, participating in the Red River expedition and the investment of Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22, 1865, and finally paid and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 3, 1866.

THIRD CAVALRY. Composed of twelve companies, from various localities in the State, the grand total of company officers and enlisted men, under the first organization, being 1,433. It was organized at Springfield, in August, 1861; participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Haines' Bluff, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the siege of Vicksburg. In July, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. The remainder were mustered out, Sept. 5, 1864. The veterans participated in the repulse of Forrest, at Memphis, and in the battles of Lawrenceburg, Spring Hill, Campbells-ville and Franklin. From May to October, 1865, engaged in service against the Indians in the Northwest. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 18, 1865.

FOURTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 26, 1861, and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh; in the siege of Corinth, and in many engagements of less historic note; was mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864. By order of the War Department, of June 18, 1865, the members of the regiment whose terms had not expired, were consolidated with the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

FIFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; took part in the Meridian raid and the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and in numerous minor expeditions, doing effective work at Canton, Grenada, Woodville, and other points. On Jan. 1, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. Its final muster-out took place, Oct. 27, 1865, and it received final payment and discharge, October 30.

SIXTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, Nov. 19, 1861; participated in Sherman's advance upon Grenada; in the Grierson raid through Mississippi and Louisiana, the siege of Port Hudson, the battles of Moscow (Tenn.), West Point (Miss.), Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans, March 30, 1864; was mustered out at Selma, Ala., Nov. 5, 1865, and received discharge, November 20, at Springfield.

SEVENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, and was mustered into service, Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth (second battle); in Grierson's raid through Mississippi and Louisiana; in the engagement at Plain's Store (La.), and the investment of Port Hudson. In March, 1864, 288 officers and men re-enlisted as veterans. The non-veterans were engaged at Guntown, and the entire regiment took part in the battle of Franklin. After the close of hostilities, it was stationed in Alabama and Mississippi, until the latter part of October, 1865; was mustered out at Nashville, and finally discharged at Springfield, Nov. 17, 1865.

EIGHTH CAVALRY. Organized at St. Charles, Ill., and mustered in, Sept. 18, 1861. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and participated in the general advance on Manassas in March, 1862; was engaged at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Malvern Hill, Sugar Loaf Mountain, Middletown, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Sulphur Springs, Warrenton, Rapidan Station, Northern Neck, Gettysburg, Williamsburg, Funkstown, Falling Water, Chester Gap, Sandy Hook, Culpepper, Brandy Station, and in many raids and skirmishes. It was mustered out of service at Benton Barracks, Mo., July 17, 1865, and ordered to Chicago, where it received final payment and discharge.

NINTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in the autumn of 1861, and mustered in, November 30; was engaged at Coldwater, Grenada, Wyatt, Saulsbury, Moscow, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Hurricane Creek, Lawrenceburg, Campbellsville, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, March 16, 1864; was mustered out of service at Selma, Ala., Oct. 31, 1865, and ordered to Springfield, where the men received final payment and discharge.

TENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield in the latter part of September, 1861, and mustered into service, Nov. 25, 1861; was engaged at Prairie Grove, Cotton Plant, Arkansas Post, in the Yazoo Pass expedition, at Richmond (La.), Brownsville, Bayou Metee, Bayou La Fourche and Little Rock. In February, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, the non-veterans accompanying General Banks in his Red River expedition. On Jan. 27, 1865, the veterans, and recruits were consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, and all reorganized under the name of the Tenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Cavalry. Mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 22, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield, Jan. 6, 1866.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY. Robert G. Ingersoll of Peoria, and Basil D. Meeks, of Woodford County, obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, and recruiting commenced in October, 1861. The regiment was recruited from the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, Knox, Henderson and Warren; was mustered into the service at Peoria, Dec. 20, 1861, and was first under fire at Shiloh. It also took part in the raid in the rear of Corinth, and in the battles of Bolivar, Corinth (second battle), Iuka, Lexington and Jackson (Tenn.); in McPherson's expedition to Canton and Sherman's Meridian raid, in the relief of Yazoo City, and in numerous less important raids and skirmishes. Most of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in December, 1863; the non-veterans being mustered out at Memphis, in the autumn of 1864. The veterans were mustered out at the same place, Sept. 30, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, October 20.

TWELFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, in February, 1862, and remained there guarding rebel prisoners until June 25, when it was mounted and sent to Martinsburg, Va. It was engaged at Fredericksburg, Williamsport, Falling Waters, the Rapidan and Stevensburg. On Nov. 26, 1863, the regiment was relieved from service and ordered home to reorganize as veterans. Subsequently it joined Banks in the Red River expedition and in Davidson's expedition against Mobile. While at Memphis the Twelfth Cavalry was consolidated into an eight-company organization, and the Fourth Cavalry, having previously been consolidated into a battalion of five companies, was consolidated with the Twelfth. The consolidated regiment was mustered out at Houston, Texas, May 29, 1866, and, on June 18, received final pay and discharge at Springfield.

THIRTEENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in December, 1861; moved to the front from Benton Barracks, Mo., in February, 1862, and was engaged in the following battles and skirmishes (all in Missouri and Arkansas): Putnam's Ferry, Cotton Plant, Union City (twice), Camp Pillow, Bloomfield (first and second battles), Van Buren, Allen, Eleven Point River, Jackson, White River, Chalk Bluff, Bushy Creek, near Helena, Grand Prairie, White River, Deadman's Lake, Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Austin, Little Rock, Benton, Batesville, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, Okolona, Little Missouri River, Prairie du Anne, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Cross Roads, Mount Elba, Douglas Landing and Monticello. The regiment was mustered out, August 31, 1865, and received final pay and discharge at Springfield, Sept. 13, 1865.

FOURTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, in January and February, 1863; participated in the battle of Cumberland Gap, in the defense of Knoxville and the pursuit of Longstreet, in the engagements at Bean Station and Dandridge, in the Macon raid, and in the cavalry battle at Sunshine Church. In the latter General Stoneman surrendered, but the Fourteenth cut its way out. On their retreat the men were betrayed by a guide and the regiment badly cut up and scattered, those escaping being hunted by soldiers with bloodhounds. Later, it was engaged at Waynesboro and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and was mustered out at Nashville, July 31, 1865, having marched over 10,000 miles, exclusive of duty done by detachments.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed of companies originally independent, attached to infantry regiments and acting as such; participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege and capture of Corinth. Regimental organization was effected in the spring of 1863, and thereafter it was engaged chiefly in scouting and post duty. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 25, 1864, the recruits (whose term of service had not expired) being consolidated with the Tenth Cavalry.

SIXTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed principally of Chicago men—Thieleman's and Schambeck's Cavalry Companies, raised at the outset of the war, forming the nucleus of the regiment. The former served as General Sherman's body-guard for some time. Captain Thieleman was made a Major and authorized to raise a battalion, the two companies named thenceforth being known as Thieleman's Battalion. In September, 1862, the War Department authorized the extension of the battalion to a regiment, and, on the 11th of June, 1863, the regimental organization was completed. It took part in the East Tennessee campaign, a portion of the regiment aiding in the defense of Knoxville, a part garrisoning Cumberland Gap, and one battalion being captured by Longstreet. The regiment also participated in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Cartersville, Allatoona, Kennesaw, Lost Mountain, Mines Ridge, Powder Springs, Chattahoochee, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. It arrived in Chicago, August 23, 1865, for final payment and discharge, having marched about 5,000 miles and engaged in thirty-one battles, besides numerous skirmishes.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service in January and February, 1864; aided in the repulse of Price at Jefferson City, Mo., and was engaged at Booneville, Independence, Mine Creek, and Fort Scott, besides doing garrison duty, scouting and raiding. It was mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Leavenworth, Kan. Gov. John L. Beveridge, who had previously been a Captain and Major of the Eighth Cavalry, was the Colonel of this regiment.

FIRST LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of ten batteries. Battery A was organized under the first call for State troops, April 21, 1861, but not mustered into the three years' service until July 16; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the Atlanta campaign; was in reserve at Champion Hills and Nashville, and mustered out July 3, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery B was organized in April, 1861, engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth and at La Grange, Holly Springs, Memphis, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, Mechanicsburg, Richmond (La.), the Atlanta campaign and the battle of Nashville. The Battery was reorganized by consolidation with Battery A, and mustered out at Chicago, July 2, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, Sept. 2, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and at Shiloh, and mustered out, July 28, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery E was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into service, Dec. 19, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Jackson, Vicksburg, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo and Nashville, and mustered out at Louisville, Dec. 24, 1864.

Battery F was recruited at Dixon and mustered in at Springfield, Feb. 25, 1862. It took part in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition, and was consolidated with the other batteries in the regiment, March 7, 1865.

Battery G was organized at Cairo and mustered in Sept. 28, 1861; was engaged in the siege and the second battle of Corinth, and mustered out at Springfield, July 24, 1865.

Battery H was recruited in and about Chicago, during January and February, 1862; participated in the battle of Shiloh, siege of Vicksburg, and in the Atlanta campaign, the "March to the Sea," and through the Carolinas with Sherman.

Battery I was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered in, Feb. 10, 1862; was engaged at Shiloh, in the Tallahatchie raid, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the battles of Chattanooga and Vicksburg. It was veteranized, March 17, 1864, and was mustered out, July 26, 1865.

Battery K was organized at Shawneetown and mustered in, Jan. 9, 1862, participated in Burnside's campaign in Tennessee, and in the capture of Knoxville. Part of the men were mustered out at Springfield in June, 1865, and the remainder at Chicago in July.

Battery M was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into the service, August 12, 1862, for three years. It served through the Chickamauga campaign, being engaged at Chickamauga; also was engaged at Missionary Ridge, was besieged at Chattanooga, and took part in all the important battles of the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out at Chicago, July 24, 1864, having traveled 3,102 miles and been under fire 178 days.

SECOND LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of nine batteries. Battery A was organized at Peoria, and mustered into service, May 23, 1861; served in Missouri and Arkansas, doing brilliant work at Pea Ridge. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, and mustered into service in December, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Jackson, Meridian and Decatur, and mustered out at Louisville, Nov. 21, 1864.

Battery E was organized at St. Louis, Mo., in August, 1861, and mustered into service, August 20, at that point. It was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition—was consolidated with Battery A.

Battery F was organized at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and mustered in, Dec. 11, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege and second battle of Corinth, and the Meridian campaign; also at Kenesaw, Atlanta and Jonesboro. It was mustered out, July 27, 1865, at Springfield.

Battery H was organized at Springfield, December, 1861, and mustered in, Dec. 31, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and in the siege of Fort Pillow; veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, was mounted as cavalry the following summer, and mustered out at Springfield, July 29, 1865.

Battery I was recruited in Will County, and mustered into service at Camp Butler, Dec. 31, 1861. It participated in the siege of Island No. 10, in the advance upon Corinth, and in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. It was veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, marched with Sherman to Atlanta, and thence to Savannah and through the Carolinas, and was mustered out at Springfield.

Battery K was organized at Springfield and mustered in Dec. 31, 1863; was engaged at Fort Pillow, the capture of Clarkston, Mo., and the siege of Vicksburg. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery L was organized at Chicago and mustered in, Feb. 28, 1862; participated in the advance on Corinth, the battle of Hatchie and the advance on the Tallahatchie, and was mustered out at Chicago, August 9, 1865.

Battery M was organized at Chicago, and mustered in at Springfield, June, 1862; was engaged at Jonesboro, Blue Spring, Blountsville and Rogersville, being finally consolidated with other batteries of the regiment.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BATTERY. Organized through the efforts of the Chicago Board of Trade, which raised $15,000 for its equipment, within forty-eight hours. It was mustered into service, August 1, 1862, was engaged at Lawrenceburg, Murfreesboro, Stone River, Chickamauga, Farmington, Decatur (Ga.), Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, Nashville, Selma and Columbus (Ga.) It was mustered out at Chicago, June 30, 1865, and paid in full, July 3, having marched 5,268 miles and traveled by rail 1,231 miles. The battery was in eleven of the hardest battles fought in the West, and in twenty-six minor battles, being in action forty-two times while on scouts, reconnaissances or outpost duty.

CHICAGO MERCANTILE BATTERY. Recruited and organized under the auspices of the Mercantile Association, an association of prominent and patriotic merchants of the City of Chicago. It was mustered into service, August 29, 1862, at Camp Douglas, participated in the Tallahatchie and Yazoo expeditions, the first attack upon Vicksburg, the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, the battles of Magnolia Hills, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge and Jackson (Miss.); also took part in Banks' Red River expedition; was mustered out at Chicago, and received final payment, July 10, 1865, having traveled, by river, sea and land, over 11,000 miles.

SPRINGFIELD LIGHT ARTILLERY. Recruited principally from the cities of Springfield, Belleville and Wenona, and mustered into service at Springfield, for the term of three years, August 21, 1862, numbering 199 men and officers. It participated in the capture of Little Rock and in the Red River expedition, and was mustered out at Springfield, 114 strong, June 30, 1865.

COGSWELL'S BATTERY, LIGHT ARTILLERY. Organized at Ottawa, Ill., and mustered in, Nov. 11, 1861, as Company A (Artillery) Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers, Colonel Cushman commanding the regiment. It participated in the advance on Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Missionary Ridge, and the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, near Mobile. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, August 14, 1865, having served three years and nine months, marched over 7,500 miles, and participated in seven sieges and battles.

STURGES RIFLES. An independent company, organized at Chicago, armed, equipped and subsisted for nearly two months, by the patriotic generosity of Mr. Solomon Sturges; was mustered into service, May 6, 1861; in June following, was ordered to West Virginia, serving as body-guard of General McClellan; was engaged at Rich Mountain, in the siege of Yorktown, and in the seven days' battle of the Chickahominy. A portion of the company was at Antietam, the remainder having been detached as foragers, scouts, etc. It was mustered out at Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WAR, THE SPANISH-AMERICAN. The oppressions and misrule which had characterized the administration of affairs by the Spanish Government and its agents for generations, in the Island of Cuba, culminated, in April, 1898, in mutual declarations of war between Spain and the United States. The causes leading up to this result were the injurious effects upon American commerce and the interests of American citizens owning property in Cuba, as well as the constant expense imposed upon the Government of the United States in the maintenance of a large navy along the South Atlantic coast to suppress filibustering, superadded to the friction and unrest produced among the people of this country by the long continuance of disorders and abuses so near to our own shores, which aroused the sympathy and indignation of the entire civilized world. For three years a large proportion of the Cuban population had been in open rebellion against the Spanish Government, and, while the latter had imported a large army to the island and subjected the insurgents and their families and sympathizers to the grossest cruelties, not even excepting torture and starvation itself, their policy had failed to bring the insurgents into subjection or to restore order. In this condition of affairs the United States Government had endeavored, through negotiation, to secure a mitigation of the evils complained of, by a modification of the Spanish policy of government in the island; but all suggestions in this direction had either been resented by Spain as unwarrantable interference in her affairs, or promises of reform, when made, had been as invariably broken.

In the meantime an increasing sentiment had been growing up in the United States in favor of conceding belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, or the recognition of their independence, which found expression in measures proposed in Congress—all offers of friendly intervention by the United States having been rejected by Spain with evidences of indignation. Compelled, at last, to recognize its inability to subdue the insurrection, the Spanish Government, in November, 1897, made a pretense of tendering autonomy to the Cuban people, with the privilege of amnesty to the insurgents on laying down their arms. The long duration of the war and the outrages perpetrated upon the helpless "reconcentrados," coupled with the increased confidence of the insurgents in the final triumph of their cause, rendered this movement—even if intended to be carried out to the letter—of no avail. The proffer came too late, and was promptly rejected.

In this condition of affairs and with a view to greater security for American interests, the American battleship Maine was ordered to Havana, on Jan. 24, 1898. It arrived in Havana Harbor the following day, and was anchored at a point designated by the Spanish commander. On the night of February 15, following, it was blown up and destroyed by some force, as shown by after investigation, applied from without. Of a crew of 354 men belonging to the vessel at the time, 266 were either killed outright by the explosion, or died from their wounds. Not only the American people, but the entire civilized world, was shocked by the catastrophe. An act of horrible treachery had been perpetrated against an American vessel and its crew on a peaceful mission in the harbor of a professedly friendly nation.

The successive steps leading to actual hostilities were rapid and eventful. One of the earliest and most significant of these was the passage, by a unanimous vote of both houses of Congress, on March 9, of an appropriation placing $50,000,000 in the hands of the President as an emergency fund for purposes of national defense. This was followed, two days later, by an order for the mobilization of the army. The more important events following this step were: An order, under date of April 5, withdrawing American consuls from Spanish stations; the departure, on April 9, of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee from Havana; April 19, the adoption by Congress of concurrent resolutions declaring Cuba independent and directing the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States to put an end to Spanish authority in the island; April 20, the sending to the Spanish Government, by the President, of an ultimatum in accordance with this act; April 21, the delivery to Minister Woodford, at Madrid, of his passports without waiting for the presentation of the ultimatum, with the departure of the Spanish Minister from Washington; April 23, the issue of a call by the President for 125,000 volunteers; April 24, the final declaration of war by Spain; April 25, the adoption by Congress of a resolution declaring that war had existed from April 21; on the same date an order to Admiral Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron at Hongkong, to sail for Manila with a view to investing that city and blockading Philippine ports.

The chief events subsequent to the declaration of war embraced the following: May 1, the destruction by Admiral Dewey's squadron of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila; May 19, the arrival of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet at Santiago de Cuba; May 25, a second call by the President for 75,000 volunteers; July 3, the attempt of Cervera's fleet to escape, and its destruction off Santiago; July 17, the surrender of Santiago to the forces under General Shafter; July 30, the statement by the President, through the French Ambassador at Washington, of the terms on which the United States would consent to make peace; August 9, acceptance of the peace terms by Spain, followed, three days later, by the signing of the peace protocol; September 9, the appointment by the President of Peace Commissioners on the part of the United States; Sept. 18, the announcement of the Peace Commissioners selected by Spain; October 1, the beginning of the Peace Conference by the representatives of the two powers, at Paris, and the formal signing, on December 10, of the peace treaty, including the recognition by Spain of the freedom of Cuba, with the transfer to the United States of Porto Rico and her other West India islands, together with the surrender of the Philippines for a consideration of $20,000,000.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of nations have such vast and far-reaching results been accomplished within so short a period. The war, which practically began with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor—an event which aroused the enthusiasm of the whole American people, and won the respect and admiration of other nations—was practically ended by the surrender of Santiago and the declaration by the President of the conditions of peace just three months later. Succeeding events, up to the formal signing of the peace treaty, were merely the recognition of results previously determined.

HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS.—The part played by Illinois in connection with these events may be briefly summarized in the history of Illinois regiments and other organizations. Under the first call of the President for 125,000 volunteers, eight regiments—seven of infantry and one of cavalry—were assigned to Illinois, to which was subsequently added, on application through Governor Tanner, one battery of light artillery. The infantry regiments were made up of the Illinois National Guard, numbered consecutively from one to seven, and were practically mobilized at their home stations within forty-eight hours from the receipt of the call, and began to arrive at Camp Tanner, near Springfield, the place of rendezvous, on April 26, the day after the issue of the Governor's call. The record of Illinois troops is conspicuous for the promptness of their response and the completeness of their organization—in this respect being unsurpassed by those of any other State. Under the call of May 25 for an additional force of 75,000 men, the quota assigned to Illinois was two regiments, which were promptly furnished, taking the names of the Eighth and Ninth. The first of these belonged to the Illinois National Guard, as the regiments mustered in under the first call had done, while the Ninth was one of a number of "Provisional Regiments" which had tendered their services to the Government. Some twenty-five other regiments of this class, more or less complete, stood ready to perfect their organizations should there be occasion for their services. The aggregate strength of Illinois organizations at date of muster out from the United States service was 12,280—11,789 men and 491 officers.

FIRST REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS (originally Illinois National Guard) was organized at Chicago, and mustered into the United States service at Camp Tanner (Springfield), under the command of Col. Henry L. Turner, May 13, 1898; left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga) May 17; assigned to First Brigade, Third Division, of the First Army Corps; started for Tampa, Fla., June 2, but soon after arrival there was transferred to Picnic Island, and assigned to provost duty in place of the First United States Infantry. On June 30 the bulk of the regiment embarked for Cuba, but was detained in the harbor at Key West until July 5, when the vessel sailed for Santiago, arriving in Guantanamo Bay on the evening of the 8th. Disembarking on the 10th, the whole regiment arrived on the firing line on the 11th, spent several days and nights in the trenches before Santiago, and were present at the surrender of that city on the 17th. Two companies had previously been detached for the scarcely less perilous duty of service in the fever hospitals and in caring for their wounded comrades. The next month was spent on guard duty in the captured city, until August 25, when, depleted in numbers and weakened by fever, the bulk of the regiment was transferred by hospital boats to Camp Wikoff, on Montauk Point, L. I. The members of the regiment able to travel left Camp Wikoff, September 8, for Chicago, arriving two days later, where they met an enthusiastic reception and were mustered out, November 17, 1,235 strong (rank and file)—a considerable number of recruits having joined the regiment just before leaving Tampa. The record of the First was conspicuous by the fact that it was the only Illinois regiment to see service in Cuba during the progress of actual hostilities. Before leaving Tampa some eighty members of the regiment were detailed for engineering duty in Porto Rico, sailed for that island on July 12, and were among the first to perform service there. The First suffered severely from yellow fever while in Cuba, but, as a regiment, while in the service, made a brilliant record, which was highly complimented in the official reports of its commanding officers.

SECOND REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (originally Second I. N. G.). This regiment, also from Chicago, began to arrive at Springfield, April 27, 1898—at that time numbering 1,202 men and 47 officers, under command of Col. George M. Moulton; was mustered in between May 4 and May 15; on May 17 started for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where, as a part of the Seventh Army Corps, under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, it assisted in the dedication of Camp Cuba Libre. October 25 it was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at "Camp Lee" until December 8, when two battalions embarked for Havana, landing on the 15th, being followed, a few days later, by the Third Battalion, and stationed at Camp Columbia. From Dec. 17 to Jan. 11, 1899, Colonel Moulton served as Chief of Police for the city of Havana. On March 28 to 30 the regiment left Camp Columbia in detachments for Augusta, Ga., where it arrived April 5, and was mustered out, April 26, 1,051 strong (rank and file), and returned to Chicago. During its stay in Cuba the regiment did not lose a man. A history of this regiment has been written by Rev. H. W. Bolton, its late Chaplain.

THIRD REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies of the Illinois National Guard from the counties of La Salle, Livingston, Kane, Kankakee, McHenry, Ogle, Will, and Winnebago, under command of Col. Fred Bennitt, reported at Springfield, with 1,170 men and 50 officers, on April 27; was mustered in May 7, 1898; transferred from Springfield to Camp Thomas (Chickamauga), May 14; on July 22 left Chickamauga for Porto Rico; on the 28th sailed from Newport News, on the liner St. Louis, arriving at Ponce, Porto Rico, on July 31; soon after disembarking captured Arroyo, and assisted in the capture of Guayama, which was the beginning of General Brooke's advance across the island to San Juan, when intelligence was received of the signing of the peace protocol by Spain. From August 13 to October 1 the Third continued in the performance of guard duty in Porto Rico; on October 22, 986 men and 39 officers took transport for home by way of New York, arriving in Chicago, November 11, the several companies being mustered out at their respective home stations. Its strength at final muster-out was 1,273 men and officers. This regiment had the distinction of being one of the first to see service in Porto Rico, but suffered severely from fever and other diseases during the three months of its stay in the island.

FOURTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies from Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Effingham, Fayette, Jackson, Jefferson, Montgomery, Richland, and St. Clair counties; mustered into the service at Springfield, May 20, under command of Col. Casimer Andel; started immediately for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where it was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre as a part of the Seventh Corps under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee; in October was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at Camp Onward until about the first of January, when the regiment took ship for Havana. Here the regiment was stationed at Camp Columbia until April 4, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out at Camp Mackenzie (Augusta). May 2, the companies returning to their respective home stations. During a part of its stay at Jacksonville, and again at Savannah, the regiment was employed on guard duty. While at Jacksonville Colonel Andel was suspended by court-martial, and finally tendered his resignation, his place being supplied by Lient.-Col. Eben Swift, of the Ninth.

FIFTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was the first regiment to report, and was mustered in at Springfield, May 7, 1898, under command of Col. James S. Culver, being finally composed of twelve companies from Pike, Christian, Sangamon, McLean, Montgomery, Adams, Tazewell, Macon, Morgan, Peoria, and Fulton counties; on May 14 left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga, Ga.), being assigned to the command of General Brooke; August 3 left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., with the expectation of embarking for Porto Rico—a previous order of July 26 to the same purport having been countermanded; at Newport News embarked on the transport Odbam, but again the order was rescinded, and, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, the regiment was disembarked. The next move was made to Lexington, Ky., where the regiment—having lost hope of reaching “the front”—remained until Sept. 5, when it returned to Springfield for final muster-out. This regiment was composed of some of the best material in the State, and anxious for active service, but after a succession of disappointments, was compelled to return to its home station without meeting the enemy. After its arrival at Springfield the regiment was furloughed for thirty days and finally mustered out, October 16, numbering 1,213 men and 47 officers.

SIXTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, consisting of twelve companies from the counties of Rock Island, Knox, Whiteside, Lee, Carroll, Stephenson, Henry, Warren, Bureau, and Jo Daviess, was mustered in May 11, 1898, under command of Col. D. Jack Foster; on May 17 left Springfield for Camp Alger, Va.; July 5 the regiment moved to Charleston, S. C., where a part embarked for Siboney, Cuba, but the whole regiment was soon after united in General Miles' expedition for the invasion of Porto Rico, landing at Guanico on July 25, and advancing into the interior as far as Adjunta and Utuado. After several weeks' service in the interior, the regiment returned to Ponce, and on September 7 took transport for the return home, arrived at Springfield a week later, and was mustered out November 25, the regiment at that time consisting of 1,239 men and 49 officers.

SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (known as the “Hibernian Rifles”). Two battalions of this regiment reported at Springfield, April 27, with 33 officers and 765 enlisted men, being afterwards increased to the maxi-munum; was mustered into the United States service, under command of Col. Marcus Kavanagh, May 18, 1898; on May 28 started for Camp Alger, Va.; was afterwards encamped at Thoroughfare Gap and Camp Meade; on September 9 returned to Springfield, was furloughed for thirty days, and mustered out, October 20, numbering 1,260 men and 49 officers. Like the Fifth, the Seventh saw no actual service in the field.

EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (colored regiment), mustered into the service at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 23, 1898, being composed wholly of Afro-Americans under officers of their own race, with Col. John R. Marshall in command, the muster-roll showing 1,195 men and 76 officers. The six companies, from A to F, were from Chicago, the other five being, respectively, from Bloomington, Springfield, Quincy, Litchfield, Mound City and Metropolis, and Cairo. The regiment having tendered their services to relieve the First Illinois on duty at Santiago de Cuba, it started for Cuba, August 8, by way of New York; immediately on arrival at Santiago, a week later, was assigned to duty, but subsequently transferred to San Luis, where Colone, Marshall was made military governor. The major part of the regiment remained here until ordered home early in March, 1899, arrived at Chicago, March 15, and was mustered out, April 3, 1,226 strong, rank and file, having been in service nine months and six days.

NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was organized from the counties of Southern Illinois, and mustered in at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 4-11, 1898, under command of Col. James R. Campbell; arrived at Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.), August 9; two months later was transferred to Savannah, Ga.; was moved to Havana in December, where it remained until May, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out there, May 20, 1899, at that time consisting of 1,095 men and 46 officers. From Augusta the several companies returned to their respective home stations. The Ninth was the only "Provisional Regiment" from Illinois mustered into the service during the war, the other regiments all belonging to the National Guard.

FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY was organized at Chicago immediately after the President's first call, seven companies being recruited from Chicago, two from Bloomington, and one each from Springfield, Elkhart, and Lacon; was mustered in at Springfield, May 21, 1898, under command of Col. Edward C. Young; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 30, remaining there until August 24, when it returned to Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, where it was stationed until October 11, when it was mustered out, at that time consisting of 1,158 men and 50 officers. Although the regiment saw no active service in the field, it established an excellent record for itself in respect to discipline.

FIRST ENGINEERING CORPS, consisting of 80 men detailed from the First Illinois Volunteers, were among the first Illinois soldiers to see service in Porto Rico, accompanying General Miles' expedition in the latter part of July, and being engaged for a time in the construction of bridges in aid of the intended advance across the island. On September 8 they embarked for the return home, arrived at Chicago, September 17, and were mustered out November 20.

BATTERY A (I. N. G.), from Danville, Ill., was mustered in under a special order of the War Department, May 12, 1898, under command of Capt. Oscar P. Yaeger, consisting of 118 men; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 19, and, two months later, joined in General Miles' Porto Rico expedition, landing at Guanico on August 3, and taking part in the affair at Guayama on the 12th. News of peace having been received, the Battery returned to Ponce, where it remained until September 7, when it started on the return home by way of New York, arrived at Danville, September 17, was furloughed for sixty days, and mustered out November 25. The Battery was equipped with modern breech-loading rapid-firing guns, operated by practical artillerymen and prepared for effective service.

NAVAL RESERVES.—One of the earliest steps taken by the Government after it became apparent that hostilities could not be averted, was to begin preparation for strengthening the naval arm of the service. The existence of the "Naval Militia," first organized in 1893, placed Illinois in an exceptionally favorable position for making a prompt response to the call of the Government, as well as furnishing a superior class of men for service—a fact evidenced during the operations in the West Indies. Gen. John McNulta, as head of the local committee, was active in calling the attention of the Navy Department to the value of the service to be rendered by this organization, which resulted in its being enlisted practically as a body, taking the name of "Naval Reserves"—all but eighty-eight of the number passing the physical examination, the places of these being promptly filled by new recruits. The first detachment of over 200 left Chicago May 2, under the command of Lieut.-Com. John M. Hawley, followed soon after by the remainder of the First Battalion, making the whole number from Chicago 400, with 267, constituting the Second Battalion, from other towns of the State. The latter was made up of 147 men from Moline, 58 from Quincy, and 62 from Alton—making a total from the State of 667. This does not include others, not belonging to this organization, who enlisted for service in the navy during the war, which raised the whole number for the State over 1,000. The Reserves enlisted from Illinois occupied a different relation to the Government from that of the "naval militia" of other States, which retained their State organizations, while those from Illinois were regularly mustered into the United States service. The recruits from Illinois were embarked at Key West, Norfolk and New York, and distributed among fifty-two different vessels, including nearly every vessel belonging to the North Atlantic Squadron. They saw service in nearly every department from the position of stokers in the hold to that of gunners in the turrets of the big battleships, the largest number (60) being assigned to the famous battleship Oregon, while the cruiser Yale followed with 47; the Harvard with 35; Cincinnati, 27; Yankton, 19; Franklin, 18; Montgomery and Indiana, each, 17; Hector, 14; Marietta, 11; Wilmington and Lancaster, 10 each, and others down to one each. Illinois sailors thus had the privilege of participating in the brilliant affair of July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, as also in nearly every other event in the West Indies of less importance, without the loss of a man while in the service, although among the most exposed. They were mustered out at different times, as they could be spared from the service, or the vessels to which they were attached went out of commission, a portion serving out their full term of one year. The Reserves from Chicago retain their organization under the name of "Naval Reserve Veterans," with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, Chicago.

WARD, James H., ex-Congressman, was born in Chicago, Nov. 30, 1853, and educated in the Chicago public schools and at the University of Notre Dame, graduating from the latter in 1873. Three years later he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has continued to practice his profession in his native city. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor of the town of West Chicago, and, in 1884, was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and the same year, was the successful candidate of his party for Congress in the Third Illinois District, serving one term.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, a tribe of the Dakota, or Sioux, stock, which at one time occupied a part of Northern Illinois. The word Winnebago is a corruption of the French Ouinébégoutz, Ouimbégoué, etc., the diphthong "ou" taking the place of the consonant "w," which is wanting in the French alphabet. These were, in turn, French misspellings of an Algonquin term meaning "fetid," which the latter tribe applied to the Winnebagoes because they had come from the western ocean—the salt (or "fetid") water. In their advance towards the East the Winnebagoes early invaded the country of the Illinois, but were finally driven northward by the latter, who surpassed them in numbers rather than in bravery. The invaders settled in Wisconsin, near the Fox River, and here they were first visited by the Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century. (See Jesuit Relations.) The Winnebagoes are commonly regarded as a Wisconsin tribe; yet, that they claimed territorial rights in Illinois is shown by the fact that the treaty of Prairie du Chien (August 1, 1829), alludes to a Winnebago village located in what is now Jo Daviess County, near the mouth of the Pecatonica River. While, as a rule, the tribe, if left to itself, was disposed to live in amity with the whites, it was carried away by the eloquence and diplomacy of Tecumseh and the cajoleries of "The Prophet." General Harrison especially alludes to the bravery of the Winnebago warriors at Tippecanoe, which he attributes in part, however, to a superstitious faith in "The Prophet." In June or July, 1827, an unprovoked and brutal outrage by the whites upon an unoffending and practically defenseless party of Winnebagoes, near Prairie du Chien brought on what is known as the "Winnebago War." (See Winnebago War.) The tribe took no part in the Black Hawk War, largely because of the great influence and shrewd tactic of their chief, Naw-caw. By treaties executed in 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. They were finally removed west of that river, and, after many shiftings of location, were placed upon the Omaha Reservation in Eastern Nebraska, where their industry, thrift and peaceable disposition elicited high praise from Government officials.

WARNER, Vespasian, lawyer and Member of Congress, was born in De Witt County, Ill., April 23, 1842, and has lived all his life in his native county—his present residence being Clinton. After a short course in Lombard University, while studying law in the office of Hon. Lawrence Weldon, at Clinton, he enlisted as a private soldier of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, in June, 1861, serving until July, 1866, when he was mustered out with the rank of Captain and brevet Major. He received a gunshot wound at Shiloh, but continued to serve in the Army of the Tennessee until the evacuation of Atlanta, when he was ordered North on account of disability. His last service was in fighting Indians on the plains. After the war he completed his law studies at Harvard University, graduating in 1868, when he entered into a law partnership with Clifton H. Moore of Clinton. He served as Judge-Advocate General of the Illinois National Guard for several years, with the rank of Colonel, under the administrations of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer, and, in 1894, was nominated and elected, as a Republican, to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Thirteenth District, being re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, Mr. Warner was a member of the Committees on Agriculture and Invalid Pensions, and Chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

WARREN, a village in Jo Daviess County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways, 26 miles west-northwest of Freeport and 27 miles east by north of Galena. The surrounding region is agricultural and stock-raising; there are also lead mines in the vicinity. Tobacco is grown to some extent. Warren has a flouring mill, tin factory, creamery and stone quarries, a State bank, water supply from artesian wells, fire department, gas plant, two weekly newspapers, five churches, a high school, an academy and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,172; (1900), 1,327.

WARREN, Calvin A., lawyer, was born in Essex County, N. Y., June 3, 1807; in his youth, worked for a time, as a typographer, in the office of "The Northern Spectator," at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., side by side with Horace Greeley, afterwards the founder of "The New York Tribune." Later, he became one of the publishers of "The Palladium" at Ballston, N. Y., but, in 1832, removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, where he began the study of law, completing his course at Transylvania University, Ky., in 1834, and beginning practice at Batavia, Ohio, as the partner of Thomas Morris, then a United States Senator from Ohio, whose daughter he married, thereby becoming the brother-in-law of the late Isaac N. Morris, of Quincy, Ill. In 1836, Mr. Warren came to Quincy, Adams County, Ill., but soon after removed to Warsaw in Hancock County, where he resided until 1839, when he returned to Quincy. Here he continued in practice, either alone or as a partner, at different times, of several of the leading attorneys of that city. Although he held no office except that of Master in Chancery, which he occupied for some sixteen years, the possession of an inexhaustible fund of humor, with strong practical sense and decided ability as a speaker, gave him great popularity at the bar and upon the stump, and made him a recognized leader in the ranks of the Democratic party, of which he was a life-long member. He served as Presidential Elector on the Pierce ticket in 1852, and was the nominee of his party for the same position on one or two other occasions. Died, at Quincy, Feb. 22, 1881.

WARREN, Hooper, pioneer journalist, was born at Walpole, N. H., in 1790; learned the printer's trade on the Rutland (Vt.) "Herald"; in 1814 went to Delaware, whence, three years later, he emigrated to Kentucky, working for a time on a paper at Frankfort. In 1818 he came to St. Louis and worked in the office of the old "Missouri Gazette" (the predecessor of "The Republican"), and also acted as the agent of a lumber company at Cairo, Ill., when the whole population of that place consisted of one family domiciled on a grounded flat-boat. In March, 1819, he established, at Edwardsville, the third paper in Illinois, its predecessors being "The Illinois Intelligencer," at Kaskaskia, and "The Illinois Emigrant," at Shawneetown. The name given to the new paper was "The Spectator," and the contest over the effort to introduce a pro-slavery clause in the State Constitution soon brought it into prominence. Backed by Governor Coles, Congressman Daniel P. Cook, Judge S. D. Lockwood, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Wm. H. Brown (afterwards of Chicago), George Churchill and other opponents of slavery, "The Spectator" made a sturdy fight in opposition to the scheme, which ended in defeat of the measure by the rejection at the polls, in 1824, of the proposition for a Constitutional Convention. Warren left the Edwardsville paper in 1825, and was, for a time, associated with "The National Crisis," an anti-slavery paper at Cincinnati, but soon returned to Illinois and established "The Sangamon Spectator"—the first paper ever published at the present State capital. This he sold out in 1829, and, for the next three years, was connected with "The Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald," at Galena. Abandoning this field in 1832, he removed to Hennepin, where, within the next five years, he held the offices of Clerk of the Circuit and County Commissioners' Courts and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds. In 1836 he began the publication of the third paper in Chicago—"The Commercial Advertiser" (a weekly)—which was continued a little more than a year, when it was abandoned, and he settled on a farm at Henry, Marshall County. His further newspaper ventures were, as the associate of Zebina Eastman, in the publication of "The Genius of Liberty," at Lowell, La Salle County, and "The Western Citizen"—afterwards "The Free West"—in Chicago. (See Eastman, Zebina, and Lundy, Benjamin.) On the discontinuance of "The Free West" in 1856, he again retired to his farm at Henry, where he spent the remainder of his days. While returning home from a visit to Chicago, in August, 1864, he was taken ill at Mendota, dying there on the 22d of the month.

WARREN, John Esaias, diplomatist and real-estate operator, was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1826, graduated at Union College and was connected with the American Legation to Spain during the administration of President Pierce; in 1859-60 was a member of the Minnesota Legislature and, in 1861-62, Mayor of St. Paul; in 1867, came to Chicago, where, while engaged in real-estate business, he became known to the press as the author of a series of articles entitled "Topics of the Time." In 1886 he took up his residence in Brussels, Belgium, where he died, July 6, 1896. Mr. Warren was author of several volumes of travel, of which "An Attache in Spain" and "Para" are most important.

WARREN COUNTY. A western county, created by act of the Legislature, in 1825, but not fully organized until 1830, having at that time about 350 inhabitants; has an area of 540 square miles, and was named for Gen. Joseph Warren. It is drained by the Henderson River and its affluents, and is traversed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (two divisions), the Iowa Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. Bituminous coal is mined and limestone is quarried in large quantities. The county's early development was retarded in consequence of having become the "seat of war," during the Black Hawk War. The principal products are grain and live-stock, although manufacturing is carried on to some extent. The county-seat and chief city is Monmouth (which see). Roseville is a shipping point. Population (1880), 22,933. (1890), 21,281; (1900), 23,163.

WARRENSBURG, a town of Macon County, on Peoria Division Ill. Cent. Railway, 9 miles northwest of Decatur; has elevators, canning factory, a bank and newspaper. Pop. (1900), 503.

WARSAW, the largest town in Hancock County, and admirably situated for trade. It stands on a bluff on the Mississippi River, some three miles below Keokuk, and about 40 miles above Quincy. It is the western terminus of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway, and lies 116 miles west-southwest of Peoria. Old Fort Edwards, established by Gen. Zachary Taylor, during the War of 1812, was located within the limits of the present city of Warsaw, opposite the mouth of the Des Moines River. An iron foundry, a large woolen mill, a plow factory and cooperage works are its principal manufacturing establishments. The channel of the Mississippi admits of the passage of the largest steamers up to this point. Warsaw has eight churches, a system of common schools comprising one high and three grammar schools, a National bank and two weekly newspapers. Population (1890), 3,105; (1890), 2,721; (1900), 2,335.

WASHBURN, a village of Woodford County, on a branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway 25 miles northeast of Peoria; has banks and a weekly paper; the district is agricultural. Population (1890), 598; (1900), 703.

WASHBURNE, Elihu Benjamin, Congressman and diplomatist, was born at Livermore, Maine, Sept. 23, 1816; in early life learned the trade of a printer, but graduated from Harvard Law School and was admitted to the bar in 1840. Coming west, he settled at Galena, forming a partnership with Charles S. Hempstead, for the practice of law, in 1841. He was a stalwart Whig, and, as such, was elected to Congress in 1852. He continued to represent his District until 1869, taking a prominent position, as a Republican, on the organization of that party. On account of his long service he was known as the "Father of the House," administering the Speaker's oath three times to Schuyler Colfax and once to James G. Blaine. He was appointed Secretary of State by General Grant in 1869, but surrendered his portfolio to become Envoy to France, in which capacity he achieved great distinction. He was the only official representative of a foreign government who remained in Paris, during the siege of that city by the Germans (1870-71) and the reign of the "Commune." For his conduct he was honored by the Governments of France and Germany alike. On his return to the United States, he made his home in Chicago, where he devoted his latter years chiefly to literary labor, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1887. He was strongly favored as a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

WASHINGTON, a city in Tazewell County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads. It is 21 miles west of El Paso, and 12 miles east of Peoria. Carriages, plows and farming implements constitute the manufactured output. It is also an important shipping-point for farm products. It has electric light and water-works plants, eight churches, a graded school, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,301; (1900), 1,451.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, an interior county of Southern Illinois, east of St. Louis; is drained by the Kaskaskia River and the Elkhorn, Beaucoup and Muddy Creeks; was organized in 1818, and has an area of 540 square miles. The surface is diversified, well watered and timbered. The soil is of variable fertility. Corn, wheat and oats are the chief agricultural products. Manufacturing is carried on to some extent, among the products being agricultural implements, flour, carriages and wagons. The most important town is Nashville, which is also the county-seat. Population (1890), 19,262; (1900), 19,526. Washington was one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the organization of the State Government, being one of the last three created during the Territorial period—the other two being Franklin and Union.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 12 miles southwest of Chicago; has a graded school, female seminary, military school, a car factory, several churches and a newspaper. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1890.

WATAGA, a village of Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Galesburg. Population (1900), 545.

WATERLOO, the county-seat and chief town of Monroe County, on the Illinois Division of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, 24 miles east of south from St. Louis. The region is chiefly agricultural, but underlaid with coal. Its industries embrace two flour mills, a plow factory, distillery, creamery, two ice plants, and some minor concerns. The city has municipal water and electric light plants, four churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,860; (1900) 2,114.

WATERMAN, Arba Nelson, lawyer and jurist, was born at Greensboro, Orleans County, Vt., Feb. 3, 1836. After receiving an academic education and teaching for a time, he read law at Montpelier and, later, passed through the Albany Law School. In 1861 he was admitted to the bar, removed to Joliet, Ill., and opened an office. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the One Hundredth Illinois Volunteers, serving with the Army of the Cumberland for two years, and being mustered out in August, 1864, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. On leaving the army, Colonel Waterman commenced practice in Chicago. In 1873-74 he represented the Eleventh Ward in the City Council. In 1887 he was elected to the bench of the Cook County Circuit Court, and was re-elected in 1891 and, again, in 1897. In 1890 he was assigned as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court.

WATSEKA, the county-seat of Iroquois County, situated on the Iroquois River, at the mouth of Sugar Creek, and at the intersection of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads, 77 miles south of Chicago, 46 miles north of Danville and 14 miles east of Gilman. It has flour-mills, brick and tile works and foundries, besides several churches, banks, a graded school and three weekly newspapers. Artesian well water is obtained by boring to the depth of 100 to 160 feet, and some forty flowing streams from these shafts are in the place. Population (1890), 2,017; (1900), 2,505.

WATTS, Amos, jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1821, but removed to Washington County in boyhood, and was elected County Clerk in 1847, '49 and '53, and State's Attorney for the Second Judicial District in 1856 and '60; then became editor and proprietor of a newspaper, later resuming the practice of law, and, in 1873, was elected Circuit Judge, remaining in office until his death, at Nashville, Ill., Dec. 6, 1888.

WAUKEGAN, the county-seat and principal city of Lake County, situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, about 36 miles north by west from Chicago, and 50 miles south of Milwaukee; is also the northern terminus of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and connected by electric lines with Chicago and Fox Lake. Lake Michigan is about 80 miles wide opposite this point. Waukegan was first known as "Little Fort," from the remains of an old fort that stood on its site. The principal part of the city is built on a bluff, which rises abruptly to the height of about fifty feet. Between the bluff and the shore is a flat tract about 400 yards wide which is occupied by gardens, dwellings, warehouses and manufactories. The manufactures include steel-wire, refined sugar, scales, agricultural implements, brass and iron products, sash, doors and blinds, leather, beer, etc.; the city has paved streets, gas and electric light plants, three banks, eight or ten churches, graded and high schools and two newspapers. A large trade in grain, lumber, coal and dairy products is carried on. Pop. (1890), 4,915; (1900), 9,426.

WAUKEGAN & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY. (See Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway.)

WAVERLY, a city in Morgan County, 18 miles southeast of Jacksonville, on the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroads. It was originally settled by enterprising emigrants from New England, whose descendants constitute a large proportion of the population. It is the center of a rich agricultural region, has a fine graded school, six or seven churches, two banks, two newspapers and tile works. Population (1880), 1,124; (1890), 1,337; (1900), 1,573.

WAYNE, (Gen.) Anthony, soldier, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1745, of Anglo-Irish descent, graduated as a Surveyor, and first practiced his profession in Nova Scotia. During the years immediately antecedent to the Revolution he was prominent in the colonial councils of his native State, to which he had returned in 1767, where he became a member of the "Committee of Safety." On June 3, 1776, he was commissioned Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania troops in the Continental army, and, during the War of the Revolution, was conspicuous for his courage and ability as a leader. One of his most daring and successful achievements was the capture of Stony Point, in 1779, when—the works having been carried and Wayne having received, what was supposed to be, his death-wound—he entered the fort, supported by his aids. For this service he was awarded a gold medal by Congress. He also took a conspicuous part in the investiture and capture of Yorktown. In October, 1783, he was brevetted Major-General. In 1784 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature. A few years later he settled in Georgia, which State he represented in Congress for seven months, when his seat was declared vacant after contest. In April, 1792, he was confirmed as General-in-Chief of the United States Army, on nomination of President Washington. His connection with Illinois history began shortly after

St. Clair's defeat, when he led a force into Ohio (1783) and erected a stockade at Greenville, which he named Fort Recovery; his object being to subdue the hostile savage tribes. In this he was eminently successful and, on August 3, 1793, after a victorious campaign, negotiated the Treaty of Greenville, as broad in its provisions as it was far-reaching in its influence. He was a daring fighter, and although Washington called him "prudent," his dauntlessness earned for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony." In matters of dress he was punctilious, and, on this account, he was sometimes dubbed "Dandy Wayne." He was one of the few white officers whom all the Western Indian tribes at once feared and respected. They named him "Black Snake" and "Tornado." He died at Presque Isle near Erie, Dec. 15, 1796. Thirteen years afterward his remains were removed by one of his sons, and interred in Badnor churchyard, in his native county. The Pennsylvania Historical Society erected a marble monument over his grave, and appropriately dedicated it on July 4 of the same year.

WAYNE COUNTY, in the southeast quarter of the State; has an area of 720 square miles; was organized in 1819, and named for Gen. Anthony Wayne. The county is watered and drained by the Little Wabash and its branches, notably the Skillet Fork. At the first election held in the county, only fifteen votes were cast. Early life was exceedingly primitive, the first settlers pounding corn into meal with a wooden pestle, a hollowed stump being used as a mortar. The first mill erected (of the antique South Carolina pattern) charged 25 cents per bushel for grinding. Prairie and woodland make up the surface, and the soil is fertile. Railroad facilities are furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio (Southwestern) Railroads. Corn, oats, tobacco, wheat, hay and wool are the chief agricultural products. Saw mills are numerous and there are also carriage and wagon factories. Fairfield is the county-seat. Population (1880), 21,291; (1890), 23,806; (1900), 27,626.

WEAS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. They called themselves "We-weehahs," and were spoken of by the French as "Oui-at-a-nons" and "Oui-as." Other corruptions of the name were common among the British and American colonists. In 1718 they had a village at Chicago, but abandoned it through fear of their hostile neighbors, the Chippewas and Pottawatomies. The Weas were, at one time, brave and warlike; but their numbers were reduced by constant warfare and disease, and, in the end, debauchery enervated and demoralized them. They were removed west of the Mississippi and given a reservation in Miami County, Kan. This they ultimately sold, and, under the leadership of Baptiste Peoria, united with their few remaining brethren of the Miami and with the remnant of the Ill-i-ni under the title of the "confederated tribes," and settled in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Piankeshaws.)

WEBB, Edwin B., early lawyer and politician, was born about 1802, came to the vicinity of Carmi, White County, Ill., about 1828 to 1830, and, still later, studied law at Transylvania University. He held the office of Prosecuting Attorney of White County, and, in 1834, was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1842, and, in the Senate, from 1842 to '46. During his service in the House he was a colleague and political and personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He opposed the internal improvement scheme of 1837, predicting many of the disasters which were actually realized a few years later. He was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Whig ticket, in 1844 and '48, and, in 1852, received the nomination for Governor as the opponent of Joel A. Matteson, two years later, being an unsuccessful candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in opposition to Judge W. B. Scates. While practicing law at Carmi, he was also a partner of his brother in the mercantile business. Died, Oct. 14, 1858, in the 56th year of his age.

WEBB, Henry Livingston, soldier and pioneer (an elder brother of James Watson Webb, a noted New York journalist), was born at Claverack, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1795; served as a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Southern Illinois in 1817, and became one of the founders of the town of America near the mouth of the Ohio; was Representative in the Fourth and Eleventh General Assemblies, a Major in the Black Hawk War and Captain of volunteers and, afterwards, Colonel of regulars, in the Mexican War. In 1860 he went to Texas and served, for a time, in a semi-military capacity under the Confederate Government; returned to Illinois in 1869, and died, at Makanda, Oct. 5, 1876.

WEBSTER, Fletcher, lawyer and soldier, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., July 23, 1813; graduated at Harvard in 1833, and studied law with his father (Daniel Webster); in 1837, located at Peru, Ill., where he practiced three years. His father having been appointed Secretary of State in 1841, the son became his private secretary, was also Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing (Minister to China) in 1843, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1847, and Surveyor of the Port of Boston, 1850-61; the latter year became Colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was killed in the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

WEBSTER, Joseph Dana, civil engineer and soldier, was born at Old Hampton, N. H., August 25, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1832, and afterwards read law at Newburyport, Mass. His natural inclination was for engineering, and, after serving for a time in the Engineer and War offices, at Washington, was made a United States civil engineer (1835) and, on July 7, 1838, entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers. He served through the Mexican War, was made First Lieutenant in 1849, and promoted to a captaincy, in March, 1853. Thirteen months later he resigned, removing to Chicago, where he made his permanent home, and soon after was identified, for a time, with the proprietorship of "The Chicago Tribune." He was President of the commission that perfected the Chicago sewerage system, and designed and executed the raising of the grade of a large portion of the city from two to eight feet, whole blocks of buildings being raised by jack screws, while new foundations were inserted. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tendered his services to the Government and superintended the erection of the fortifications at Cairo, Ill., and Paducah, Ky. On April 7, 1861, he was commissioned Paymaster of Volunteers, with the rank of Major, and, in February, 1862, Colonel of the First Illinois Artillery. For several months he was chief of General Grant's staff, participating in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry, and in the battle of Shiloh, in the latter as Chief of Artillery. In October, 1862, the War Department detailed him to make a survey of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, the following month, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of Volunteers, serving as Military Governor of Memphis and Superintendent of military railroads. He was again chief of staff to General Grant during the Vicksburg campaign, and, from 1864 until the close of the war, occupied the same relation to General Sherman. He was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, but, resigning Nov. 6, following, returned to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. From 1869 to 1872 he was Assessor of Internal Revenue there, and, later, Assistant United States Treasurer, and, in July, 1873, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue. Died, at Chicago, March 12, 1876.

WELCH, William R., lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Jan. 23, 1828, educated at Transylvania University, Lexington, graduating from the academic department in 1847, and, from the law school, in 1851. In 1864 he removed to Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., which place he made his permanent home. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Circuit, and re-elected in 1879 and '85. In 1884 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court for the Second District. Died, Sept. 1, 1888.

WELDON, Lawrence, one of the Judges of the United States Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1829; while a child, removed with his parents to Madison County, and was educated in the common schools, the local academy and at Wittenberg College, Springfield, in the same State; read law with Hon. R. A. Harrison, a prominent member of the Ohio bar, and was admitted to practice in 1854, meanwhile, in 1852-53, having served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State at Columbus. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, locating at Clinton, DeWitt County, where he engaged in practice; in 1860 was elected a Representative in the Twenty-second General Assembly, was also chosen a Presidential Elector the same year, and assisted in the first election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency. Early in 1861 he resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the position of United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, tendered him by President Lincoln, but resigned the latter office in 1866 and, the following year, removed to Bloomington, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1883, when he was appointed, by President Arthur, an Associate Justice of the United States Court of Claims at Washington—a position which he still (1899) continues to fill. Judge Weldon is among the remaining few who rode the circuit and practiced law with Mr. Lincoln. From the time of coming to the State in 1854 to 1860, he was one of Mr. Lincoln's most intimate traveling companions in the old Eighth Circuit, which extended from Sangamon County on the west to Vermillion on the east, and of which Judge David Davis, afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States and United States Senator, was the presiding Justice. The Judge holds in his memory many pleasant reminiscences of that day, especially of the eastern portion of the District, where he was accustomed to meet the late Senator Voorhees, Senator McDonald and other leading lawyers of Indiana, as well as the historic men whom he met at the State capital.

WELLS, Albert W., lawyer and legislator, was born at Woodstock, Conn., May 9, 1839, and enjoyed only such educational and other advantages as belonged to the average New England boy of that period. During his boyhood his family removed to New Jersey, where he attended an academy, later, graduating from Columbia College and Law School in New York City, and began practice with State Senator Robert Allen at Red Bank, N. J. During the Civil War he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment and took part in the battle of Gettysburg, resuming his profession at the close of the war. Coming west in 1870, he settled in Quincy, Ill., where he continued practice. In 1886 he was elected to the House of Representatives from Adams County, as a Democrat, and re-elected two years later. In 1890 he was advanced to the Senate, where, by re-election in 1894, he served continuously until his death in office, March 5, 1897. His abilities and long service—covering the sessions of the Thirty-fifth to the Fortieth General Assemblies—placed him at the head of the Democratic side of the Senate during the latter part of his legislative career.

WELLS, William, soldier and victim of the Fort Dearborn massacre, was born in Kentucky, about 1770. When a boy of 12, he was captured by the Miami Indians, whose chief, Little Turtle, adopted him, giving him his daughter in marriage when he grew to manhood. He was highly esteemed by the tribe as a warrior, and, in 1790, was present at the battle where Gen. Arthur St. Clair was defeated. He then realized that he was fighting against his own race, and informed his father-in-law that he intended to ally himself with the whites. Leaving the Miamis, he made his way to General Wayne, who made him Captain of a company of scouts. After the treaty of Greenville (1795) he settled on a farm near Fort Wayne, where he was joined by his Indian wife. Here he acted as Indian Agent and Justice of the Peace. In 1812 he learned of the contemplated evacuation of Fort Dearborn, and, at the head of thirty Miamis, he set out for the post, his intention being to furnish a body-guard to the non-combatants on their proposed march to Fort Wayne. On August 13, he marched out of the fort with fifteen of his dusky warriors behind him, the remainder bringing up the rear. Before a mile and a half had been traveled, the party fell into an Indian ambuscade, and an indiscriminate massacre followed. (See Fort Dearborn.) The Miamis fled, and Captain Wells' body was riddled with bullets, his head cut off and his heart taken out. He was an uncle of Mrs. Heald, wife of the commander of Fort Dearborn.

WELLS, William Harvey, educator, was born in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 27, 1812; lived on a farm until 17 years old, attending school irregularly, but made such progress that he became successively a teacher in the Teachers' Seminary at Andover and Newburyport, and, finally, Principal of the State Normal School at Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he accepted the position of Superintendent of Public Schools for the city of Chicago, serving till 1864, when he resigned. He was an organizer of the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, one of the first editors of "The Massachusetts Teacher" and prominently connected with various benevolent, educational and learned societies; was also author of several textbooks, and assisted in the revision of "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary." Died, Jan. 21, 1885.

WENONA, city on the eastern border of Marshall County, 20 miles south of La Salle, has zinc works, public and parochial schools, a weekly paper, two banks, and five churches. A good quality of soft coal is mined here. Population (1880), 911; (1890), 1,053; (1900), 1,486.

WENTWORTH, John, early journalist and Congressman, was born at Sandwich, N. H., March 5, 1815, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and came to Chicago the same year, where he became editor of "The Chicago Democrat," which had been established by John Calhoun three years previous. He soon after became proprietor of "The Democrat," of which he continued to be the publisher until it was merged into "The Chicago Tribune," July 24, 1864. He also studied law, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1841. He served in Congress as a Democrat from 1843 to 1851, and again from 1853 to 1855, but left the Democratic party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was elected Mayor of Chicago in 1857, and again in 1860, during his incumbency introducing a number of important municipal reforms; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and twice served on the Board of Education. He again represented Illinois in Congress as a Republican from 1865 to 1867—making fourteen years of service in that body. In 1872 he joined in the Greeley movement, but later renewed his allegiance to the Republican party. In 1878 Mr. Wentworth published an elaborate genealogical work in three volumes, entitled "History of the Wentworth Family." A volume of "Congressional Reminiscences" and two by him on "Early Chicago," published in connection with the Fergus Historical Series, contain some valuable information on early local and national history. On account of his extraordinary height he received the sobriquet of "Long John," by which he was familiarly known throughout the State. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 16, 1888.

WEST, Edward M., merchant and banker, was born in Virginia, May 2, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1818; in 1829 became a clerk in the Recorder's office at Edwardsville, also served as deputy postmaster, and, in 1833, took a position in the United States Land Office there. Two years later he engaged in mercantile business, which he prosecuted over thirty years—meanwhile filling the office of County Treasurer, ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1867, in conjunction with W. R. Prickett, he established a bank at Edwardsville, with which he was connected until his death, Oct. 31, 1887. Mr. West officiated frequently as a "local preacher" of the Methodist Church, in which capacity he showed much ability as a public speaker.

WEST, Mary Allen, educator and philanthropist, was born at Galesburg, Ill., July 31, 1837; graduated at Knox Seminary in 1854 and taught until 1873, when she was elected County Superintendent of Schools, serving nine years. She took an active and influential interest in educational and reformatory movements, was for two years editor of "Our Home Monthly," in Philadelphia, and also a contributor to other journals, besides being editor-in-chief of "The Union Signal," Chicago, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—in which she held the position of President; was also President, in the latter days of her life, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association of Chicago, that city having become her home in 1885. In 1892, Miss West started on a tour of the world for the benefit of her health, but died at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 1, 1892.

WESTERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, located at Watertown, Rock Island County, in accordance with an act of the General Assembly, approved, May 22, 1895. The Thirty-ninth General Assembly made an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of fire-proof buildings, while Rock Island County donated a tract of 400 acres of land valued at $40,000. The site selected by the Commissioners, is a commanding one overlooking the Mississippi River, eight miles above Rock Island, and five and a half miles from Moline, and the buildings are of the most modern style of construction. Watertown is reached by two lines of railroad—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy—besides the Mississippi River. The erection of buildings was begun in 1896, and they were opened for the reception of patients in 1898. They have a capacity for 800 patients.

WESTERN MILITARY ACADEMY, an institution located at Upper Alton, Madison County, incorporated in 1892; has a faculty of eight members and reports eighty pupils for 1897-98, with property valued at $70,000. The institution gives instruction in literary and scientific branches, besides preparatory and business courses.

WESTERN NORMAL COLLEGE, located at Bushnell, McDonough County; incorporated in 1888. It is co-educational, has a corps of twelve instructors and reported 500 pupils for 1897-98, 300 males and 200 females.

WESTERN SPRINGS, a village of Cook County, and residence suburb of the city of Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of the initial station. Population (1890), 451; (1900), 662.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, located in Chicago and controlled by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was founded in 1883 through the munificence of Dr. Tolman Wheeler, and was opened for students two years later. It has two buildings, of a superior order of architecture—one including the school and lecture rooms and the other a dormitory. A hospital and gymnasium are attached to the latter, and a school for boys is conducted on the first floor of the main building, which is known as Wheeler Hall. The institution is under the general supervision of Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois.

WESTFIELD, village of Clark County, on Cin., Ham. & Dayton R. R., 10 m. s-e. of Charleston; seat of Westfield College; has a bank, five churches and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 820.

WEST SALEM, a town of Edwards County, on the Peoria-Evansville Div. Ill. Cent. R. R., 12 miles northeast of Albion; has a bank and a weekly paper. Pop. (1890), 476; (1900), 700.

WETHERELL, Emma Abbott, vocalist, was born in Chicago, Dec. 9, 1849; in her childhood attracted attention while singing with her father (a poor musician) in hotels and on the streets in Chicago, Peoria and elsewhere; at 18 years of age, went to New York to study, earning her way by giving concerts en route, and receiving aid and encouragement from Clara Louisa Kellogg; in New York was patronized by Henry Ward Beecher and others, and aided in securing the training of European masters. Compelled to surmount many obstacles from poverty and other causes, her after success in her profession was phenomenal. Died, during a professional tour, at Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. Miss Abbott married her manager, Eugene Wetherell, who died before her.

WHEATON, a city and the county-seat of Du Page County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 25 miles west of Chicago. Agriculture and stock-raising are the chief industries in the surrounding region. The city owns a new water-works plant (costing $860,000) and has a public library valued at $75,000, the gift of a resident, Mr. John Quincy Adams; has a court house, electric light plant, sewerage and drainage system, seven churches, three graded schools, four weekly newspapers and a State bank. Wheaton is the seat of Wheaton College (which see). Population (1880), 1,160; (1890), 1,622; (1900), 2,345.

WHEATON COLLEGE, an educational institution located at Wheaton, Du Page County, and under Congregational control. It was founded in 1853, as the Illinois Institute, and was chartered under its present name in 1860. Its early existence was one of struggle, but of late years it has been established on a better foundation, in 1898 having $54,000 invested in productive funds, and property aggregating $136,000. The faculty comprises fifteen professors, and, in 1898, there were 321 students in attendance. It is co-educational and instruction is given in business and preparatory studies, as well as the fine arts, music and classical literature.

WHEELER, David Hilton, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1829; graduated at Rock River Seminary, Mount Morris, in 1851; edited "The Carroll County Republican" and held a professorship in Cornell College, Iowa, (1857-61); was United States Consul at Geneva, Switzerland, (1861-66); Professor of English Literature in Northwestern University (1867-75); edited "The Methodist" in New York, seven years, and was President of Allegheny College (1883-87); received the degree of D.D. from Cornell College in 1867, and that of LL.D. from the Northwestern University in 1881. He is the author of "Brigandage in South Italy"

(two volumes, 1861) and "By-Ways of Literature" (1883), besides some translations.

WHEELER, Hamilton K., ex-Congressman, was born at Ballston, N. Y., August 5, 1848, but emigrated with his parents to Illinois in 1852; remained on a farm until 19 years of age, his educational advantages being limited to three months' attendance upon a district school each year. In 1871, he was admitted to the bar at Kankakee, where he has since continued to practice. In 1884 he was elected to represent the Sixteenth District in the State Senate, where he served on many important committees, being Chairman of that on the Judicial Department. In 1892 he was elected Representative in Congress from the Ninth Illinois District, on the Republican ticket.

WHEELING, a town on the northern border of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Central Railway. Population (1890), 811; (1900), 331.

WHISTLER, (Maj.) John, soldier and builder of the first Fort Dearborn, was born in Ulster, Ireland, about 1756; served under Burgoyne in the Revolution, and was with the force surrendered by that officer at Saratoga, in 1777. After the peace he returned to the United States, settled at Hagerstown, Md., and entered the United States Army, serving at first in the ranks and being severely wounded in the disastrous Indian campaigns of 1791. Later, he was promoted to a captaincy and, in the summer of 1803, sent with his company, to the head of Lake Michigan, where he constructed the first Fort Dearborn within the limits of the present city of Chicago, remaining in command until 1811, when he was succeeded by Captain Heald. He received the brevet rank of Major, in 1815 was appointed military store-keeper at Newport, Ky., and afterwards at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, where he died, Sept. 3, 1829. Lieut. William Whistler, his son, who was with his father, for a time, in old Fort Dearborn—but transferred, in 1809, to Fort Wayne—was of the force included in Hull's surrender at Detroit in 1812. After his exchange he was promoted to a captaincy, to the rank of Major in 1826 and to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in 1845, dying at Newport, Ky., in 1863. James Abbott McNeil Whistler, the celebrated, but eccentric artist of that name, is a grandson of the first Major Whistler.

WHITE, George E., ex-Congressman, was born in Massachusetts in 1848; after graduating, at the age of 16, he enlisted as a private in the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, serving under General Grant in the campaign against Richmond from the battle of the Wilderness until the surrender of Lee. Having taken a course in a commercial college at Worcester, Mass., in 1867 he came to Chicago, securing employment in a lumber yard, but a year later began business on his own account, which he has successfully conducted. In 1878 he was elected to the State Senate, as a Republican, from one of the Chicago Districts, and re-elected four years later, serving in that body eight years. He declined a nomination for Congress in 1884, but accepted in 1894, and was elected for the Fifth District, as he was again in 1896, but was defeated, in 1898, by Edward T. Noonan, Democrat.

WHITE, Horace, journalist, was born at Colebrook, N. H., August 10, 1834; in 1853 graduated at Beloit College, Wis., whither his father had removed in 1837; engaged in journalism as city editor of "The Chicago Evening Journal," later becoming agent of the Associated Press, and, in 1857, an editorial writer on "The Chicago Tribune," during a part of the war acting as its Washington correspondent. He also served, in 1856, as Assistant Secretary of the Kansas National Committee, and, later, as Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee. In 1864 he purchased an interest in "The Tribune," a year or so later becoming editor-in-chief, but retired in October, 1874. After a protracted European tour, he united with Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin of "The Nation," in the purchase and reorganization of "The New York Evening Post," of which he is now editor-in-chief.

WHITE, Julius, soldier, was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1816; removed to Illinois in 1836, residing there and in Wisconsin, where he was a member of the Legislature of 1849; in 1861 was made Collector of Customs at Chicago, but resigned to assume the colonelcy of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, which he commanded on the Fremont expedition to Southwest Missouri. He afterwards served with General Curtis in Arkansas, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. He was subsequently assigned to the Department of the Shenandoah, but finding his position at Martinsburg, W. Va., untenable, retired to Harper's Ferry, voluntarily serving under Colonel Miles, his inferior in command. When this post was surrendered (Sept. 15, 1862), he was made a prisoner, but released under parole; was tried by a court of inquiry at his own request, and acquitted, the court finding that he had acted with courage and capability.

He resigned in 1864, and, in March, 1865, was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. Died, at Evanston, May 12, 1890.

WHITE COUNTY, situated in the southeastern quarter of the State, and bounded on the east by the Wabash River; was organized in 1816, being the tenth county organized during the Territorial period; area, 500 square miles. The county is crossed by three railroads and drained by the Wabash and Little Wabash Rivers. The surface consists of prairie and woodland, and the soil is, for the most part, highly productive. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, tobacco, fruit, butter, sorghum and wool. The principal industrial establishments are carriage factories, saw mills and flour mills. Carmi is the county-seat. Other towns are Enfield, Grayville and Norris City. Population (1880), 23,087; (1890), 25,005; (1900), 25,386.

WHITEHALL, a city in Greene County, at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 65 miles north of St. Louis and 24 miles south-southwest of Jacksonville; in rich farming region; has stoneware and sewer-pipe factories, foundry and machine shop, flour mill, elevators, wagon shops, creamery, water system, sanitarium, heating, electric light and power system, nurseries and fruit-supply houses, and two poultry packing houses; also has five churches, a graded school, two banks and three newspapers—one daily. Population (1890), 1,961; (1900), 2,030.

WHITEHOUSE, Henry John, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, August 19, 1803; graduated from Columbia College in 1821, and from the (New York) General Theological Seminary in 1824. After ordination he was rector of various parishes in Pennsylvania and New York until 1851, when he was chosen Assistant Bishop of Illinois, succeeding Bishop Chase in 1852. In 1867, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, he delivered the opening sermon before the Pan-Anglican Conference held in England. During this visit he received the degree of D.D. from Oxford University, and that of LL.D. from Cambridge. His rigid views as a churchman and a disciplinarian, were illustrated in his prosecution of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, which resulted in the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. He was a brilliant orator and a trenchant and unyielding controversialist. Died, in Chicago, August 10, 1874.

WHITESIDE COUNTY, in the northwestern portion of the State bordering on the Mississippi River; created by act of the Legislature passed in 1836, and named for Capt. Samuel Whiteside, a noted Indian fighter; area, 700 square miles. The surface is level, diversified by prairies and woodland, and the soil is extremely fertile. The county-seat was first fixed at Lyndon, then at Sterling, and finally at Morrison, its present location. The Rock River crosses the county and furnishes abundant water power for numerous factories, turning out agricultural implements, carriages and wagons, furniture, woolen goods, flour and wrapping paper. There are also distilling and brewing interests, besides saw and planing mills. Corn is the staple agricultural product, although all the leading cereals are extensively grown. The principal towns are Morrison, Sterling, Fulton and Rock Falls. Population (1880), 30,885; (1890), 30,854; (1900), 34,710.

WHITESIDE, William, pioneer and soldier of the Revolution, emigrated from the frontier of North Carolina to Kentucky, and thence, in 1793, to the present limits of Monroe County, Ill., erecting a fort between Cahokia and Kaskaskia, which became widely known as "Whiteside Station." He served as a Justice of the Peace, and was active in organizing the militia during the War of 1812-14, dying at the old Station in 1815.—John (Whiteside), a brother of the preceding, and also a Revolutionary soldier, came to Illinois at the same time, as also did William B. and Samuel, sons of the two brothers, respectively. All of them became famous as Indian fighters. The two latter served as Captains of companies of "Rangers" in the War of 1812, Samuel taking part in the battle of Rock Island in 1814, and contributing greatly to the success of the day. During the Black Hawk War (1832) he attained the rank of Brigadier-General. Whiteside County was named in his honor. He made one of the earliest improvements in Ridge Prairie, a rich section of Madison County, and represented that county in the First General Assembly. William B. served as Sheriff of Madison County for a number of years.—John D. (Whiteside), another member of this historic family, became very prominent, serving in the lower House of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth General Assemblies, and in the Senate of the Tenth, from Monroe County; was a Presidential Elector in 1836, State Treasurer (1837-41) and a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1847. General Whiteside, as he was known, was the second of James Shields in the famous Shields and Lincoln duel (so-called) in 1842, and, as such, carried the challenge of the former to Mr. Lincoln. (See Duels.)

WHITING, Lorenzo D., legislator, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1819; came to Illinois in 1838, but did not settle there permanently until 1849, when he located in Bureau County. He was a Representative from that county in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1869), and a member of the Senate continuously from 1871 to 1887, serving in the latter through eight General Assemblies. Died at his home near Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., Oct. 10, 1889.

WHITING, Richard H., Congressman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 17, 1826, and received a common school education. In 1862 he was commissioned Paymaster in the Volunteer Army of the Union, and resigned in 1866. Having removed to Illinois, he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Illinois District, in February, 1870, and so continued until the abolition of the office in 1873. On retiring from the Assessorship he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, and served until March 4, 1875, when he resigned to take his seat as Republican Representative in Congress from the Peoria District, to which he had been elected in November, 1874. After the expiration of his term he held no public office, but was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1884. Died, at the Continental Hotel, in New York City, May 24, 1888.

WHITNEY, James W., pioneer lawyer and early teacher, known by the nickname of "Lord Coke"; came to Illinois in Territorial days (believed to have been about 1800); resided for some time at or near Edwardsville, then became a teacher at Atlas, Pike County, and, still later, the first Circuit and County Clerk of that county. Though nominally a lawyer, he had little if any practice. He acquired the title, by which he was popularly known for a quarter of a century, by his custom of visiting the State Capital, during the sessions of the General Assembly, when he would organize the lobbyists and visitors about the capital—of which there were an unusual number in those days—into what was called the "Third House." Having been regularly chosen to preside under the name of "Speaker of the Lobby," he would deliver a message full of practical hits and jokes, aimed at members of the two houses and others, which would be received with cheers and laughter. The meetings of the "Third House," being held in the evening, were attended by many members and visitors in lieu of other forms of entertainment. Mr. Whitney's home, in his latter years, was at Pittsfield. He resided for a time at Quincy. Died, Dec. 13, 1860, aged over 80 years.

WHITEMORE, Floyd K., State Treasurer, is a native of New York, came at an early age, with his parents, to Sycamore, Ill., where he was educated in the high school there. He purposed becoming a lawyer, but, on the election of the late James H. Beveridge State Treasurer, in 1864, accepted the position of clerk in the office. Later, he was employed as a clerk in the banking house of Jacob Bunn in Springfield, and, on the organization of the State National Bank, was chosen cashier of that institution, retaining the position some twenty years. After the appointment of Hon. John R. Tanner to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Chicago, in 1892, Mr. Whitmore became cashier in that office, and, in 1865, Assistant State Treasurer under the administration of State Treasurer Henry Wulff. In 1898 he was elected State Treasurer, receiving a plurality of 43,450 over his Democratic opponent.

WICKERSHAM, (Col.) Dudley, soldier and merchant, was born in Woodford County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1819; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1843, and served as a member of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) through the Mexican War. On the return of peace he engaged in the dry-goods trade in Springfield, until 1861, when he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, serving, first as Lieutenant-Colonel and then as Colonel, until May, 1864, when, his regiment having been consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, he resigned. After the war, he held the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue for several years, after which he engaged in the grocery trade. Died, in Springfield, August 8, 1898.

WIDEN, Raphael, pioneer and early legislator, was a native of Sweden, who, having been taken to France at eight years of age, was educated for a Catholic priest. Coming to the United States in 1815, he was at Cahokia, Ill., in 1818, where, during the same year, he married into a French family of that place. He served in the House of Representatives from Randolph County, in the Second and Third General Assemblies (1820-24), and as Senator in the Fourth and Fifth (1824-28). During his last term in the House, he was one of those who voted against the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died of cholera, at Kaskaskia, in 1833.

WIKER, Scott, lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Meadville, Pa., April 6, 1834; at 4 years of age removed with his parents to Quincy, Ill., and, in 1844, to Pike County. Having graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, in 1857, he began reading law with Judge O. C. Skinner of Quincy. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but, before commencing practice, spent a year at Harvard Law School, graduating there in 1859. Immediately thereafter he opened an office at Pittsfield, Ill., and has resided there ever since. In politics he has always been a strong Democrat. He served two terms in the Legislature (1863-67) and, in 1874, was chosen Representative from his District in Congress, being re-elected in 1888 and, again, in 1890. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland Third Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which position he continued to fill until March, 1897, when he resumed the practice of law at Pittsfield. Died Jan. 15, 1901.

WILEY, (Col.) Benjamin Ladd, soldier, was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1821, came to Illinois in 1845 and began life at Vienna, Johnson County, as a teacher. In 1846 he enlisted for the Mexican War, as a member of the Fifth (Colonel Newby's) Regiment Illinois Volunteers, serving chiefly in New Mexico until mustered out in 1848. A year later he removed to Jonesboro, where he spent some time at the carpenter's trade, after which he became clerk in a store, meanwhile assisting to edit "The Jonesboro Gazette" until 1853; then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm, but later engaged in the hardware trade at Jonesboro, in which he continued for several years. In 1856 he was the Republican candidate for Congress for the Ninth District, receiving 4,000 votes, while Fremont, the Republican candidate for President, received only 825 in the same district. In 1857 he opened a real estate office in Jonesboro in conjunction with David L. Phillips and Col. J. W. Ashley, with which he was connected until 1860, when he removed to Makanda, Jackson County. In September, 1861, he was mustered in as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Cavalry, later serving in Missouri and Arkansas under Generals Steele and Curtiss, being, a part of the time, in command of the First Brigade of Cavalry, and, in the advance on Vicksburg, having command of the right wing of General Grant's cavalry. Being disabled by rheumatism at the end of the siege, he tendered his resignation, and was immediately appointed Enrolling Officer at Cairo, serving in this capacity until May, 1865, when he was mustered out. In 1869 he was appointed by Governor Palmer one of the Commissioners to locate the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and served as Secretary of the Board until the institution was opened at Anna, in May, 1871. In 1869 he was defeated as a candidate for County Judge of Jackson County, and, in 1872, for the State Senate, by a small majority in a strongly Democratic District; in 1876 was the Republican candidate for Congress, in the Eighteenth District, against William Hartzell, but was defeated by only twenty votes, while carrying six out of the ten counties comprising the District. In the latter years of his life, Colonel Wiley was engaged quite extensively in fruit-growing at Makanda, Jackson County, where he died, March 22, 1890.

WILKIE, Franc Bangs, journalist, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., July 2, 1830; took a partial course at Union College, after which he edited papers at Schenectady, N. Y., Elgin, Ill., and Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa; also serving, during a part of the Civil War, as the western war correspondent of "The New York Times." In 1863 he became an editorial writer on "The Chicago Times," remaining with that paper, with the exception of a brief interval, until 1888—a part of the time as its European correspondent. He was the author of a series of sketches over the nom de plume of "Poluito," and of a volume of reminiscences under the title, "Thirty-five Years of Journalism," published shortly before his death, which took place, April 12, 1892.

WILKIN, Jacob W., Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in Licking County, Ohio, June 7, 1837; removed with his parents to Illinois, at 12 years of age, and was educated at McKendree College; served three years in the War for the Union; studied law with Judge Scholfield and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1872, he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, in 1879, elected Judge of the Circuit Court and re-elected in 1885—the latter year being assigned to the Appellate bench for the Fourth District, where he remained until his election to the Supreme bench in 1888, being re-elected to the latter office in 1897. His home is at Danville.

WILKINSON, Ira O., lawyer and Judge, was born in Virginia in 1822, and accompanied his father to Jacksonville (1835), where he was educated. During a short service as Deputy Clerk of Morgan County, he conceived a fondness for the profession of the law, and, after a course of study under Judge William Thomas, was admitted to practice in 1847. Richard Yates (afterwards Governor and Senator) was his first partner. In 1845 he removed to Rock Island, and, six years later, was elected a Circuit Judge, being again closed to the same position in 1861. At the expiration of his second term he removed to Chicago. Died, at Jacksonville, August 24, 1894.

WILKINSON, John P., early merchant, was born, Dec. 14, 1790, in New Kent County, Va., emigrated first to Kentucky, and, in 1828, settled in Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Wilkinson was a liberal friend of Illinois College and Jacksonville Female Academy, of each of which he was a Trustee from their origin until his death, which occurred, during a business visit to St. Louis, in December, 1841.

WILL, Conrad, pioneer physician and early legislator, was born in Philadelphia, June 4, 1778; about 1804 removed to Somerset County Pa., and, in 1813, to Kaskaskia, Ill. He was a physician by profession, but having leased the saline lands on the Big Muddy, in the vicinity of what afterwards became the town of Brownsville, he engaged in the manufacture of salt, removing thither in 1815, and becoming one of the founders of Brownsville, afterwards the first county-seat of Jackson County. On the organization of Jackson County, in 1816, he became a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and, in 1818, served as Delegate from that county in the Convention which framed the first State Constitution. Thereafter he served continuously as a member of the Legislature from 1818 to '34—first as Senator in the First General Assembly, then as Representative in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth, and again as Senator in the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth—his career being conspicuous for long service. He died in office, June 11, 1834. Dr. Will was short of stature, fleshy, of jovial disposition and fond of playing practical jokes upon his associates, but very popular, as shown by his successive elections to the Legislature. He has been called "The Father of Jackson County." Will County, organized by act of the Legislature two years after his death, was named in his honor.

WILL COUNTY, a northeastern county, embracing 850 square miles, named in honor of Dr. Conrad Will, an early politician and legislator. Early explorations of the territory were made in 1829, when white settlers were few. The bluff west of Joliet is said to have been first occupied by David and Benjamin Maggard. Joseph Smith, the Mormon "apostle," expounded his peculiar doctrines at "the Point" in 1831. Several of the early settlers fled from the country during (or after) a raid by the Sac Indians.

There is a legend, seemingly well supported, to the effect that the first lumber, sawed to build the first frame house in Chicago (that of P. F. W. Peck), was sawed at Plainfield. Will County, originally a part of Cook, was separately erected in 1836, Joliet being made the county-seat. Agriculture, quarrying and manufacturing are the chief industries. Joliet, Lockport and Wilmington are the principal towns. Population (1880), 53,422; (1890), 62,007; (1900), 74,764.

WILLARD, Frances Elizabeth, teacher and reformer, was born at Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female College at Evanston, Ill., in 1859, and, in 1862, accepted the Professorship of Natural Sciences in that institution. During 1866-67 she was the Principal of the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary. The next two years she devoted to travel and study abroad, meanwhile contributing to various periodicals. From 1871 to 1874 she was Professor of Æsthetics in the Northwestern University and dean of the Woman's College. She was always an enthusiastic champion of temperance, and, in 1874, abandoned her profession to identify herself with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For five years she was Corresponding Secretary of the national body, and, from 1879, its President. While Secretary she organized the Home Protective Association, and prepared a petition to the Illinois Legislature, to which nearly 200,000 names were attached, asking for the granting to women of the right to vote on the license question. In 1878 she succeeded her brother, Oliver A. Willard (who had died), as editor of "The Chicago Evening Post," but, a few months later, withdrew, and, in 1882, was elected as a member of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party. In 1886 she became leader of the White Cross Movement for the protection of women, and succeeded in securing favorable legislation, in this direction, in twelve States. In 1883 she founded the World's Christian Temperance Union, and, in 1888, was chosen its President, as also President of the International Council of Women. The latter years of her life were spent chiefly abroad, much of the time as the guest and co-worker of Lady Henry Somerset, of England, during which she devoted much attention to investigating the condition of women in the Orient. Miss Willard was a prolific and highly valued contributor to the magazines, and (besides numerous pamphlets) published several volumes, including "Nineteen Beautiful Years" (a tribute to her sister); "Woman in Temperance"; "How to Win," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Died, in New York. Feb. 18, 1898.

WILLARD, Samuel, A.M., M.D., LL.D., physician and educator, was born in Lunenburg, Vt., Dec. 30, 1821—the lineal descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., and prominent in "King Philip's War," and of his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel Willard, of the Old South Church, Boston, and seventh President of Harvard College. The subject of this sketch was taken in his infancy to Boston, and, in 1831, to Carrollton, Ill., where his father pursued the avocation of a druggist. After a preparatory course at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, in 1836 he entered the freshman class in Illinois College at Jacksonville, but withdrew the following year, re-entering college in 1840 and graduating in the class of 1843, as a classmate of Dr. Newton Bateman, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction and President of Knox College, and Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, now of Elmira, N. Y. The next year he spent as Tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of medicine at Quincy, graduating from the Medical Department of Illinois College in 1848. During a part of the latter year he edited a Free-Soil campaign paper ("The Tribune") at Quincy, and, later, "The Western Temperance Magazine" at the same place. In 1849 he began the practice of his profession at St. Louis, but the next year removed to Collinsville, Ill., remaining until 1857, when he took charge of the Department of Languages in the newly organized State Normal University at Normal. The second year of the Civil War (1862) he enlisted as a private in the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after commissioned as Surgeon with the rank of Major, participating in the campaigns in Tennessee and in the first attack upon Vicksburg. Being disabled by an attack of paralysis, in February, 1863, he was compelled to resign, when he had sufficiently recovered accepting a position in the office of Provost Marshal General Oakes, at Springfield, where he remained until the close of the war. He then became Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows for the State of Illinois—a position which he had held from 1856 to 1862—remaining under his second appointment from 1865 to '69. The next year he served as Superintendent of Schools at Springfield, meanwhile assisting in founding the Springfield public library, and serving as its first librarian. In 1870 he accepted the professorship of History in the West Side High School of Chicago, which, with the exception of two years (1884-86), he continued to occupy for more than twenty-five years, retiring in 1898. In the meantime, Dr. Willard has been a laborious literary worker, having been, for a considerable period, editor, or assistant-editor, of "The Illinois Teacher," a contributor to "The Century Magazine" and "The Dial" of Chicago, besides having published a "Digest of the Laws of Odd Fellowship" in sixteen volumes, begun while he was Grand Secretary of the Order in 1864, and continued in 1872 and '82; a "Synopsis of History and Historical Chart," covering the period from B. C. 800 to A. D. 1876—of which he has had a second edition in course of preparation. Of late years he has been engaged upon a "Historical Dictionary of Names and Places," which will include some 12,000 topics, and which promises to be the most important work of his life. Previous to the war he was an avowed Abolitionist and operator on the "Underground Railroad," who made no concealment of his opinions, and, on one or two occasions, was called to answer for them in prosecutions under the "Fugitive Slave Act." (See "Underground Railroad.") His friend and classmate, the late Dr. Bateman, says of him: "Dr. Willard is a sound thinker; a clear and forcible writer; of broad and accurate scholarship; conscientious, genial and kindly, and a most estimable gentleman."

WILLIAMS, Archibald, lawyer and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., June 10, 1801; with moderate advantages but natural fondness for study, he chose the profession of law, and was admitted to the bar in Tennessee in 1828, coming to Quincy, Ill., the following year. He was elected to the General Assembly three times—serving in the Senate in 1832-36, and in the House, 1836-40; was United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, by appointment of President Taylor, 1849-53; was twice the candidate of his party (the Whig) for United States Senator, and appointed by President Lincoln, in 1861, United States District Judge for the State of Kansas. His abilities and high character were widely recognized. Died, in Quincy, Sept. 21, 1863—His son, John H., an attorney at Quincy, served as Judge of the Circuit Court 1879-85.—Another son, Abraham Lincoln, was twice elected Attorney-General of Kansas.

WILLIAMS, Erastus Smith, lawyer and jurist, was born at Salem, N. Y., May 22, 1821. In 1842 he removed to Chicago, where, after reading law, he was admitted to the bar in 1844. In 1854 he was appointed Master in Chancery, which office he filled until 1863, when he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. After re-election in 1870 he became Chief Justice, and, at the same time, heard most of the cases on the equity side of the court. In 1879 he was a candidate for re-election as a Republican, but was defeated with the party ticket. After his retirement from the bench he resumed private practice. Died, Feb. 24, 1884.

WILLIAMS, James R., Congressman, was born in White County, Ill., Dec. 27, 1850, at the age of 25 graduated from the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, and, in 1876, from the Union College of Law, Chicago, since then being an active and successful practitioner at Carmi. In 1880 he was appointed Master in Chancery and served two years. From 1882 to 1886 he was County Judge. In 1892 he was a nominee on the Democratic ticket for Presidential Elector. He was elected to represent the Nineteenth Illinois District in the Fifty-first Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of R. W. Townsend, was re-elected in 1890 and 1892, but defeated by Orlando Burrell (Republican) for re-election in the newly organized Twentieth District in 1894. In 1898 he was again a candidate and elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

WILLIAMS, John, pioneer merchant, was born in Bath County, Ky., Sept. 11, 1808; between 14 and 16 years of age was clerk in a store in his native State; then, joining his parents, who had settled on a tract of land in a part of Sangamon (now Menard) County, Ill., he found employment as clerk in the store of Major Elijah Iles, at Springfield, whom he succeeded in business at the age of 22, continuing it without interruption until 1880. In 1856 Mr. Williams was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Springfield District, and, in 1861, was appointed Commissary-General for the State, rendering valuable service in furnishing supplies for State troops, in camps of instruction and while proceeding to the field, in the first years of the war; was also chief officer of the Illinois Sanitary Commission for two years, and, as one of the intimate personal friends of Mr. Lincoln, was chosen to accompany the remains of the martyred President, from Washington to Springfield, for burial. Liberal, enterprising and public-spirited, his name was associated with nearly every public enterprise of importance in Springfield during his business career—being one of the founders, and, for eleven years President, of the First National Bank; a chief promoter in the construction of what is now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Springfield and Peoria line; a Director of the Springfield Iron Company; one of the Commissioners who constructed the Springfield water-works, and an officer of the Lincoln Monument Association, from 1865 to his death, May 29, 1890.

WILLIAMS, Norman, lawyer, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 1, 1833, being related, on both the paternal and maternal sides, to some of the most prominent families of New England. He fitted for college at Union Academy, Meriden, and graduated from the University of Vermont in the class of 1855. After taking a course in the Albany Law School and with a law firm in his native town, he was admitted to practice in both New York and Vermont, removed to Chicago in 1858, and, in 1860, became a member of the firm of King, Kales & Williams, still later forming a partnership with Gen. John L. Thompson, which ended with the death of the latter in 1888. In a professional capacity he assisted in the organization of the Pullman Palace Car Company, and was a member of its Board of Directors; also assisted in organizing the Western Electric Company, and was prominently identified with the Chicago Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1881 he served as the United States Commissioner to the Electrical Exposition at Paris. In conjunction with his brother (Edward H. Williams) he assisted in founding the public library at Woodstock, Vt., which, in honor of his father, received the name of "The Norman Williams Public Library." With Col. Huntington W. Jackson and J. McGregor Adams, Mr. Williams was named, in the will of the late John Crerar, as an executor of the Crerar estate and one of the Trustees of the Crerar Public Library, and became its first President; was also a Director of the Chicago Public Library, and trustee of a number of large estates. Mr. Williams was a son-in-law of the late Judge John D. Caton, and his oldest daughter became the wife of Major-General Wesley Merritt, a few months before his death, which occurred at Hampton Beach, N. H., June 19, 1899—his remains being interred in his native town of Woodstock, Vt.

WILLIAMS, Robert Ebenezer, lawyer, born Dec. 3, 1825, at Clarksville, Pa., his grandfathers on both sides being soldiers of the Revolutionary War. In 1830 his parents removed to Washington in the same State, where in boyhood he worked as a mechanic in his father's shop, attending a common school in the winter until he reached the age of 17 years, when he entered Washington College, remaining for more than a year. He then began teaching, and, in 1845 went to Kentucky, where he pursued the business of a teacher for four years. Then he entered Bethany College in West Virginia, at the same time prosecuting his law studies, but left at the close of his junior year, when, having been licensed to practice, he removed to Clinton, Texas. Here he accepted, from a retired lawyer, the loan of a law library, which he afterwards purchased; served for two years as State's Attorney, and, in 1856, came to Bloomington, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of his profession. Much of his time was devoted to practice as a railroad attorney, especially in connection with the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads, in which he acquired prominence and wealth. He was a lifelong Democrat and, in 1868, was the unsuccessful candidate of his party for Attorney-General of the State. The last three years of his life he had been in bad health, dying at Bloomington, Feb. 15, 1899.

WILLIAMS, Samuel, Bank President, was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 11, 1820; came to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and, in 1842, removed to Iroquois County, where he held various local offices, including that of County Judge, to which he was elected in 1861. During his later years he had been President of the Watseka Citizens' Bank. Died, June 16, 1896.

WILLIAMSON, Rollin Samuel, legislator and jurist, was born at Cornwall, Vt., May 23, 1839. At the age of 14 he went to Boston, where he began life as a telegraph messenger boy. In two years he had become a skillful operator, and, as such, was employed in various offices in New England and New York. In 1857 he came to Chicago seeking employment and, through the fortunate correction of an error on the part of the receiver of a message, secured the position of operator and station agent at Palatine, Cook County. Here he read law during his leisure time without a preceptor, and, in 1870, was admitted to the bar. The same year he was elected to the lower House of the General Assembly and, in 1872, to the Senate. In 1880 he was elected to the bench of the Superior Court of Cook County, and, in 1887, was chosen a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court. Died, August 10, 1889.

WILLIAMSON COUNTY, in the southern part of the State, originally set off from Franklin and organized in 1839. The county is well watered, the principal streams being the Big Muddy and the South Fork of the Saline. The surface is undulating and the soil fertile. The region was originally well covered with forests. All the cereals (as well as potatoes) are cultivated, and rich meadows encourage stock-raising. Coal and sandstone underlie the entire county. Area, 440 square miles; population (1880), 19,324; (1890) 22,226; (1900), 27,796.

WILLIAMSVILLE, village of Sangamon County, on Chicago & Alton Railroad, 12 miles north of Springfield; has a bank, elevator, 3 churches, a newspaper and coal-mines. Pop. (1900), 573.

WILLIS, Jonathan Clay, soldier and former Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., June 27, 1826; brought to Gallatin County, Ill., in 1834, and settled at Golconda in 1843; was elected Sheriff of Pope County in 1856, removed to Metropolis in 1859, and engaged in the wharf-boat and commission business. He entered the service as Quartermaster of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861, but was compelled to resign on account of injuries, in 1863; was elected Representative in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1868), appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in 1869, and Railway and Warehouse Commissioner in 1892, as the successor of John R. Tanner, serving until 1893.

WILMETTE, a village in Cook County, 14 miles north of Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a handsome suburb of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan; principal streets paved and shaded with fine forest trees; has public library and good schools. Pop. (1900), 2,300.

WILMINGTON, a city of Will County, on the Kankakee River and the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 53 miles from Chicago and 15 south-southwest of Joliet; has considerable manufactures, two National banks, a graded school, churches and one newspaper. Wilmington is the location of the Illinois Soldiers' Widows' Home. Population (1890), 1,576; (1900), 1,420.

WILSON, Charles Lush, journalist, was born in Fairfield County, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, educated in the common schools and at an academy in his native State, and, in 1835, removed to Chicago, entering the employment of his older brothers, who were connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal at Joliet. His brother, Richard L., having assumed charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" (the successor of "The Chicago American"), in 1844, Charles L. took a position in the office, ultimately securing a partnership, which continued until the death of his brother in 1856, when he succeeded to the ownership of the paper. Mr. Wilson was an ardent friend and supporter of Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate in 1858, but, in 1860, favored the nomination of Mr. Seward for the Presidency, though earnestly supporting Mr. Lincoln after his nomination. In 1861 he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation at London, serving with the late Minister Charles Francis Adams, until 1864, when he resigned and resumed his connection with "The Journal." In 1875 his health began to fail, and three years later, having gone to San Antonio, Tex., in the hope of receiving benefit from a change of climate, he died in that city, March 9, 1878.—Richard Lush (Wilson), an older brother of the preceding, the first editor and publisher of "The Chicago Evening Journal," the oldest paper of consecutive publication in Chicago, was a native of New York. Coming to Chicago with his brother John L., in 1834, they soon after established themselves in business on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, then in course of construction. In 1844 he took charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" for a publishing committee which had purchased the material of "The Chicago American," but soon after became principal proprietor. In April, 1847, while firing a salute in honor of the victory of Buena Vista, he lost an arm and was otherwise injured by the explosion of the cannon. Early in 1849, he was appointed, by President Taylor, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, but, having failed of confirmation, was compelled to retire in favor of a successor appointed by Millard Fillmore, eleven months later. Mr. Wilson published a little volume in 1842 entitled "A Trip to Santa Fe," and, a few years later, a story of travel under the title, "Short Ravelings from a Long Yarn." Died, December, 1856.—John Lush (Wilson), another brother, also a native of New York, came to Illinois in 1834, was afterwards associated with his brothers in business, being for a time business manager of "The Chicago Journal;" also served one term as Sheriff of Cook County. Died, in Chicago, April 13, 1888.

WILSON, Isaac Grant, jurist, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., April 26, 1817, graduated from Brown University in 1838, and the same year came to Chicago, whither his father's family had preceded him in 1835. After reading law for two years, he entered the senior class at Cambridge (Mass.) Law School, graduating in 1841. In August of that year he opened an office at Elgin, and, for ten years "rode the circuit." In 1851 he was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit to fill a vacancy, and re-elected for a full term in 1855, and again in '61. In November of the latter year he was commissioned the first Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but resigned, a few weeks later, and resumed his place upon the bench. From 1867 to 1879 he devoted himself to private practice, which was largely in the Federal Courts. In 1879 he resumed his seat upon the bench (this time for the Twelfth Circuit), and was at once designated as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court at Chicago, of which tribunal he became Chief Justice in 1881. In 1885 he was re-elected Circuit Judge, but died, about the close of his term, at Geneva, June 8, 1891.

WILSON, James Grant, soldier and author, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, April 28, 1832, and, when only a year old, was brought by his father, William Wilson, to America. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where James Grant was educated at College Hill and under private teachers. After finishing his studies he became his father's partner in business, but, in 1855, went abroad, and, shortly after his return, removed to Chicago, where he founded the first literary paper established in the Northwest. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he disposed of his journal to enlist in the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Major and afterwards promoted to the colonelcy. In August, 1863, while at New Orleans, by advice of General Grant, he accepted a commission as Colonel of the Fourth Regiment United States Colored Cavalry, and was assigned, as Aid-de-camp, to the staff of the Commander of the Department of the Gulf, filling this post until April, 1865. When General Banks was relieved, Colonel Wilson was brevetted Brigadier-General and placed in command at Fort Hudson, resigning in July, 1865, since which time his home has been in New York. He is best known as an author, having published numerous addresses, and being a frequent contributor to American and European magazines. Among larger works which he has written or edited are "Biographical Sketches of Illinois Officers"; "Love in Letters"; "Life of General U. S. Grant"; "Life and Letters of Fitz Greene Halleck"; "Poets and Poetry of Scotland"; "Bryant and His Friends"; and "Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography."

WILSON, James Harrison, soldier and military engineer, was born near Shawneetown, Ill., Sept. 2, 1837. His grandfather, Alexander Wilson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his father (Harrison Wilson) was an ensign during the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. His brother (Bluford Wilson) served as Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers during the Civil War, and as Solicitor of the United States Treasury during the "whisky ring" prosecutions. James H. was educated in the common schools, at McKendree College, and the United States Military Academy at West Point, graduating from the latter in 1860, and being assigned to the Topographical Engineer Corps. In September, 1861, he was promoted to a First Lieutenantcy, then served as Chief Topographical Engineer of the Port Royal expedition until March, 1862; was afterwards attached to the Department of the South, being present at the bombardment of Fort Pulaski; was Aid-de-camp to McClellan, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam; was made Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers in November, 1862; was Chief Topographical Engineer and Inspector-General of the Army of the Tennessee until October, 1863, being actively engaged in the operations around Vicksburg; was made Captain of Engineers in May, 1863, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Oct. 31, following. He also conducted operations preliminary to the battle of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, and for the relief of Knoxville. Later, he was placed in command of the Third Division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, serving from May to August, 1864, under General Sheridan. Subsequently he was transferred to the Department of the Mississippi, where he so distinguished himself that, on April 20, 1865, he was made Major-General of Volunteers. In twenty-eight days he captured five fortified cities, twenty-three stands of colors, 288 guns and 6,820 prisoners—among the latter being Jefferson Davis. He was mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1866, and, on July 28, following, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, being also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. On Dec. 31, 1870, he returned to civil life, and was afterwards largely engaged in railroad and engineering operations, especially in West Virginia. Promptly after the declaration of war with Spain (1898) General Wilson was appointed, by the President, Major-General of Volunteers, serving until its close. He is the author of "China: Travels and Investigations in the Middle Kingdom"; "Life of Andrew J. Alexander"; and the "Life of Gen. U. S. Grant," in conjunction with Charles A.

Dana. His home, in recent years, has been in New York.

WILSON, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1824—the classmate of Franklin Pierce and Nathaniel Hawthorne; studied law in New Hampshire and came to Illinois in 1835, locating at Joliet; removed to Chicago in 1841, where he was the partner of Norman B. Judd, serving, at different periods, as attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railways; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cook County, 1853-59, when he became Presiding Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, serving until 1868. Died, Dec. 7, 1883.

WILSON, John P., lawyer, was born in Whiteside County, Ill., July 3, 1844; educated in the common schools and at Knox College, Galesburg, graduating from the latter in 1865; two years later was admitted to the bar in Chicago, and speedily attained prominence in his profession. During the World's Fair period he was retained as counsel by the Committee on Grounds and Buildings, and was prominently connected, as counsel for the city, with the Lake Front litigation.

WILSON, Robert L., early legislator, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 11, 1805, taken to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1810, graduated at Franklin College in 1831, studied law and, in 1833, removed to Athens (now in Menard County), Ill.; was elected Representative in 1836, and was one of the members from Sangamon County, known as the "Long Nine," who assisted in securing the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. Mr. Wilson removed to Sterling, Whiteside County, in 1840, was elected five times Circuit Clerk and served eight years as Probate Judge. Immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, he enlisted as private in a battalion in Washington City under command of Cassius M. Clay, for guard duty until the arrival of the Seventh New York Regiment. He subsequently assisted in raising troops in Illinois, was appointed Paymaster by Lincoln, serving at Washington, St. Louis, and, after the fall of Vicksburg, at Springfield—being mustered out in November, 1865. Died, in Whiteside County, 1880.

WILSON, Robert S., lawyer and jurist, was born at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1812; learned the printer's art, then studied law and was admitted to the bar in Allegheny County, about 1833; in 1836 removed to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he served as Probate Judge and State Senator; in 1850 came to Chicago, was elected Judge of the Recorder's Court in 1853, and re-elected in 1858, serving ten years, and proving "a terror to evil-doers." Died, at Lawrence, Mich., Dec. 23, 1882.

WILSON, William, early jurist, was born in Loudoun County, Va., April 27, 1794; studied law with Hon. John Cook, a distinguished lawyer, and minister to France in the early part of the century; in 1817 removed to Kentucky, soon after came to Illinois, two years later locating in White County, near Carmi, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. In 1819 he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court as successor to William P. Foster, who is described by Governor Ford as "a great rascal and no lawyer," and who held office only about nine months. Judge Wilson was re-elected to the Supreme bench, as Chief-Justice, in 1825, being then only a little over 30 years old, and held office until the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the Constitution of 1848—a period of over twenty-nine years, and, with the exception of Judge Browne's, the longest term of service in the history of the court. He died at his home in White County, April 29, 1857. A Whig in early life, he allied himself with the Democratic party on the dissolution of the former. Hon. James C. Conkling, of Springfield, says of him, "as a writer, his style was clear and distinct; as a lawyer, his judgment was sound and discriminating."

WINCHESTER, a city and county-seat of Scott County, founded in 1839, situated on Big Sandy Creek and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 29 miles south of Beardstown and 84 miles north by west of St. Louis. While the surrounding region is agricultural and largely devoted to wheat growing, there is some coal mining. Winchester is an important shipping-point, having three grain elevators, two flouring mills, and a coal mine employing fifty miners. There are four Protestant and one Catholic church, a court house, a high school, a graded school building, two banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,626; (1890), 1,542; (1900), 1,711.

WINDSOR, a city of Shelby County at the crossing of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 11 miles northeast of Shelbyville. Population (1880), 768; (1890), 888; (1900), 866.

WINES, Frederick Howard, clergyman and sociologist, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 9, 1838, graduated at Washington (Pa.) College in 1857, and, after serving as tutor there for a short time, entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but was compelled temporarily to discontinue his studies on account of a weakness of the eyes. The Presbytery of St. Louis licensed him to preach in 1860, and, in 1862, he was commissioned Hospital Chaplain in the Union army. During 1862-64 he was stationed at Springfield, Mo., participating in the battle of Springfield on Jan. 8, 1863, and being personally mentioned for bravery on the field in the official report. Re-entering the seminary at Princeton in 1864, he graduated in 1865, and at once accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., which he filled for four years. In 1869 he was appointed Secretary of the newly created Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of Illinois, in which capacity he continued until 1893, when he resigned. For the next four years he was chiefly engaged in literary work, in lecturing before universities on topics connected with social science, in aiding in the organization of charitable work, and in the conduct of a thorough investigation into the relations between liquor legislation and crime. At an early period he took a prominent part in organizing the various Boards of Public Charities of the United States into an organization known as the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, and, at the Louisville meeting (1883), was elected its President. At the International Penitentiary Congress at Stockholm (1878) he was the official delegate from Illinois. On his return, as a result of his observations while abroad, he submitted to the Legislature a report strongly advocating the construction of the Kankakee Hospital for the Insane, then about to be built, upon the "detached ward" or "village" plan, a departure from then existing methods, which marks an era in the treatment of insane in the United States. Mr. Wines conducted the investigation into the condition and number of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes throughout the country, his report constituting a separate volume under the "Tenth Census," and rendered a similar service in connection with the eleventh census (1890). In 1887 he was elected Secretary of the National Prison Association, succeeding to the post formerly held by his father, Enoch Cobb Wines, D.D., LL.D. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897, he resumed his former position of Secretary of the Board of Public Charities, remaining until 1899, when he again tendered his resignation, having received the appointment to the position of Assistant Director of the Twelfth Census, which he now holds. He is the author of "Crime and Reformation" (1895); of a voluminous series of reports; also of numerous pamphlets and brochures, among which may be mentioned "The County Jail System; An Argument for its Abolition" (1878); "The Kankakee Hospital" (1882); "Provision for the Insane in the United States" (1885); "Conditional Liberation, or the Paroling of Prisoners" (1886), and "American Prisons in the Tenth Census" (1888).

WINES, Walter B., lawyer (brother of Frederick H. Wines), was born in Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1848, received his primary education at Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., after which he entered Middlebury College, Vt., taking a classical course and graduating there. He afterwards became a student in the law department of Columbia College, N. Y., graduating in 1871, being admitted to the bar the same year and commencing practice in New York City. In 1879 he came to Springfield, Ill., and was, for a time, identified with the bar of that city. Later, he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in literary and journalistic work.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY, situated in the "northern tier," bordering on the Wisconsin State line; was organized, under an act passed in 1836, from La Salle and Jo Daviess Counties, and has an area of 552 square miles. The county is drained by the Rock and Pecatonica Rivers. The surface is rolling prairie and the soil fertile. The geology is simple, the quaternary deposits being underlaid by the Galena blue and buff limestone, adapted for building purposes. All the cereals are raised in abundance, the chief product being corn. The Winnebago Indians (who gave name to the county) formerly lived on the west side of the Rock River, and the Pottawatomies on the east, but both tribes removed westward in 1835. (As to manufacturing interests see Rockford.) Population (1880), 30,505; (1890), 39,938; (1900), 47,845.

WINNEBAGO WAR. The name given to an Indian disturbance which had its origin in 1827, during the administration of Gov. Ninian Edwards. The Indians had been quiet since the conclusion of the War of 1812, but a few isolated outrages were sufficient to start terrified "runners" in all directions. In the northern portion of the State, from Galena to Chicago (then Fort Dearborn) the alarm was intense. The meagre militia force of the State was summoned and volunteers were called for. Meanwhile, 600 United States Regular Infantry, under command of Gen. Henry Atkinson, put in an appearance. Besides the infantry, Atkinson had at his disposal some 130 mounted sharpshooters. The origin of the disturbance was as follows: The Winnebagoes attacked a band of Chippewas, who were (by treaty) under Government protection, several of the latter being killed. For participation in this offense, four Winnebago Indians were summarily apprehended, surrendered to the Chippewas and shot. Meanwhile, some dispute had arisen as to the title of the lands, claimed by the Winnebagoes in the vicinity of Galena, which had been occupied by white miners. Repeated acts of hostility and of reprisal, along the Upper Mississippi, intensified mutual distrust. A gathering of the Indians around two keel-boats, laden with supplies for Fort Snelling, which had anchored near Prairie du Chien and opposite a Winnebago camp, was regarded by the whites as a hostile act. Liquor was freely distributed, and there is historical evidence that a half-dozen drunken squaws were carried off and shamefully maltreated. Several hundred warriors assembled to avenge the deception which had been practiced upon them. They laid in ambush for the boats on their return trip. The first passed too rapidly to be successfully assailed, but the second grounded and was savagely, yet unsuccessfully, attacked. The presence of General Atkinson's forces prevented an actual outbreak, and, on his demand, the great Winnebago Chief, Red Bird, with six other leading men of the tribe, surrendered themselves as hostages to save their nation from extermination. A majority of these were, after trial, acquitted. Red Bird, however, unable to endure confinement, literally pined to death in prison, dying on Feb. 16, 1828. He is described as having been a savage of superior intelligence and noble character. A treaty of peace was concluded with the Winnebagoes in a council held at Prairie du Chien, a few months later, but the affair seems to have produced as much alarm among the Indians as it did among the whites. (For Winnebago Indians see page 576.)

WINNETKA, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 16½ miles north of Chicago. It stands eighty feet above the level of Lake Michigan, has good schools (being the seat of the Winnetka Institute), several churches, and is a popular residence town. Population (1880), 584; (1890), 1,079; (1900), 1,833.

WINSTON, Frederick Hampton, lawyer, was born in Liberty County, Ga., Nov. 20, 1830, was brought to Woodford County, Ky., in 1835, left an orphan at 12, and attended the common schools until 18, when, returning to Georgia, he engaged in cotton manufacture. He finally began the study of law with United States Senator W. C. Dawson, and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1852; spent some time in the office of W. M. Evarts in New York, was admitted to the bar and came to Chicago in 1853, where he formed a partnership with Norman B. Judd, afterwards being associated with Judge Henry W. Blodgett; served as general solicitor of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railways—remaining with the latter twenty years. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Minister to Persia, but resigned the following year, and traveled extensively in Russia, Scandinavia and other foreign countries. Mr. Winston was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1868, '76 and '84; first President of the Stock Yards at Jersey City, for twelve years President of the Lincoln Park Commission, and a Director of the Lincoln National Bank.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL LINES. The Wisconsin Central Company was organized, June 17, 1887, and subsequently acquired the Minnesota, St. Croix & Wisconsin, the Wisconsin & Minnesota, the Chippewa Falls & Western, the St. Paul & St. Croix Falls, the Wisconsin Central, the Penokee, and the Packwaukee & Montebello Railroads, and assumed the leases of the Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago and the Wisconsin & Minnesota Roads. On July 1, 1888, the company began to operate the entire Wisconsin Central system, with the exception of the Wisconsin Central Railroad and the leased Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago, which remained in charge of the Wisconsin Central Railroad mortgage trustees until Nov. 1, 1889, when these, too, passed under the control of the Wisconsin Central Company. The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company is a reorganization (Oct. 1, 1879) of a company formed Jan. 1, 1871. The Wisconsin Central and the Wisconsin Central Railroad Companies, though differing in name, are a financial unit; the former holding most of the first mortgage bonds of the latter, and substantially all its notes, stocks and income bonds, but, for legal reasons (such as the protection of land titles), it is necessary that separate corporations be maintained. On April 1, 1890, the Wisconsin Central Company executed a lease to the Northern Pacific Railroad, but this was set aside by the courts, on Sept. 27, 1893, for non-payment of rent, and was finally canceled. On the same day receivers were appointed to insure the protection of all interests. The total mileage is 415.46 miles, of which the Company owns 258.90—only .10 of a mile in Illinois. A line, 58.10 miles in length, with 8.44 miles of side-track (total, 66.54 miles), lying wholly within the State of Illinois, is operated by the Chicago & Wisconsin and furnishes the allied line an entrance into Chicago.

WITHROW, Thomas F., lawyer, was born in Virginia in March, 1833, removed with his parents to Ohio in childhood, attended the Western Reserve College, and, after the death of his father, taught school and worked as a printer, later, editing a paper at Mount Vernon. In 1855 he removed to Janesville, Wis., where he again engaged in journalistic work, studied law, was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1857, settled at Des Moines and served as private secretary of Governors Lowe and Kirkwood. In 1860 he became Supreme Court Reporter; served as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1863 and, in 1866, became associated with the Rock Island Railroad in the capacity of local attorney, was made chief law officer of the Company in 1873, and removed to Chicago, and, in 1890, was promoted to the position of General Counsel. Died, in Chicago, Feb. 3, 1893.

WOLCOTT, (Dr.) Alexander, early Indian Agent, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 14, 1790; graduated from Yale College in 1809, and, after a course in medicine, was commissioned, in 1812, Surgeon's Mate in the United States Army. In 1820 he was appointed Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), as successor to Charles Jouett—the first Agent—who had been appointed a United States Judge in Arkansas. The same year he accompanied General Lewis Cass and Henry Schoolcraft on their tour among the Indians of the Northwest; was married in 1823 to Ellen Marion Kinzie, a daughter of Col. John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago; in 1825 was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Peoria County, which then included Cook County; was a Judge of Election in 1830, and one of the purchasers of a block of ground in the heart of the present city of Chicago, at the first sale of lots, held Sept. 27, 1830, but died before the close of the year. Dr. Wolcott appears to have been a high-minded and honorable man, as well as far in advance of the mass of pioneers in point of education and intelligence.

WOOD, Benson, lawyer and Congressman, was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1839; received a common school and academic education; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, and, for two years, taught school in Lee County. He then enlisted as a soldier in an Illinois regiment, attaining the rank of Captain of Infantry; after the war, graduated from the Law Department of the old Chicago University, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872) and was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876 and 1888; also served as Mayor of the city of Effingham, where he now resides. In 1894 he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Republicans of the Nineteenth District, which has uniformly returned a Democrat, and, in office, proved himself a most industrious and efficient member. Mr. Wood was defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1896.

WOOD, John, pioneer, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, was born at Moravia, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798—his father being a Revolutionary soldier who had served as Surgeon and Captain in the army. At the age of 21 years young Wood removed to Illinois, settling in what is now Adams County, and building the first log-cabin on the site of the present city of Quincy. He was a member of the upper house of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth General Assemblies, and was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1859 on the same ticket with Governor Bissell, and served out the unexpired term of the latter, who died in office. (See Bissell, William H.) He was succeeded by Richard Yates in 1861. In February of that year he was appointed one of the five Commissioners from Illinois to the "Peace Conference" at Washington, to consider methods for averting civil war. The following May he was appointed Quartermaster-General for the State by Governor Yates, and assisted most efficiently in fitting out the troops for the field. In June, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers (100-days' men) and mustered out of service the following September. Died, at Quincy, June 11, 1880. He was liberal, patriotic and public-spirited. His fellow-citizens of Quincy erected a monument to his memory, which was appropriately dedicated, July 4, 1883.

WOODFORD COUNTY, situated a little north of the center of the State, bounded on the west by the Illinois River: organized in 1841; area, 540 square miles. The surface is generally level, except along the Illinois River, the soil fertile and well watered. The county lies in the northern section of the great coal field of the State. Eureka is the county-seat. Other thriving cities and towns are Metamora, Minonk, El Paso and Roanoke. Corn, oats, wheat, potatoes and barley are the principal crops. The chief mechanical industries are flour manufacture, carriage and wagon-making, and saddlery and harness work. Population (1890), 21,429; (1900), 21,822.

WOODHULL, a village of Henry County, on Keithsburg branch Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of Galva; has a bank, electric lights, water works, brick and tile works, six churches and weekly paper. Pop. (1900), 774.

WOODMAN, Charles W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Aalborg, Denmark, March 11, 1844; received his early education in the schools of his native country, but took to the sea in 1860, following the life of a sailor until 1863, when, coming to Philadelphia, he enlisted in the Gulf Squadron of the United States. After the war, he came to Chicago, and, after reading law for some time in the office of James L. High, graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University in 1871. Some years later he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for some of the lower courts, and, in 1881, was nominated by the Judges of Cook County as one of the Justices of the Peace for the city of Chicago. In 1894 he became the Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District and was elected, but failed to secure a renomination in 1896. Died, in Elgin Asylum for the Insane, March 18, 1898.

WOODS, Robert Mann, was born at Greenville, Pa., April 17, 1840; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, the family settling at Barry, Pike County, but subsequently residing at Pittsfield, Canton and Galesburg. He was educated at Knox College in the latter place, which was his home from 1849 to '58; later, taught school in Iowa and Missouri until 1861, when he went to Springfield and began the study of law with Milton Hay and Shelby M. Cullom. His law studies having been interrupted by the Civil War, after spending some time in the mustering and disbursing office, he was promoted by Governor Yates to a place in the executive office, from which he went to the field as Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Infantry, known as the "Yates Sharp-Shooters." After participating, with the Army of the Tennessee, in the Atlanta campaign, he took part in the "March to the Sea," and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the forcing of the Salkahatchie, where he distinguished himself, as also in the taking of Columbia, Fayetteville, Cheraw, Raleigh and Bentonville. At the latter place he had a horse shot under him and won the brevet rank of Major for gallantry in the field, having previously been commissioned Captain of Company A of his regiment. He also served on the staffs of Gens. Giles A. Smith, Benjamin F. Potts, and William W. Belknap, and was the last mustering officer in General Sherman's army. In 1867 Major Woods removed to Chicago, where he was in business for a number of years, serving as chief clerk of Custom House construction from 1872 to 1877. In 1879 he purchased "The Daily Republican" at Joliet, which he conducted successfully for fifteen years. While connected with "The Republican," he served as Secretary of the Illinois Republican Press Association and in various other positions.

Major Woods was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose birth-place was in Illinois. (See Grand Army of the Republic; also Stephenson, Dr. B. F.) When Dr. Stephenson (who had been Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry), conceived the idea of founding such an order, he called to his assistance Major Woods, who was then engaged in writing the histories of Illinois regiments for the Adjutant-General's Report. The Major wrote the Constitution and By-laws of the Order, the charter blanks for all the reports, etc. The first official order bears his name as the first Adjutant-General of the Order, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ILLINOIS
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL 1, 1866.

NO. 1. The following named officers are hereby appointed and assigned to duty at these headquarters. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

Colonel Jules C. Webber, A.D.C. and Chief of Staff.
Colonel John M. Snyder, Quartermaster-General.
Major Robert M. Woods, Adjutant-General.
Captain John A. Lightfoot, Assistant Adjutant-General.
Captain John S. Phelps, Aid-de-Camp.

By order of B. F. Stephenson, Department Commander.

ROBERT M. WOODS,
Adjutant-General.

Major Woods afterwards organized the various Departments in the West, and it has been conceded that he furnished the money necessary to carry on the work during the first six months of the existence of the Order. He has never accepted a nomination or run for any political office, but is now engaged in financial business in Joliet and Chicago, with his residence in the former place.

WOODSON, David Meade, lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., May 18, 1806; was educated in private schools and at Transylvania University, and read law with his father. He served a term in the Kentucky Legislature in 1832, and, in 1834, removed to Illinois, settling at Carrollton, Greene County. In 1839 he was elected State's Attorney and, in 1840, a member of the lower house of the Legislature, being elected a second time in 1868. In 1843 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, but was defeated by Stephen A. Douglas. He was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1869-70. In 1848 he was elected a Judge of the First Judicial Circuit, remaining in office until 1867. Died, in 1877.

WOODSTOCK, the county-seat of McHenry County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about 51 miles northwest of Chicago and 32 miles east of Rockford. It contains a court house, eight churches, four banks, three newspaper offices, foundry and machine shops, planing mills, canning works, pickle, cheese and butter factories. The Oliver Typewriter Factory is located here; the town is also the seat of the Todd Seminary for boys. Population (1890), 1,683; (1900), 2,502.

WORCESTER, Linus E., State Senator, was born in Windsor, Vt., Dec. 5, 1811, was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Chester Academy, came to Illinois in 1836, and, after teaching three years, entered a dry-goods store at Whitehall as clerk, later becoming a partner. He was also engaged in various other branches of business at different times, including the drug, hardware, grocery, agricultural implement and lumber business. In 1843 he was appointed Postmaster at Whitehall, serving twelve years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as County Judge for six years from 1853, and as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, from 1859, by successive reappointments, for twelve years. In 1856 he was elected, as a Democrat, to the State Senate, to succeed John M. Palmer, resigned; was re-elected in 1860, and, at the session of 1865, was one of the five Democratic members of that body who voted for the ratification of the Emancipation Amendment of the National Constitution. He was elected County Judge a second time, in 1863, and re-elected in 1867, served as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1876, and, for more than thirty years, was one of the Directors of the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, serving from the organization of the corporation until his death, which occurred Oct. 19, 1891.

WORDEN, a village of Madison County, on the Wabash and the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railways, 32 miles northeast of St. Louis. Population (1890), 522; (1900), 544

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. An exhibition of the scientific, liberal and mechanical arts of all nations, held at Chicago, between May 1 and Oct. 31, 1893. The project had its inception in November, 1885, in a resolution adopted by the directorate of the Chicago Interstate Exposition Company. On July 6, 1888, the first well defined action was taken, the Iroquois Club, of Chicago, inviting the co-operation of six other leading clubs of that city in "securing the location of an international celebration at Chicago of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus." In July, 1889, a decisive step was taken in the appointment by Mayor Cregier, under resolution of the City Council, of a committee of 100 (afterwards increased to 256) citizens, who were charged with the duty of promoting the selection of Chicago as the site for the Exposition. New York, Washington and St. Louis were competing points, but the choice of Congress fell upon Chicago, and the act establishing the World's Fair at that city was signed by President Harrison on April 25, 1890. Under the requirements of the law, the President appointed eight Commissioners-at-large, with two Commissioners and two alternates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia. Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, was elected Director-General by the body thus constituted. Ex-Senator Thomas M. Palmer, of Michigan, was chosen President of the Commission and John T. Dickinson, of Texas, Secretary. This Commission delegated much of its power to a Board of Reference and Control, who were instructed to act with a similar number appointed by the World's Columbian Exposition. The latter organization was an incorporation, with a directorate of forty-five members, elected annually by the stockholders. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, was the first President of the corporation, and was succeeded by W. T. Baker and Harlow N. Higinbotham.

In addition to these bodies, certain powers were vested in a Board of Lady Managers, composed of two members, with alternates, from each State and Territory, besides nine from the city of Chicago. Mrs. Potter Palmer was chosen President of the latter. This Board was particularly charged with supervision of women's participation in the Exposition, and of the exhibits of women's work.

The supreme executive power was vested in the Joint Board of Control. The site selected was Jackson Park, in the South Division of Chicago, with a strip connecting Jackson and Washington Parks, known as the "Midway Plaisance," which was surrendered to "concessionaires" who purchased the privilege of giving exhibitions, or conducting restaurants or selling-booths thereon. The total area of the site was 633 acres, and that of the buildings—not reckoning those erected by States other than Illinois, and by foreign governments—was about 200 acres. When to this is added the acreage of the foreign and State buildings, the total space under roof approximated 250 acres. These figures do not include the buildings erected by private exhibitors, caterers and vendors, which would add a small percentage to the grand total. Forty-seven foreign Governments made appropriations for the erection of their own buildings and other expenses connected with official representation, and there were exhibitors from eighty-six nations. The United States Government erected its own building, and appropriated $500,000 to defray the expenses of a national exhibit, besides $2,500,000 toward the general cost of the Exposition. The appropriations by foreign Governments aggregated about $6,500,000, and those by the States and Territories, $6,120,000—that of Illinois being $800,000. The entire outlay of the World's Columbian Exposition Company, up to March 31, 1894, including the cost of preliminary organization, construction, operating and post-Exposition expenses, was $27,151,800. This is, of course, exclusive of foreign and State expenditures, which would swell the aggregate cost to nearly $45,000,000. Citizens of Chicago subscribed $5,608,206 toward the capital stock of the Exposition Company, and the municipality, $5,000,000, which was raised by the sale of bonds. (See Thirty-sixth General Assembly.)

The site, while admirably adapted to the purpose, was, when chosen, a marshy flat, crossed by low sand ridges, upon which stood occasional clumps of stunted scrub oaks. Before the gates of the great fair were opened to the public, the entire area had been transformed into a dream of beauty. Marshes had been drained, filled in and sodded; driveways and broad walks constructed; artificial ponds and lagoons dug and embanked, and all the highest skill of the landscape gardener's art had been called into play to produce varied and striking effects. But the task had been a Herculean one. There were seventeen principal (or, as they may be called, departmental) buildings, all of beautiful and ornate design, and all of vast size. They were known as the Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, the Machinery, Electrical, Transportation, Woman's, Horticultural, Mines and Mining, Anthropological, Administration, Art Galleries, Agricultural, Art Institute, Fisheries, Live Stock, Dairy and Forestry buildings, and the Music Hall and Casino. Several of these had large annexes. The Manufacturers' Building was the largest. It was rectangular (1687x787 feet), having a ground area of 31 acres and a floor and gallery area of 44 acres. Its central chamber was 1280x380 feet, with a nave 107 feet wide, both hall and nave being surrounded by a gallery 50 feet wide. It was four times as large as the Roman Coliseum and three times as large as St. Peter's at Rome; 17,000,000 feet of lumber, 13,000,000 pounds of steel, and 2,000,000 pounds of iron had been used in its construction, involving a cost of $1,800,000.

It was originally intended to open the Exposition, formally, on Oct. 21, 1892, the quadri-centennial of Columbus' discovery of land on the Western Hemisphere, but the magnitude of the undertaking rendered this impracticable. Consequently, while dedicatory ceremonies were held on that day, preceded by a monster procession and followed by elaborate pyrotechnic displays at night, May 1, 1893, was fixed as the opening day—the machinery and fountains being put in operation, at the touch of an electric button by President Cleveland, at the close of a short address. The total number of admissions from that date to Oct. 31, was 27,530,460—the largest for any single day being on Oct. 9 (Chicago Day) amounting to 761,944. The total receipts from all sources (including National and State appropriations, subscriptions, etc.), amounted to $28,151,168.75, of which $10,626,330.76 was from the sale of tickets, and $3,699,581.43 from concessions. The aggregate attendance fell short of that at the Paris Exposition of 1889 by about 500,000, while the receipts from the sale of tickets and concessions exceeded the latter by nearly $5,800,000. Subscribers to the Exposition stock received a return of ten per cent on the same.

The Illinois building was the first of the State buildings to be completed. It was also the largest and most costly, but was severely criticised from an architectural standpoint. The exhibits showed the internal resources of the State, as well as the development of its governmental system, and its progress in civilization from the days of the first pioneers. The entire Illinois exhibit in the State building was under charge of the State Board of Agriculture, who devoted one-tenth of the appropriation, and a like proportion of floor space, to the exhibition of the work of Illinois women as scientists, authors, artists, decorators, etc. Among special features of the Illinois exhibit were: State trophies and relics, kept in a fire-proof memorial hall; the display of grains and minerals, and an immense topographical map (prepared at a cost of $15,000), drafted on a scale of two miles to the inch, showing the character and resources of the State, and correcting many serious cartographical errors previously undiscovered.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry, scientist and State Geologist, was born at Bradford, Vt., Oct. 31, 1813, emigrated to Kentucky in 1834, and, in 1836, removed to Illinois, locating at Warsaw. Teaching, surveying and mercantile business were his pursuits until 1842, when he returned to the East, spending two years in Boston, but returning to Warsaw in 1844. His natural predilections were toward the natural sciences, and, after coming west, he devoted most of his leisure time to the collection and study of specimens of mineralogy, geology and conchology. On the organization of the geological survey of Illinois in 1851, he was appointed assistant to Dr. J. G. Norwood, then State Geologist, and, in 1858, succeeded to the office, having meanwhile spent three years as Assistant Geologist in the first Iowa survey. As State Geologist he published seven volumes of reports, and was engaged upon the eighth when overtaken by death, May 6, 1888. These reports, which are as comprehensive as they are voluminous, have been reviewed and warmly commended by the leading scientific periodicals of this country and Europe. In 1877 field work was discontinued, and the State Historical Library and Natural History Museum were established, Professor Worthen being placed in charge as curator. He was the author of various valuable scientific papers and member of numerous scientific societies in this country and in Europe.

WORTHINGTON, Nicholas Ellsworth, ex-Congressman, was born in Brooke County, W. Va., March 30, 1836, and completed his education at Allegheny College, Pa., studied Law at Morgantown, Va., and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He is a resident of Peoria, and, by profession, a lawyer; was County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County from 1868 to 1872, and a member of the State Board of Education from 1869 to 1872. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, from the Tenth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1884. In 1886 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Philip Sidney Post. He was elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1891, and re-elected in 1897. In 1894 he served upon a commission appointed by President Cleveland, to investigate the labor strikes of that year at Chicago.

WRIGHT, John Stephen, manufacturer, was born at Sheffield, Mass., July 16, 1815; came to Chicago in 1832, with his father, who opened a store in that city; in 1837, at his own expense, built the first school building in Chicago; in 1840 established "The Prairie Farmer," which he conducted for many years in the interest of popular education and progressive agriculture. In 1852 he engaged in the manufacture of Atkins' self-raking reaper and mower, was one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union and the Illinois Central Railways, and wrote a volume entitled, "Chicago: Past, Present and Future," published in 1870. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 26, 1874.

WULFF, Henry, ex-State Treasurer, was born in Meldorf, Germany, August 24, 1854; came to Chicago in 1863, and began his political career as a Trustee of the town of Jefferson. In 1866 he was elected County Clerk of Cook County, and re-elected in 1890; in 1894 became the Republican nominee for State Treasurer, receiving, at the November election of that year, the unprecedented plurality of 133,427 votes over his Democratic opponent.

WYANET, a town of Bureau County, at the intersection of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 7 miles southwest of Princeton. Population (1890), 670; (1900), 902.

WYLIE, (Rev.) Samuel, domestic missionary, born in Ireland and came to America in boyhood; was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and ordained in 1818. Soon after this he came west as a domestic missionary and, in 1820, became pastor of a church at Sparta, Ill., where he remained until his death, March 20, 1872, after a pastorate of 52 years. During his pastorate the church sent out a dozen colonies to form new church organizations elsewhere. He is described as able, eloquent and scholarly.

WYMAN, (Col.) John B., soldier, was born in Massachusetts, July 12, 1817, and educated in the schools of that State until 14 years of age, when he became a clerk in a clothing store in his native town of Shrewsbury, later being associated with mercantile establishments in Cincinnati, and again in his native State. From 1846 to 1850 he was employed successively as a clerk in the car and machine shops at Springfield, Mass., then as Superintendent of Construction, and, later, as conductor on the New York & New Haven Railroad, finally, in 1850, becoming Superintendent of the Connecticut River Railroad. In 1852 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, assisting in the survey and construction of the line under Col. R. B. Mason, the Chief Engineer, and finally becoming Assistant Superintendent of the Northern Division. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Amboy, in Lee County, and its first Mayor, also serving a second term. Having a fondness for military affairs, he was usually connected with some military organization—while in Cincinnati being attached to a company, of which Prof. O. M. Mitchell, the celebrated astronomer (afterwards Major-General Mitchell), was Captain. After coming to Illinois he became Captain of the Chicago Light Guards. Having left the employ of the Railroad in 1858, he was in private business at Amboy at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861. As Assistant-Adjutant General, by appointment of Governor Yates, he rendered valuable service in the early weeks of the war in securing arms from Jefferson Barracks and in the organization of the three-months' regiments. Then, having organized the Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry—the first organized in the State for the three years' service—he was commissioned its Colonel, and, in July following, entered upon the duty of guarding the railroad lines in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas. The following year his regiment was attached to General Sherman's command in the first campaign against Vicksburg. On the second day of the Battle of Chickasaw Bayou, he fell mortally wounded, dying on the field, Dec. 28, 1862. Colonel Wyman was one of the most accomplished and promising of the volunteer soldiers sent to the field from Illinois, of whom so many were former employes of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WYOMING, a town of Stark County, 31 miles north-northwest from Peoria, at the junction of the Peoria branch Rock Island & Pacific and the Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has two high schools, churches, two banks, flour mills, water-works, machine shop, and two weekly newspapers. Coal is mined here. Pop. (1890), 1,116; (1900), 1,277.

XENIA, a village of Clay County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 87 miles east of St. Louis. Population (1900), 800.

YATES CITY, a village of Knox County, at the junction of the Peoria Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with the Rushville branch, 23 miles southeast of Galesburg. The town has banks, a coal mine, telephone exchange, school, churches and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 687; (1900), 650.

YATES, Henry, pioneer, was born in Caroline County, Va., Oct. 29, 1786—being a grand-nephew of Chief Justice John Marshall; removed to Fayette County, Ky., where he located and laid out the town of Warsaw, which afterwards became the county-seat of Gallatin County. In 1831 he removed to Sangamon County, Ill., and, in 1832, settled at the site of the present town of Berlin, which he laid out the following year, also laying out the town of New Berlin, a few years later, on the line of the Wabash Railway. He was father of Gov. Richard Yates. Died, Sept. 13, 1865.—Henry (Yates), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Berlin, Ill., March 7, 1835; engaged in merchandising at New Berlin; in 1862, raised a company of volunteers for the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and brevetted Colonel and Brigadier-General. He was accidentally shot in 1863, and suffered sun-stroke at Little Rock, from which he never fully recovered. Died, August 3, 1871.

YATES, Richard, former Governor and United States Senator, was born at Warsaw, Ky., Jan. 18, 1815, of English descent. In 1831 he accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling first at Springfield and later at Berlin, Sangamon County. He soon after entered Illinois College, from which he graduated in 1835, and subsequently read law with Col. John J. Hardin, at Jacksonville, which thereafter became his home. In 1842 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Morgan County, and was re-elected in 1844, and again in 1848. In 1850 he was a candidate for Congress from the Seventh District and elected over Maj. Thomas L. Harris, the previous incumbent, being the only Whig Representative in the Thirty-second Congress from Illinois. Two years later he was re-elected over John Calhoun, but was defeated, in 1854, by his old opponent, Harris. He was one of the most vigorous opponents of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill in the Thirty-third Congress, and an early participant in the movement for the organization of the Republican party to resist the further extension of slavery, being a prominent speaker, on the same platform with Lincoln, before the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington, in May, 1856, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents of that body. In 1860 he was elected to the executive chair on the ticket headed by Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and, by his energetic support of the National administration in its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion, won the sobriquet of "the Illinois War-Governor." In 1865 he was elected United States Senator, serving until 1871. He died suddenly, at St. Louis, Nov. 27, 1873, while returning from Arkansas, whither he had gone, as a United States Commissioner, by appointment of President Grant, to inspect a land-subsidy railroad. He was a man of rare ability, earnestness of purpose and extraordinary personal magnetism, as well as of a lofty order of patriotism. His faults were those of a nature generous, impulsive and warm-hearted.

YORKVILLE, the county-seat of Kendall County, on Fox River and Streator Division of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles southwest of Aurora; on interurban electric line; has water-power, electric lights, a bank, churches and weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890) 375; (1900), 413.

YOUNG, Brigham, Mormon leader, was born at Whittingham, Vt., June 1, 1801, joined the Mormons in 1831 and, the next year, became associated with Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and, in 1835, an "apostle." He accompanied a considerable body of that sect to Independence, Mo., but was driven out with them in 1837, settling for a short time at Quincy, Ill., but later removing to Nauvoo, of which he was one of the founders. On the assassination of Smith, in 1844, he became the successor of the latter, as head of the Mormon Church, and, the following year, headed the exodus from Illinois, which finally resulted in the Mormon settlement in Utah. His subsequent career there, where he was appointed Governor by President Fillmore, and, for a time, successfully defied national authority, is a matter of national rather than State history. He remained at the head of the Mormon Church until his death at Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877.

YOUNG, Richard Montgomery, United States Senator, was born in Kentucky in 1796, studied law and removed to Jonesboro, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1817; served in the Second

General Assembly (1820-22) as Representative from Union County; was a Circuit Judge, 1825-27; Presidential Elector in 1828; Circuit Judge again, 1829-37; elected United States Senator in 1837 as successor to W. L. D. Ewing, serving until 1843, when he was commissioned Justice of the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1847 to become Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. During the session of 1850-51, he served as Clerk of the National House of Representatives. Died, in an insane asylum, in Washington, in 1853.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, first permanently organized at Chicago, in 1858, although desultory movements of a kindred character had previously been started at Peoria, Quincy, Chicago and Springfield, some as early as 1854. From 1858 to 1872, various associations were formed at different points throughout the State, which were entirely independent of each other. The first effort looking to union and mutual aid, was made in 1872, when Robert Weldensall, on behalf of the International Committee, called a convention, to meet at Bloomington, November 6-9. State conventions have been held annually since 1872. In that of 1875, steps were taken looking to the appointment of a State Secretary, and, in 1876, Charles M. Morton assumed the office. Much evangelistic work was done, and new associations formed, the total number reported at the Champaign Convention, in 1877, being sixty-two. After one year's work Mr. Morton resigned the secretaryship, the office remaining vacant for three years. The question of the appointment of a successor was discussed at the Decatur Convention in 1879, and, in April, 1880, I. B. Brown was made State Secretary, and has occupied the position to the present time (1899). At the date of his appointment the official figures showed sixteen associations in Illinois, with a total membership of 2,443, and property valued at $126,500, including building funds, the associations at Chicago and Aurora owning buildings. Thirteen officers were employed, none of them being in Chicago. Since 1880 the work has steadily grown, so that five Assistant State Secretaries are now employed. In 1886, a plan for arranging the State work under departmental administration was devised, but not put in operation until 1890. The present six departments of supervision are: General Supervision, in charge of the State Secretary and his Assistants; railroad and city work; counties and towns; work among students; corresponding membership department, and office work. The two last named are under one executive head, but each of the others in charge of an Assistant Secretary, who is responsible for its development. The entire work is under the supervision of a State Executive Committee of twenty-seven members, one-third of whom are elected annually. Willis H. Herrick of Chicago has been its chairman for several years. This body is appointed by a State convention composed of delegates from the local Associations. Of these there were, in October, 1898, 116, with a membership of 15,888. The value of the property owned was $2,500,000. Twenty-two occupy their own buildings, of which five are for railroad men and one for students. Weekly gatherings for young men numbered 248, and there are now representatives or correspondents in 665 communities where no organization has been effected. Scientific physical culture is made a feature by 40 associations, and educational work has been largely developed. The enrollment in evening classes, during 1898-99, was 978. The building of the Chicago branch (erected in 1893) is the finest of its class in the world. Recently a successful association has been formed among coal miners, and another among the first grade boys of the Illinois State Reformatory, while an extensive work has been conducted at the camps of the Illinois National Guard.

ZANE, Charles S., lawyer and jurist, was born in Cumberland County, N. J., March 2, 1831, of English and New England stock. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Sangamon County, Ill., for a time working on a farm and at brick-making. From 1852 to '55 he attended McKendree College, but did not graduate, and, on leaving college, engaged in teaching, at the same time reading law. In 1857 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice at Springfield. The following year he was elected City Attorney. He had for partners, at different times, William H. Herndon (once a partner of Abraham Lincoln) and Senator Shelby M. Cullom. In 1873 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and was re-elected in 1879. In 1883 President Arthur appointed him Chief Justice of Utah, where he has since resided, though superseded by the appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. At the first State election in Utah, held in November, 1895, he was chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the new Commonwealth, but was defeated for re-election, by his Democratic opponent, in 1898.

SUPPLEMENT.

The following matter, received too late for insertion in the body of this work, is added in the form of a supplement.

COGHLAN, (Capt.) Joseph Bullock, naval officer, was born in Kentucky, and, at the age of 15 years, came to Illinois, living on a farm for a time near Carlyle, in Clinton County. In 1860 he was appointed by his uncle, Hon. Philip B. Fouke—then a Representative in Congress from the Belleville District—to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1863, and being promoted through the successive grades of Ensign, Master, Lieutenant, Lieutenant-Commander, and Commander, and serving upon various vessels until Nov. 18, 1893, when he was commissioned Captain and, in 1897, assigned to the command of the battleship Raleigh, on the Asiatic Station. He was thus connected with Admiral Dewey's squadron at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, and took a conspicuous and brilliant part in the affair in Manila Bay, on May 1, 1898, which resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. Captain Coghlan's connection with subsequent events in the Philippines was in the highest degree creditable to himself and the country. His vessel (the Raleigh) was the first of Admiral Dewey's squadron to return home, coming by way of the Suez Canal, in the summer of 1899, he and his crew receiving an immense ovation on their arrival in New York harbor.

CRANE, (Rev.) James Lyons, clergyman, army chaplain, was born at Mt. Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, August 30, 1823, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati in 1841, and, coming to Edgar County, Illinois, in 1842, attended a seminary at Paris some three years. He joined the Illinois Conference in 1846, and was assigned to the Danville circuit, afterwards presiding over charges at Grandview, Hillsboro, Alton, Jacksonville, and Springfield—at the last two points being stationed two or more times, besides serving as Presiding Elder of the Paris, Danville, and Springfield Districts. The importance of the stations which he filled during his itinerant career served as evidence of his recognized ability and popularity as a preacher.

In July, 1861, he was appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at that time commanded by Ulysses S. Grant as Colonel, and, although he remained with the regiment only a few months, the friendship then established between him and the future commander of the armies of the Union lasted through their lives. This was shown by his appointment by President Grant, in 1869, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Springfield, which came to him as a personal compliment, being re-appointed four years afterwards and continuing in office eight years. After retiring from the Springfield postoffice, he occupied charges at Island Grove and Shelbyville, his death occurring at the latter place, July 29, 1879, as the result of an attack of paralysis some two weeks previous. Mr. Crane was married in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Mayo, daughter of Col. J. Mayo—a prominent citizen of Edgar County, at an early day—his wife surviving him some twenty years. Rev. Charles A. Crane and Rev. Frank Crane, pastors of prominent Methodist churches in Boston and Chicago, are sons of the subject of this sketch.

DAWES, Charles Gates, Comptroller of the Treasury, was born at Marietta, Ohio, August 27, 1865; graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886; worked at civil engineering during his vacations, finally becoming Chief Engineer of the Toledo & Ohio Railroad. Between 1887 and 1894 he was engaged in the practice of law at Lincoln, Neb., but afterwards became interested in the gas business in various cities, including Evanston, Ill., which became his home. In 1896 he took a leading part in securing instructions by the Republican State Convention at Springfield in favor of the nomination of Mr. McKinley for the Presidency, and during the succeeding campaign served as a member of the National Republican Committee for the State of Illinois. Soon after the accession of President McKinley, he was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury, a position which he now holds. Mr. Dawes is the son of R. B. Dawes, a former Congressman from Ohio, and the great-grandson of Manasseh Cutler, who was an influential factor in the early history of the Northwest Territory, and has been credited with exerting a strong influence in shaping and securing the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787.

DISTIN, (Col.) William L., former Department Commander of Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1843, his father being of English descent, while his maternal grandfather was a Colonel of the Polish Lancers in the army of the first Napoleon, who, after the exile of his leader, came to America, settling in Indiana. The father of the subject of this sketch settled at Keokuk, Iowa, where the son grew to manhood and in February, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry, having been twice rejected previously on account of physical ailment. Soon after enlistment he was detailed for provost-marshal duty, but later took part with his regiment in the campaign in Alabama. He served for a time in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. Logan, was subsequently detailed for duty on the Staff of General Raum, and participated in the battles of Resaca and Tilton, Ga. Having been captured in the latter, he was imprisoned successively at Jacksonville (Ga.), Montgomery, Savannah, and finally at Andersonville. From the latter he succeeded in effecting his escape, but was recaptured and returned to that famous prison-pen. Having escaped a second time by assuming the name of a dead man and bribing the guard, he was again captured and imprisoned at various points in Mississippi until exchanged about the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. He was then so weakened by his long confinement and scanty fare that he had to be carried on board the steamer on a stretcher. At this time he narrowly escaped being on board the steamer Sultana, which was blown up below Cairo, with 2,100 soldiers on board, a large proportion of whom lost their lives. After being mustered out at Davenport, Iowa, June 28, 1865, he was employed for a time on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and as a messenger and route agent of the United States Express Company. In 1872 he established himself in business in Quincy, Ill., in which he proved very successful. Here he became prominent in local Grand Army circles, and, in 1890, was unanimously elected Commander of the Department of Illinois. Previous to this he had been an officer of the Illinois National Guard, and served as Aid-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. In 1897 Colonel Distin was appointed by President McKinley Surveyor-General for the Territory of Alaska, a position which (1899) he still holds.

DUMMER, Henry E., lawyer, was born at Hallowell, Maine, April 9, 1808, was educated in Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1827, after which he took a course in law at Cambridge Law School, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Then, having spent some two years in his native State, in 1832 he removed to Illinois, settling first in Springfield, where he remained six years, being for a part of the time a partner of John T. Stuart, who afterwards became the first partner in law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Dummer had a brother, Richard William Dummer, who had preceded him to Illinois, living for a time in Jacksonville. In 1838 he removed to Beardstown, Cass County, which continued to be his home for more than a quarter of a century. During his residence there he served as Alderman, City Attorney and Judge of Probate for Cass County; also represented Cass County in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and, in 1860, was elected State Senator in the Twenty-second General Assembly, serving four years. Mr. Dummer was an earnest Republican, and served that party as a delegate for the State-at-large to the Convention of 1864, at Baltimore, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency a second time. In 1864 he removed to Jacksonville, and for the next year was the law partner of David A. Smith, until the death of the latter in 1865. In the summer of 1878 Mr. Dummer went to Mackinac, Mich., in search of health, but died there August 12 of that year.

ECKELS, James H., ex-Comptroller of the Currency, was born of Scotch-Irish parentage at Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, was educated in the common schools and the high school of his native town, graduated from the Law School at Albany, N. Y., in 1881, and the following year began practice at Ottawa, Ill. Here he continued in active practice until 1893, when he was appointed by President Cleveland Comptroller of the Currency, serving until May 1, 1898, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Eckels manifested such distinguished ability in the discharge of his duties as Comptroller that he received the notable compliment of being retained in office by a Republican administration more than a year after the retirement of President Cleveland, while his selection for a place at the head of one of the leading banking institutions of Chicago was a no less marked recognition of his abilities as a financier. He was a Delegate from the Eleventh District to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, and represented the same district in the Gold Democratic Convention at Indianapolis in 1896, and assisted in framing the platform there adopted—which indicated his views on the financial questions involved in the campaign of that year.

FIELD, Daniel, early merchant, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, Nov. 30, 1790, and settled at Golconda, Ill., in 1818, dying there in 1855. He was a man of great enterprise, engaged in merchandising, and became a large landholder, farmer and stock-grower, and an extensive shipper of stock and produce to lower Mississippi markets. He married Elizabeth Dailey of Charleston, Ind., and raised a large family of children, one of whom, Philip D., became Sheriff, while another, John, was County Judge of Pope County. His daughter, Maria, married Gen. Green B. Raum, who became prominent as a soldier during the Civil War and, later, as a member of Congress and Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Pension Commissioner in Washington.

FIELD, Green B., member of a pioneer family, was born within the present limits of the State of Indiana in 1787, served as a Lieutenant in the War of 1812, was married in Bourbon County, Kentucky, to Miss Mary E. Cogswell, the daughter of Dr. Joseph Cogswell, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and, in 1817, removed to Pope County, Illinois, where he laid off the town of Golconda, which became the county-seat. He served as a Representative from Pope County in the First General Assembly (1818-20), and was the father of Juliet C. Field, who became the wife of John Raum; of Edna Field, the wife of Dr. Tarlton Dunn, and of Green B. Field, who was a Lieutenant in Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the Mexican War. Mr. Field was the grandfather of Gen. Green B. Raum, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. He died of yellow fever in Louisiana in 1823.

GALE, Stephen Francis, first Chicago bookseller and a railway promoter, was born at Exeter, N. H., March 8, 1812; at 15 years of age became clerk in a leading book-store in Boston; came to Chicago in 1835, and soon afterwards opened the first book and stationery establishment in that city, which, in after years, gained an extensive trade. In 1842 the firm of S. F.

Gale & Co. was organized, but Mr. Gale, having become head of the Chicago Fire Department, retired from business in 1845. As early as 1846 he was associated with Wm. B. Ogden and John B. Turner in the steps then being taken to revive the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and, in conjunction with these gentlemen, became responsible for the means to purchase the charter and assets of the road from the Eastern bondholders. Later, he engaged in the construction of the branch road from Turner Junction to Aurora, became President of the line and extended it to Mendota to connect with the Illinois Central at that Point. These roads afterwards became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line. A number of years ago Mr. Gale returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he has since resided.

HAY, John, early settler, came to the region of Kaskaskia between 1790 and 1800, and became a prominent citizen of St. Clair County. He was selected as a member of the First Legislative Council of Indiana Territory for St. Clair County in 1805. In 1809 he was appointed Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of St. Clair County, and was continued in office after the organization of the State Government, serving until his death at Belleville in 1845.

HAYS, John, pioneer settler of Northwest Territory, was a native of New York, who came to Cahokia, in the "Illinois Country," in 1793, and lived there the remainder of his life. His early life had been spent in the fur-trade about Mackinac, in the Lake of the Woods region and about the sources of the Mississippi. During the War of 1812 he was able to furnish Governor Edwards valuable information in reference to the Indians in the Northwest. He filled the office of Postmaster at Cahokia for a number of years, and was Sheriff of St. Clair County from 1798 to 1818.

MOULTON, (Col.) George M., soldier and building contractor, was born at Readsburg, Vt., March 15, 1851, came early in life to Chicago, and was educated in the schools of that city. By profession he is a contractor and builder, the firm of which he is a member having been connected with the construction of a number of large buildings, including some extensive grain elevators. Colonel Moulton became a member of the Second Regiment Illinois National Guard in June, 1884, being elected to the office of Major, which he retained until January, 1893, when he was appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice on the staff of General Wheeler. A year later he was com missioned Colonel of the regiment, a position which he occupied at the time of the call by the President for troops to serve in the Spanish-American War in April, 1898. He promptly answered the call, and was sworn into the United States service at the head of his regiment early in May. The regiment was almost immediately ordered to Jacksonville, Fla., remaining there and at Savannah, Ga., until early in December, when it was transferred to Havana, Cuba. Here he was soon after appointed Chief of Police for the city of Havana, remaining in office until the middle of January, 1899, when he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Camp Columbia, near the city of Havana. In the latter part of March he returned with his regiment to Augusta, Ga., where it was mustered out, April 26, 1899, one year from the date of its arrival at Springfield. After leaving the service Colonel Moulton resumed his business as a contractor.

SHERMAN, Lawrence Y., legislator and Speaker of the Forty-first General Assembly, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1858; at 3 years of age came to Illinois, his parents settling at Industry, McDonough County. When he had reached the age of 10 years he went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, received his education in the common schools and in the law department of McKendree College, graduating from the latter, and, in 1881, located at Macomb, McDonough County. Here he began his career by driving a team upon the street in order to accumulate means enabling him to devote his entire attention to his chosen profession of law. He soon took an active interest in politics, was elected County Judge in 1886, and, at the expiration of his term, formed a partnership with George D. Tunncliffe and D. G. Tunncliffe, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court. In 1894 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly, but withdrew to prevent a split in the party; was nominated and elected in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and, at the succeeding session of the Forty-first General Assembly, was nominated by the Republican caucus and elected Speaker, as he was again of the Forty-second in 1901.

VINYARD, Philip, early legislator, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, came to Illinois at an early day, and settled in Pope County, which he represented in the lower branch of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth General Assemblies. He married Miss Matilda McCoy, the daughter of a prominent Illinois pioneer, and served as Sheriff of Pope County for a number of years. Died, at Golconda, in 1862.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

BLACK HAWK WAR, THE. The episode known in history under the name of "The Black Hawk War," was the most formidable conflict between the whites and Indians, as well as the most far-reaching in its results, that ever occurred upon the soil of Illinois. It takes its name from the Indian Chief, of the Sac tribe, Black Hawk (Indian name, Makatai Meshekia-kiak, meaning "Black Sparrow Hawk"), who was the leader of the hostile Indian band and a principal factor in the struggle. Black Hawk had been an ally of the British during the War of 1812-15, served with Tecumseh when the latter fell at the battle of the Thames in 1813, and, after the war, continued to maintain friendly relations with his "British father." The outbreak in Illinois had its origin in the construction put upon the treaty negotiated by Gen. William Henry Harrison with the Sac and Fox Indians on behalf of the United States Government, November 3, 1804, under which the Indians transferred to the Government nearly 15,000,000 acres of land comprising the region lying between the Wisconsin River on the north, Fox River of Illinois on the east and southeast, and the Mississippi on the west, for which the Government agreed to pay to the confederated tribes less than $2,500 in goods and the insignificant sum of $1,000 per annum in perpetuity. While the validity of the treaty was denied on the part of the Indians on the ground that it had originally been entered into by their chiefs under duress, while held as prisoners under a charge of murder at Jefferson Barracks, during which they had been kept in a state of constant intoxication, it had been repeatedly reaffirmed by parts or all of the tribe, especially in 1815, in 1816, in 1822 and in 1823, and finally recognized by Black Hawk himself in 1831. The part of the treaty of 1804 which was the immediate cause of the disagreement was that which stipulated that, so long as the lands ceded under it remained the property of the United States (that is, should not be transferred to private owners), "the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." Although these lands had not been put upon the market, or even surveyed, as "squatters" multiplied in this region little respect was paid to the treaty rights of the Indians, particularly with reference to those localities where, by reason of fertility of the soil or some other natural advantage, the Indians had established something like permanent homes and introduced a sort of crude cultivation. This was especially the case with reference to the Sac village of "Saukenuk" on the north bank of Rock River near its mouth, where the Indians, when not absent on the chase, had lived for over a century, had cultivated fields of corn and vegetables and had buried their dead. In the early part of the last century, it is estimated that some five hundred families had been accustomed to congregate here, making it the largest Indian village in the West. As early as 1823 the encroachments of squatters on the rights claimed by the Indians under the treaty of 1804 began; their fields were taken possession of by the intruders, their lodges burned and their women and children whipped and driven away during the absence of the men on their annual hunts. The dangers resulting from these conflicts led Governor Edwards, as early as 1828, to demand of the General Government the expulsion of the Indians from Illinois, which resulted in an order from President Jackson in 1829 for their removal west of the Mississippi. On application of Col. George Davenport, a trader of much influence with the Indians, the time was extended to April 1, 1830. During the preceding year Colonel Davenport and the firm of Davenport and Farnham bought from the United States Government most of the lands on Rock River occupied by Black Hawk's band, with the intention, as has been claimed, of permitting the Indians to remain. This was not so understood by Black Hawk, who was greatly incensed, although Davenport offered to take other lands from the Government in exchange or cancel the sale—an arrangement to which President Jackson would not consent. On their return in the spring of 1830, the Indians found whites in possession of their village. Prevented from cultivating their fields, and their annual hunt proving unsuccessful, the following winter proved for them one of great hardship. Black Hawk, having made a visit to his "British father" (the British Agent) at Malden, Canada, claimed to have received words of sympathy and encouragement, which induced him to determine to regain possession of their fields. In this he was encouraged by Neapope, his second in command, and by assurance of support from White Cloud, a half Sac and half Winnebago—known also as "The Prophet"—whose village (Prophet's Town) was some forty miles from the mouth of Rock River, and through whom Black Hawk claimed to have received promises of aid in guns, ammunition and provisions from the British. The reappearance of Black Hawk's band in the vicinity of his old haunts, in the spring of 1831, produced a wild panic among the frontier settlers. Messages were hurried to Governor Reynolds, who had succeeded Governor Edwards in December previous, appealing for protection against the savages. The Governor issued a call for 700 volunteers "to remove the band of Sac Indians" at Rock Island beyond the Mississippi. Although Gen. E. P. Gaines of the regular army, commanding the military district, thought the regulars sufficiently strong to cope with the situation, the Governor's proclamation was responded to by more than twice the number called for. The volunteers assembled early in June, 1831, at Beardstown, the place of rendezvous named in the call, and having been organized into two regiments under command of Col. James D. Henry and Col. Daniel Lieb, with a spy battalion under Gen. Joseph Duncan, marched across the country and, after effecting a junction with General Gaines' regulars, appeared before Black Hawk's village on the 25th of June. In the meantime General Gaines, having learned that the Pottawatomes, Winnebagos and Kickapoos had promised to join the Sacs in their uprising, asked the assistance of the battalion of mounted men previously offered by Governor Reynolds. The combined armies amounted to 2,500 men, while the fighting force of the Indians was 300. Finding himself overwhelmingly outnumbered, Black Hawk withdrew under cover of night to the west side of the Mississippi. After burning the village, General Gaines notified Black Hawk of his intention to pursue and attack his band, which had the effect to bring the fugitive chief to the General's headquarters, where, on June 30, a new treaty was entered into by which he bound himself and his people to remain west of the Mississippi unless permitted to return by the United States. This ended the campaign, and the volunteers returned to their homes, although the affair had produced an intense excitement along the whole frontier, and involved a heavy expense.

The next winter was spent by Black Hawk and his band on the site of old Fort Madison, in the present State of Iowa. Dissatisfied and humiliated by his repulse of the previous year, in disregard of his pledge to General Gaines, on April 6, 1832, at the head of 500 warriors and their families, he again crossed the Mississippi at Yellow Banks about the site of the present city of Oquawka, fifty miles below Rock Island, with the intention, as claimed, if not permitted to stop at his old village, to proceed to the Prophet's Town and raise a crop with the Winnebagoes. Here he was met by The Prophet with renewed assurances of aid from the Winnebagoes, which was still further strengthened by promises from the British Agent received through a visit by Neapope to Malden the previous autumn. An incident of this invasion was the effective warning given to the white settlers by Shabona, a friendly Ottawa chief, which probably had the effect to prevent a widespread massacre. Besides the towns of Galena and Chicago, the settlements in Illinois north of Fort Clark (Peoria) were limited to some thirty families on Bureau Creek with a few cabins at Hennepin, Peru, LaSalle, Ottawa, Indian Creek, Dixon, Kellogg's Grove, Apple Creek, and a few other points. Gen. Henry Atkinson, commanding the regulars at Fort Armstrong (Rock Island), having learned of the arrival of Black Hawk a week after he crossed the Mississippi, at once took steps to notify Governor Reynolds of the situation with a requisition for an adequate force of militia to coöperate with the regulars. Under date of April 16, 1832, the Governor issued his call for "a strong detachment of militia," to meet by April 22, Beardstown again being named as a place of rendezvous. The call resulted in the assembling of a force which was organized into four regiments under command of Cols. John DeWitt, Jacob Fry, John Thomas and Samuel M. Thompson, together with a spy battalion under Maj. James D. Henry, an odd battalion under Maj. Thomas James and a foot battalion under Maj. Thomas Long. To these were subsequently added two independent battalions of mounted men, under command of Majors Isaiah Stillman and David Bailey, which were finally consolidated as the Fifth Regiment under command of Col. James Johnson. The organization of the first four regiments at Beardstown was completed by April 27, and the force under command of Brigadier-General Whiteside (but accompanied by Governor Reynolds, who was allowed pay as Major General by the General Government) began its march to Fort Armstrong, arriving there May 7 and being mustered into the United States service. Among others accompanying the expedition who were then, or afterwards became, noted citizens of the State, were Vital Jarrot, Adjutant-General; Cyrus Edwards, Ordnance Officer; Murray McConnel, Staff Officer, and Abraham Lincoln, Captain of a company of volunteers from Sangamon County in the Fourth Regiment. Col. Zachary Taylor, then commander of a regiment of regulars, arrived at Fort Armstrong about the same time with reinforcements from Fort Leavenworth and Fort Crawford. The total force of militia amounted to 1,935 men, and of regulars about 1,000. An interesting story is told concerning a speech delivered to the volunteers by Colonel Taylor about this time. After reminding them of their duty to obey an order promptly, the future hero of the Mexican War added: "The safety of all depends upon the obedience and courage of all. You are citizen soldiers; some of you may fill high offices, or even be Presidents some day—but not if you refuse to do your duty. Forward, march!" A curious commentary upon this speech is furnished in the fact that, while Taylor himself afterwards became President, at least one of his hearers—a volunteer who probably then had no aspiration to that distinction (Abraham Lincoln)—reached the same position during the most dramatic period in the nation's history.

Two days after the arrival at Fort Armstrong, the advance up Rock River began, the main force of the volunteers proceeding by land under General Whiteside, while General Atkinson, with 400 regular and 300 volunteer foot soldiers, proceeded by boat, carrying with him the artillery, provisions and bulk of the baggage. Whiteside, advancing by the east bank of the river, was the first to arrive at the Prophet's Town, which, finding deserted, he pushed on to Dixon's Ferry (now Dixon), where he arrived May 12. Here he found the independent battalions of Stillman and Bailey with ammunition and supplies of which Whiteside stood in need. The mounted battalions under command of Major Stillman, having been sent forward by Whiteside as a scouting party, left Dixon on the 13th and, on the afternoon of the next day, went into camp in a strong position near the mouth of Sycamore Creek. As soon discovered, Black Hawk was in camp at the same time, as he afterwards claimed, with about forty of his braves, on Sycamore Creek, three miles distant, while the greater part of his band were encamped with the more war-like faction of the Pottawatomes some seven miles farther north on the Kishwaukee River. As claimed by Black Hawk in his autobiography, having been disappointed in his expectation of forming an alliance with the Winnebagoes and the Pottawatomes, he had at this juncture determined to return to the west side of the Mississippi. Hearing of the arrival of Stillman's command in the vicinity, and taking it for granted that this was the whole of Atkinson's command, he sent out three of his young men with a white flag, to arrange a parley and convey to Atkinson his offer to meet the latter in council. These were captured by some of Stillman's band regardless of their flag of truce, while a party of five other braves who followed to observe the treatment received by the flagbearers, were attacked and two of their number killed, the other three escaping to their camp. Black Hawk learning the fate of his truce party was aroused to the fiercest indignation. Tearing the flag to pieces with which he had intended to go into council with the whites, and appealing to his followers to avenge the murder of their comrades, he prepared for the attack. The rangers numbered 275 men, while Black Hawk's band has been estimated at less than forty. As the rangers caught sight of the Indians, they rushed forward in pell-mell fashion. Retiring behind a fringe of bushes, the Indians awaited the attack. As the rangers approached, Black Hawk and his party rose up with a war whoop, at the same time opening fire on their assailants. The further history of the affair was as much of a disgrace to Stillman's command as had been their desecration of the flag of truce. Thrown into panic by their reception by Black Hawk's little band, the rangers turned and, without firing a shot, began the retreat, dashing through their own camp and abandoning everything, which fell into the hands of the Indians. An attempt was made by one or two officers and a few of their men to check the retreat, but without success, the bulk of the fugitives continuing their mad rush for safety through the night until they reached Dixon, twenty-five miles distant, while many never stopped until they reached their homes, forty or fifty miles distant. The casualties to the rangers amounted to eleven killed and two.

wounded, while the Indian loss consisted of two spies and one of the flag-bearers, treacherously killed near Stillman's camp. This ill-starred affair, which has passed into history as "Stillman's defeat," produced a general panic along the frontier by inducing an exaggerated estimate of the strength of the Indian force, while it led Black Hawk to form a poor opinion of the courage of the white troops at the same time that it led to an exalted estimate of the prowess of his own little band—thus becoming an important factor in prolonging the war and in the bloody massacres which followed. Whiteside, with his force of 1,400 men, advanced to the scene of the defeat the next day and buried the dead, while on the 19th, Atkinson, with his force of regulars, proceeded up Rock River, leaving the remnant of Stillman's force to guard the wounded and supplies at Dixon. No sooner had he left than the demoralized fugitives of a few days before deserted their post for their homes, compelling Atkinson to return for the protection of his base of supplies, while Whiteside was ordered to follow the trail of Black Hawk who had started up the Kishwaukee for the swamps about Lake Koshkonong, nearly west of Milwaukee within the present State of Wisconsin.

At this point the really active stage of the campaign began. Black Hawk, leaving the women and children of his band in the fastnesses of the swamps, divided his followers into two bands, retaining about 200 under his own command, while the notorious half-breed, Mike Girty, led a band of one hundred renegade Pottawatomes. Returning to the vicinity of Rock Island, he gathered some recruits from the Pottawatomes and Winnebagoes, and the work of rapine and massacre among the frontier settlers began. One of the most notable of these was the Indian Creek Massacre in LaSalle County, about twelve miles north of Ottawa, on May 21, when sixteen persons were killed at the Home of William Davis, and two young girls—Sylvia and Rachel Hall, aged, respectively, 17 and 15 years—were carried away captives. The girls were subsequently released, having been ransomed for $2,000 in horses and trinkets through a Winnebago Chief and surrendered to sub-agent Henry Gratiot. Great as was the emergency at this juncture, the volunteers began to manifest evidence of dissatisfaction and, claiming that they had served out their term of enlistment, refused to follow the Indians into the swamps of Wisconsin. As the result of a council of war, the volunteers were ordered to Ottawa, where they were mustered out on May 28, by Lieut. Robt. Anderson, afterwards General Anderson of Fort Sumter fame. Meanwhile Governor Reynolds had issued his call (with that of 1831 the third,) for 2,000 men to serve during the war. Gen. Winfield Scott was also ordered from the East with 1,000 regulars although, owing to cholera breaking out among the troops, they did not arrive in time to take part in the campaign. The rank and file of volunteers responding under the new call was 3,148, with recruits and regulars then in Illinois making an army of 4,000. Pending the arrival of the troops under the new call, and to meet an immediate emergency, 300 men were enlisted from the disbanded rangers for a period of twenty days, and organized into a regiment under command of Col. Jacob Fry, with James D. Henry as Lieutenant Colonel and John Thomas as Major. Among those who enlisted as privates in this regiment were Brig.-Gen. Whiteside and Capt. Abraham Lincoln. A regiment of five companies, numbering 195 men, from Putnam County under command of Col. John Strawn, and another of eight companies from Vermilion County under Col. Isaac R. Moore, were organized and assigned to guard duty for a period of twenty days.

The new volunteers were rendezvoused at Fort Wilbourn, nearly opposite Peru, June 15, and organized into three brigades, each consisting of three regiments and a spy battalion. The First Brigade (915 strong) was placed under command of Brig.-Gen. Alexander Posey, the Second under Gen. Milton K. Alexander, and the third under Gen. James D. Henry. Others who served as officers in some of these several organizations, and afterwards became prominent in State history, were Lieut.-Col. Gurdon S. Hubbard of the Vermilion County regiment; John A. McClernand, on the staff of General Posey; Maj. John Dement; then State Treasurer; Stinson H. Anderson, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor; Lieut.-Gov. Zadoc Casey; Maj., William McHenry; Sidney Breese (afterwards Judge of the State Supreme Court and United States Senator); W. L. D. Ewing (as Major of a spy battalion, afterwards United States Senator and State Auditor); Alexander W. Jenkins (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor); James W. Semple (afterwards United States Senator); and William Weatherford (afterwards a Colonel in the Mexican War), and many more. Of the Illinois troops, Posey's brigade was assigned to the duty of dispersing the Indians between Galena and Rock River. Alexander's sent to intercept Black Hawk up the Rock River, while Henry's remained with Gen. Atkinson at Dixon. During the next two weeks engagements of a more or less serious character were had on the Pecatonica on the southern border of the present State of Wisconsin; at Apple River Fort fourteen miles east of Galena, which was successfully defended against a force under Black Hawk himself, and at Kellogg's Grove the next day (June 25), when the same band ambushed Maj. Dement's spy battalion, and came near inflicting a defeat, which was prevented by Dement's coolness and the timely arrival of reinforcements. In the latter engagement the whites lost five killed besides 47 horses which had been tethered outside their lines, the loss of the Indians being sixteen killed. Skirmishes also occurred with varying results, at Plum River Fort, Burr Oak Grove, Sinsinawa and Blue Mounds—the last two within the present State of Wisconsin.

Believing the bulk of the Indians to be camped in the vicinity of Lake Koshkonong, General Atkinson left Dixon June 27 with a combined force of regulars and volunteers numbering 2,600 men—the volunteers being under the command of General Henry. They reached the outlet of the Lake July 2, but found no Indians, being joined two days later by General Alexander's brigade, and on the 6th by Gen. Posey's. From here the commands of Generals Henry and Alexander were sent for supplies to Fort Winnebago, at the Portage of the Wisconsin; Colonel Ewing, with the Second Regiment of Posey's brigade descending Rock River to Dixon, Posey with the remainder, going to Fort Hamilton for the protection of settlers in the lead-mining region, while Atkinson, advancing with the regulars up Lake Koshkonong, began the erection of temporary fortifications on Bark River near the site of the present village of Fort Atkinson. At Fort Winnebago Alexander and Henry obtained evidence of the actual location of Black Hawk's camp through Pierre Poquette, a half-breed scout and trader in the employ of the American Fur Company, whom they employed with a number of Winnebagoes to act as guides. From this point Alexander's command returned to General Atkinson's headquarters, carrying with them twelve day's provisions for the main army, while General Henry's (600 strong), with Major Dodge's battalion numbering 150, with an equal quantity of supplies for themselves, started under the guidance of Poquette and his Winnebago aids to find Black Hawk's camp. Arriving on the 18th at the Winnebago village on Rock River where Black Hawk and his band had been located, their camp was found deserted, the Winnebagos insisting that they had gone to Cranberry (now Horicon) Lake, a half-day's march up the river. Messengers were immediately dispatched to Atkinson's headquarters, thirty-five miles distant, to apprise him of this fact. When they had proceeded about half the distance, they struck a broad, fresh trail, which proved to be that of Black Hawk's band headed westward toward the Mississippi. The guide having deserted them in order to warn his tribesmen that further dissembling to deceive the whites as to the whereabouts of the Sacs was useless, the messengers were compelled to follow him to General Henry's camp. The discovery produced the wildest enthusiasm among the volunteers, and from this time events followed in rapid succession. Leaving as far as possible all incumbrances behind, the pursuit of the fugitives was begun without delay, the troops wading through swamps sometimes in water to their armpits. Soon evidence of the character of the flight the Indians were making, in the shape of exhausted horses, blankets, and camp equipage cast aside along the trail, began to appear, and straggling bands of Winnebagos, who had now begun to desert Black Hawk, gave information that the Indians were only a few miles in advance. On the evening of the 20th of July Henry's forces encamped at "The Four Lakes," the present site of the city of Madison, Wis., Black Hawk's force lying in ambush the same night seven or eight miles distant. During the next afternoon the rear-guard of the Indians under Neapope was overtaken and skirmishing continued until the bluffs of the Wisconsin were reached. Black Hawk's avowed object was to protect the passage of the main body of his people across the stream. The loss of the Indians in these skirmishes has been estimated at 40 to 68, while Black Hawk claimed that it was only six killed, the loss of the whites being one killed and eight wounded. During the night Black Hawk succeeded in placing a considerable number of the women and children and old men on a raft and in canoes obtained from the Winnebagos, and sent them down the river, believing that, as non-combatants, they would be permitted by the regulars to pass Fort Crawford, at the mouth of the Wisconsin, undisturbed. In this he was mistaken. A force sent from the fort under Colonel Ritner to intercept them, fired mercilessly upon the helpless fugitives, killing fifteen of their number, while about fifty were drowned and thirty-two women and children made prisoners. The remainder, escaping into the woods, with few exceptions died from starvation and exposure, or were massacred by their enemies, the Menominees, acting under white officers. During the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights, a loud, shrill voice of some one speaking in an unknown tongue was heard in the direction where Black Hawk's band was supposed to be. This caused something of a panic in Henry's camp, as it was supposed to come from some one giving orders for an attack. It was afterwards learned that the speaker was Neapope speaking in the Winnebago language in the hope that he might be heard by Poquette and the Winnebago guides. He was describing the helpless condition of his people, claiming that the war had been forced upon them, that their women and children were starving, and that, if permitted peacefully to recross the Mississippi, they would give no further trouble. Unfortunately Poquette and the other guides had left for Fort Winnebago, so that no one was there to translate Neapope's appeal and it failed of its object.

General Henry's force having discovered that the Indians had escaped—Black Hawk heading with the bulk of his warriors towards the Mississippi—spent the next and day night on the field, but on the following day (July 23) started to meet General Atkinson, who had, in the meantime, been notified of the pursuit. The head of their columns met at Blue Mounds, the same evening, a complete junction between the regulars and the volunteers being effected at Helena, a deserted village on the Wisconsin. Here by using the logs of the deserted cabins for rafts, the army crossed the river on the 27th and the 28th and the pursuit of black Hawk's fugitive band was renewed. Evidence of their famishing condition was found in the trees stripped of bark for food, the carcasses of dead ponies, with here and there the dead body of an Indian.

On August 1, Black Hawk's depleted and famishing band reached the Mississippi two miles below the mouth of the Bad Ax, an insignificant stream, and immediately began trying to cross the river; but having only two or three canoes, the work was slow. About the middle of the afternoon the steam transport, "Warrior," appeared on the scene, having on board a score of regulars and volunteers, returning from a visit to the village of the Sioux Chief, Wabasha, to notify him that his old enemies, the Sacs, were headed in that direction. Black Hawk raised the white flag in token of surrender, but the officer in command claiming that he feared treachery or an ambush, demanded that Black Hawk should come on board. This he was unable to do, as he had no canoe. After waiting a few minutes a murderous fire of canister and musketry was opened from the steamer on the few Indians on shore, who made such feeble resistance as they were able. The result was the killing of one white man and twenty-three Indians. After this exploit the "Warrior" proceeded to Prairie du Chien, twelve or fifteen miles distant, for fuel. During the night a few more of the Indians crossed the river, but Black Hawk, seeing the hopelessness of further resistance, accompanied by the Prophet, and taking with him a party of ten warriors and thirty-five squaws and children, fled in the direction of "the dells" of the Wisconsin. On the morning of the 2d General Atkinson arrived within four or five miles of the Sac position. Disposing his forces with the regulars and Colonel Dodge's rangers in the center, the brigades of Posey and Alexander on the right and Henry's on the left, he began the pursuit, but was drawn by the Indian decoys up the river from the place where the main body of the Indians were trying to cross the stream. This had the effect of leaving General Henry in the rear practically without orders, but it became the means of making his command the prime factors in the climax which followed. Some of the spies attached to Henry's command having accidentally discovered the trail of the main body of the fugitives, he began the pursuit without waiting for orders and soon found himself engaged with some 300 savages, a force nearly equal to his own. It was here that the only thing like a regular battle occurred. The savages fought with the fury of despair, while Henry's force was no doubt nerved to greater deeds of courage by the insult which they conceived had been put upon them by General Atkinson. Atkinson, hearing the battle in progress and discovering that he was being led off on a false scent, soon joined Henry's force with his main army, and the steamer "Warrior," arriving from Prairie du Chien, opened a fire of canister upon the pent-up Indians. The battle soon degenerated into a massacre. In the course of the three hours through which it lasted, it is estimated that 150 Indians were killed by fire from the troops, an equal number of both sexes and all ages drowned while attempting to cross the river or by being driven into it, while about 50 (chiefly women and children) were made prisoners. The loss of the whites was 20 killed and 13 wounded. When the "battle" was nearing its close it is said that Black Hawk, having repented the abandonment of his people, returned within sight of the battle-ground, but seeing the slaughter in progress which he was powerless to avert, he turned and, with a howl of rage and horror, fled into the forest. About 300 Indians (mostly non-combatants) succeeded in crossing the river in a condition of exhaustion from hunger and fatigue, but these were set upon by the Sioux under Chief Wabasha, through the suggestion and agency of General Atkinson, and nearly one-half their number exterminated. Of the remainder many died from wounds and exhaustion, while still others perished while attempting to reach Keokuk's band who had refused to join in Black Hawk's desperate venture. Of one thousand who crossed to the east side of the river with Black Hawk in April, it is estimated that not more than 150 survived the tragic events of the next four months.

General Scott, having arrived at Prairie du Chien early in August, assumed command and, on August 15, mustered out the volunteers at Dixon, Ill. After witnessing the bloody climax at the Bad Axe of his ill-starred invasion, Black Hawk fled to the dells of the Wisconsin, where he and the Prophet surrendered themselves to the Winnebagoes, by whom they were delivered to the Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. Having been taken to Fort Armstrong on September 21, he there signed a treaty of peace. Later he was taken to Jefferson Barracks (near St. Louis) in the custody of Jefferson Davis, then a Lieutenant in the regular army, where he was held a captive during the following winter. The connection of Davis with the Black Hawk War, mentioned by many historians, seems to have been confined to this act. In April, 1833, with the Prophet and Neapope, he was taken to Washington and then to Fortress Monroe, where they were detained as prisoners of war until June 4, when they were released. Black Hawk, after being taken to many principal cities in order to impress him with the strength of the American nation, was brought to Fort Armstrong, and there committed to the guardianship of his rival, Keokuk, but survived this humiliation only a few years, dying on a small reservation set apart for him in Davis County, Iowa, October 3, 1838.

Such is the story of the Black Hawk War, the most notable struggle with the aborigines in Illinois history. At its beginning both the State and national authorities were grossly misled by an exaggerated estimate of the strength of Black Hawk's force as to numbers and his plans for recovering the site of his old village, while

Black Hawk had conceived a low estimate of the numbers and courage of his white enemies, especially after the Stillman defeat. The cost of the war to the State and nation in money has been estimated at $2,000,000, and in sacrifice of life on both sides at not less than 1,200. The loss of life by the troops in irregular skirmishes, and in massacres of settlers by the Indians, aggregated about 250, while an equal number of regulars perished from a visitation of cholera at the various stations within the district affected by the war, especially at Detroit, Chicago, Fort Armstrong and Galena. Yet it is the judgment of later historians that nearly all this sacrifice of life and treasure might have been avoided, but for a series of blunders due to the blind or unscrupulous policy of officials or interloping squatters upon lands which the Indians had occupied under the treaty of 1804. A conspicuous blunder—to call it by no harsher name—was the violation by Stillman's command of the rules of civilized warfare in the attack made upon Black Hawk's messengers, sent under flag of truce to request a conference to settle terms under which he might return to the west side of the Mississippi—an act which resulted in a humiliating and disgraceful defeat for its authors and proved the first step in actual war. Another misfortune was the failure to understand Neapope's appeal for peace and permission for his people to pass beyond the Mississippi the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights; and the third and most inexcusable blunder of all, was the refusal of the officer in command of the "Warrior" to respect Black Hawk's flag of truce and request for a conference just before the bloody massacre which has gone into history under the name of the "battle of the Bad Axe." Either of these events, properly availed of, would have prevented much of the butchery of that bloody episode which has left a stain upon the page of history, although this statement implies no disposition to detract from the patriotism and courage of some of the leading actors upon whom the responsibility was placed of protecting the frontier settler from outrage and massacre. One of the features of the war was the bitter jealousy engendered by the unwise policy pursued by General Atkinson towards some of the volunteers—especially the treatment of General James D. Henry, who, although subjected to repeated slights and insults, is regarded by Governor Ford and others as the real hero of the war. Too brave a soldier to shirk any responsibility and too modest to exploit his own deeds, he felt deeply the studied purpose of his superior to ignore him in the conduct of the campaign—a purpose which, as in the affair at the Bad Axe, was defeated by accident or by General Henry's soldierly sagacity and attention to duty, although he gave out to the public no utterance of complaint. Broken in health by the hardships and exposures of the campaign, he went South soon after the war and died of consumption, unknown and almost alone, in the city of New Orleans, less than two years later.

Aside from contemporaneous newspaper accounts, monographs, and manuscripts on file in public libraries relating to this epoch in State history, the most comprehensive records of the Black Hawk War are to be found in the "Life of Black Hawk," dictated by himself (1834); Wakefield's "History of the War between the United States and the Sac and Fox Nations" (1834); Drake's "Life of Black Hawk" (1854); Ford's "History of Illinois" (1854); Reynolds' "Pioneer History of Illinois"; and "My Own Times"; Davidson & Stuve's and Moses' Histories of Illinois; Blanchard's "The Northwest and Chicago"; Armstrong's "The Sauks and the Black Hawk War," and Reuben G. Thwaite's "Story of the Black Hawk War" (1892.)

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, a village in the southern part of Cook County, twenty-eight miles south of the central part of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Michigan Central Railroads; is located in an agricultural region, but has some manufactures as well as good schools—also has one newspaper. Population (1900), 5,100.

GRANITE, a city of Madison County, located five miles north of St. Louis on the lines of the Burlington; the Chicago & Alton; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis (Illinois), and the Wabash Railways. It is adjacent to the Merchants' Terminal Bridge across the Mississippi and has considerable manufacturing and grain-storage business; has two newspapers. Population (1900), 3,122.

HARLEM, a village of Proviso Township, Cook County, and suburb of Chicago, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, nine miles west of the terminal station at Chicago. Harlem originally embraced the village of Oak Park, now a part of the city of Chicago, but, in 1884, was set off and incorporated as a village. Considerable manufacturing is done here. Population (1900), 4,085.

HARVEY, a city of Cook County, and an important manufacturing suburb of the city of Chicago, three miles southwest of the southern city limits. It is on the line of the Illinois Central and the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways, and has extensive manufactures of harvesting, street and steam railway machinery, gasoline stoves, enameled ware, etc.; also has one newspaper and ample school facilities. Population (1900), 5,395.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY, a railway line having its principal termini at Peoria, Ill., and Manly Junction, nine miles north of Mason City, Iowa, with several lateral branches making connections with Centerville, Newton, State Center, Story City, Algona and Northwood in the latter State. The total length of line owned, leased and operated by the Company, officially reported in 1899, was 508.98 miles, of which 89.76 miles—including 3.5 miles trackage facilities on the Peoria & Pekin Union between Iowa Junction and Peoria—were in Illinois. The Illinois division extends from Keithsburg—where it enters the State at the crossing of the Mississippi—to Peoria.—(HISTORY.) The Iowa Central Railway Company was originally chartered as the Central Railroad Company of Iowa and the road completed in October, 1871. In 1873 it passed into the hands of a receiver and, on June 4, 1879, was reorganized under the name of the Central Iowa Railway Company. In May, 1883, this company purchased the Peoria & Farmington Railroad, which was incorporated into the main line, but defaulted and passed into the hands of a receiver December 1, 1886; the line was sold under foreclosure in 1887 and 1888, to the Iowa Central Railway Company, which had effected a new organization on the basis of $11,000,000 common stock, $6,000,000 preferred stock and $1,379,625 temporary debt certificates convertible into preferred stock, and $7,500,000 first mortgage bonds. The transaction was completed, the receiver discharged and the road turned over to the new company, May 15, 1889.—(FINANCIAL.) The total capitalization of the road in 1899 was $21,337,558, of which $14,159,180 was in stock, $6,650,095 in bonds and $528,283 in other forms of indebtedness. The total earnings and income of the line in Illinois for the same year were $532,568, and the expenditures $566,333.

SPARTA, a city of Randolph County, situated on the Centralia & Chester and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads, twenty miles northwest of Chester and fifty miles southeast of St. Louis. It has a number of manufacturing establishments, including plow factories, a woolen mill, a cannery and creameries; also has natural gas. The first settler was James McClurken, from South Carolina, who settled here in 1818. He was joined by James Armour a few years later, who bought land of McClurken, and together they laid out a village, which first received the name of Columbus. About the same time Robert G. Shannon, who had been conducting a mercantile business in the vicinity, located in the town and became the first Postmaster. In 1839 the name of the town was changed to Sparta. Mr. McClurken, its earliest settler, appears to have been a man of considerable enterprise, as he is credited with having built the first cotton gin in this vicinity, besides still later, erecting saw and flour mills and a woolen mill. Sparta was incorporated as a village in 1837 and in 1859 as a city. A colony of members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanters or "Seceders") established at Eden, a beautiful site about a mile from Sparta, about 1822, cut an important figure in the history of the latter place, as it became the means of attracting here an industrious and thriving population. At a later period it became one of the most important stations of the "Underground Railroad" (so called) in Illinois (which see). The population of Sparta (1890) was 1,979; (1900), 2,041.

TOLUCA, a city of Marshall County situated on the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, 18 miles southwest of Streator. It is in the center of a rich agricultural district; has the usual church and educational facilities of cities of its rank, and two newspapers. Population (1900), 2,629.

WEST HAMMOND, a village situated in the northeast corner of Thornton Township, Cook County, adjacent to Hammond, Ind., from which it is separated by the Indiana State line. It is on the Michigan Central Railroad, one mile south of the Chicago City limits, and has convenient access to several other lines, including the Chicago & Erie; New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Western Indiana Railroads. Like its Indiana neighbor, it is a manufacturing center of much importance, was incorporated as a village in 1892, and has grown rapidly within the last few years, having a population, according to the census of 1900, of 2,935.

FOREWORD.—In keeping with the general aim and purpose of the foregoing "Historical Encyclopedia of Illinois," the matter embraced in the following pages, constituting a part of the Special Lee County Edition, does not profess to be a narrative history, but rather a bringing-together in as concise form as practicable, of matters of historic interest without elaboration or embellishment. Much labor has been bestowed on verification of statements, names and dates. To this end old settlers and official records have been consulted as far as possible, and the manuscript of most of the towns has been submitted to persons well posted in the early history of the particular locality. In the case of the towns of Reynolds, Viola, East Grove, South Dixon, May and Marion, the information has been obtained largely from histories heretofore published; but in the case of the remaining sixteen towns, facts have been procured from various other sources as well, with a constant eye to accuracy of statement and avoidance of mistakes. By the exercise of such precautions, many misstatements found in other publications have been omitted and considerable new matter incorporated. While errors are well nigh unavoidable in a work of this character, where so many names and dates are involved and where the sources of information are necessarily more or less fallible, it is hoped that we have succeeded in reducing such shortcomings to the minimum.

The reader is to understand that, when present conditions are mentioned or the present tense used, September 1, 1903, is the date referred to, unless otherwise indicated.

All the northern part of Illinois was ceded to the United States by the United Nations of Chippewa, Ottawa and Pottawatomie Indians, by treaty made at Prairie du Chien, July 28, 1829. The language of the cession is: "All lands comprehended within the following limits, to-wit: Beginning at the Winnebago Village on Rock River forty miles from the mouth, and running thence down the Rock River to a line which runs due west from the most southern bend of Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River, and with that line to the Mississippi opposite to Rock Island; thence up that river to the United States reservation at the Mouth of Ouisconsin (Wisconsin); thence with the south and east lines of said reservation to the Ouisconsin River; thence southerly passing the heads of the small streams emptying into the Mississippi to the Rock River aforesaid at the Winnebago Village, the place of beginning. And also one other tract of land described as follows, to-wit: Beginning on the west shore of Lake Michigan at the northeast corner of the field of Antoine Ouilmette, who lives near Gross Point, about twelve miles north of Chicago, thence running due west to the Rock River aforesaid; thence down the said river to where a line drawn due west from the most southern bend of Lake Michigan crosses said river; thence east along said line to the Fox River of the Illinois; thence along the northwestern boundary line of the cession of 1816 to Lake Michigan; thence northwardly along the western shore of said lake to place of beginning."

Certain reservations were made, and among them this: "To Madeline, a Pottawatomie woman, wife of Joseph Ogee, one Section west of and adjoining the tract herein granted to Pierre Leclair at the PawPaw Grove." Two sections were also reserved for Shab-eh-nay at his village near PawPaw Grove.

In consideration of this extensive grant the United States agreed to pay said Nations, at Chicago, $16,000 in specie, annually forever, and to cause to be delivered to them the next October $12,000 worth of goods as a present, and also to deliver fifty barrels of salt annually to them at Chicago, "and to make permanent for the use of the said Indians the blacksmith's establishment at Chicago."

This instrument is signed by the Government Commissioners and by thirty-five chiefs and warriors; and among the witnesses are Zachary Taylor, subsequently President of the United States.

County and Township Organization.—In December, 1836, the original county of Ogle was formed, embracing the present county of Lee, Ogle having theretofore belonged to Jo Daviess County. At a closely contested election less than 200 votes were polled in the county, a residence of six months being at that time sufficient.

February 27, 1839, an act passed the General Assembly creating the County of Lee. Commissioners from neighboring parts of the State formally located the county-seat where the Court House now stands, May 31, 1839.

From the organization of the county until the adoption of the township organization system in 1850, all the county and township business was transacted by three County Commissioners, under the style of the Commissioners' Court. (See County Officers.) For convenience of voting, the county was divided into election precincts by the Commissioners who appointed the judges of election. They appointed an assessor and collector for the whole county.

The County Commissioners held their first session September 13, 1839. At a meeting four days later, their only business, besides allowing bills, was to grant a license to Howe & Sons "to exhibit a circus." Thus early was the matter of amusements looked after by the governing body. March 4, 1840, they divided the county into sixteen road districts, and appointed a supervisor for each. On the 30th of same month they established the following election precincts: Gap Grove, Dixon, Franklin, Malugin, Inlet and Winnebago.

July 19, 1850, Joseph Crawford, Harvey Morgan and Lorenzo D. Wasson, commissioners appointed by the County Court, reported that, in pursuance of act of the Legislature of February 12, 1849, relating to township organization, they had divided the county into townships as follows: PawPaw, Towns 37, 38 and 39 North, Range 2 E. of Third Principal Meridian; Brooklyn, Towns 37, 38 and 39 N., R. 1 E.; Hanno, T. 19 N., R. 11 E. Fourth P. M.; Lee Center, T. 20 N., R. 11 E.; Bradford, T. 21 N., R. 11 E. and south half of T. 22 N., R. 11 E.; Hamilton, Towns 19 N., Ranges 8, 9 and 10 E. and T. 20 N., R. 8 E. and south half of T. 20 N., R. 9 E.; Amboy, T. 20 N., R. 10 E. and north half of T. 20 N., R. 9 E.; Fremont, T. 21 N., R. 10 E. and south part of T. 22 N., R. 10 E. in Lee County; Dixon, T. 21 N., R. 9 E. and that part of T. 22 N., R. 9 E. in Lee County, and that part of T. 21 N., R. 8 E. lying south of river; Palmyra, that part of T. 22 N., R. 8 E. in Lee County and that part of T. 21 N., R. 8 E., lying north of river.

It is a little singular that, on the 14th day of May, 1850, before the above report was made, the Board of Supervisors met in its first session: Present, Daniel Baird, David Searies, C. R. Dewey, Charles Starks, Henry A. Coe and G. R. Linn. Linn was chairman. What towns were thus represented, or by what authority they convened, does not appear. At this meeting "the town formerly called Fremont" was changed to China, and "the town formerly called PawPaw" was changed to Wyoming.

In 1850 the assessed value of real estate in the county was $215,360 and of personal property $168,341. The average monthly wages to farm hands was $12; the average pay to day laborers was 63 cents per day, with board, and 75 cents per day without board; carpenters, $1.50 per day; female domestics, $1.25 per week; board for laborers, $1.50 per week.

In 1850 an academy was in operation at Lee Center with two teachers and 40 pupils, and there were 46 teachers and 1,518 pupils in the public schools. In this year the capital invested in the manufacture of harvesters, plows, lime, lumber, flour and other products was $24,300, and the output was valued at $5,000 per annum.

The population of the entire county in 1840 was 2,035. In 1845 it had increased to 3,282; in 1850, to 5,289; in 1870, to 27,138; in 1880, to 30,186; in 1890 it dropped to 26,187; in 1900 it rose to 29,894.

It may be worth while to observe that the total amount of taxes to be collected by townships in the County, in 1852, was as follows: Amboy, $740.35; Harmon, $702.14; Bradford, $223.66; Wyoming, $805.62; Hamilton, $448.88; Palmyra, $1,135.53; Brooklyn, $368.42; Lee Center, $463.55; Dixon, $8,738.65.

To F. R. Dutcher, who located in Dixon in 1838 and two years later at Rocky Ford, and who became prominently identified with Amboy, belongs the honor of having given the county its name. This seems to be conceded; no one questions his right. It is supposed to have been named for Richard Henry Lee, the "Light Horse Harry" of Revolutionary fame.

The Kellogg Trail from Peoria to Galena, which was the first defined line of travel between the two points, was run by O. W. Kellogg, who settled at Buffalo Grove (now Polo), and was a brother-in-law to John Dixon, in 1827. Mrs. E. B. Baker, still living in Dixon, was his daughter. This trail is frequently referred to in the histories of the northern part of the State, particularly in connection with the Black Hawk war. It entered the territory of Lee County after passing "Dad Joe's Grove," and crossed Green River on the west line of northwest quarter of Section 35, in the Town of Marion, early owned by David Welty and now the property of his son Charles. Here was constructed the only bridge in those days over the river. The trail was the stage route from Peoria to Galena. A turnpike was built about a mile long which could be traveled only on paying toll. (See Marion.) At the north end of the pike, Mr. Welty built a large log house, forty-two feet long, which for years served as a tavern for the wayfarers. It was also a stage station and appears on early maps of the county as Scottville.

Levels taken at the time of the original survey of the Illinois Central Railroad, indicate that Sublette is 178 feet higher than Amboy, while Eldena is 60 feet higher, and Dixon 54 feet lower than that city.

The first telephone line to enter the county was that of the Central Union Telephone Company, which was granted a franchise by the City of Dixon, July 6, 1881.

The Lee County Telephone Company was incorporated April 16, 1897, with J. H. Thompson, I. B. Countryman, C. F. Emerson and W. C. Dysart as its first Board of Directors. Its present officers are L. D. Pitcher, President and General Manager; Louis A. Pitcher, Superintendent and Secretary; J. C. Ayres, Treasurer.

A bridge was built across Rock River at Grand Detour and completed for travel, in the spring or early fall of 1902, at the joint expense of Lee and Ogle counties. Special orders were drawn on the Treasurer of Lee County for $28,870.46, to meet its portion of the cost.

While on the subject of bridges, it is interesting to observe that, in 1843, the Legislature passed an act for the incorporation of a company to build a bridge across the river at Grand Detour to be known as the Rock River Bridge Company. Solon Cumins, George Cushing and Solomon C. Cotton were authorized to open subscription of stock. Again, in 1855, another company was organized by the Legislature, under the name of the Grand Detour Bridge Company; Leonard Andrews (Andrus), J. W. D. Cushing and Solon Cumins were the commissioners to receive subscriptions of stock. It does not appear that anything practical was accomplished under either act.

Courts and Court Houses.—In September, 1837, the first Court in Ogle County was held at Dixon, what is now Lee County being then included in Ogle. Judge Dan Stone, of Galena, presided, and appointed Thomas Ford, afterwards Governor of the State, Prosecuting Attorney. Later Ford became Judge of the same court. The session was held in a building formerly used as a blacksmith shop, which had been rendered reasonably suitable by laying floor, plastering and other repairs.

In 1840 the first Court House was built in Court House Square, at a cost of $7,000, which was paid by donations. Father Dixon gave the block or "square," and it is commonly understood that he also gave eighty acres of land. He conveyed the block to the county by deed, dated March 7, 1840, and recorded in the Recorder's Office, in Book "A" of Deeds, p. 10. The first jail was built the same year and was located on the southeast corner of Second Street and Ottawa Avenue, where the residence of Mr. W. J. McAlpine now stands, No. 204 Ottawa Avenue.

The Court House was a square two-story brick building, and in the fall of 1867 its length southward was nearly doubled, and a porch with imposing columns added to the front at a cost of $7,000. In 1871 a fire-proof one-story brick addition was built as a vault and paid for by the town of Dixon, with the aid of small appropriations from the towns of Nelson and Palmyra, on the east side, costing $3,000. Prior to this, and probably about 1860, a one-story brick office-building was built in the northwest corner of the block. On the completion of the vault, this was torn down and the records taken to the Court House.

The first term of the Circuit Court of the new County of Lee was held on the third Monday of April, 1840, Judge Dan Stone presiding; Aaron Waklee, Sheriff; Shelton L. Hall, Circuit Attorney; George W. Chase, Clerk. (See Law Records A. p. 1.)

In 1872 the county jail and Sheriff's residence, now in use, was built at a cost of about $25,000.

The present fine Court House is an ornament to the city, which is so fortunate as to possess it, and a credit to the county which was so progressive as to erect it. The Board of Supervisors to whom the honor must be accorded was composed of E. W. Smith, Chairman; W. W. Gilmore, Hugh McGuirk, M. A. Crawford, Thomas M. Phillips, M. A. Girton and Geo. W. Smith; Jas. Kirby, A. J. Tompkins, J. M. Trostle, Wm. S. Frost, E. C. Parsons, N. A. Cortright, Wm. Anderson, John W. Wadsworth, John M. Gardner, Hugh Fitzpatrick, Henry Shippert, W. W. Hardin, M. Sullivan, Geo. J. Barth, E. C. Lamb, F. L. Childs and F. E. Rogers—the first seven constituting the Building Committee with Supervisor Smith as chairman, he being also chairman of the Board. R. S. Farrand, then County Judge, and other county officers rendered valuable service by their cooperation. W. J. McAlpine was the contractor and Charles E. Bush the architect. The actual cost of the improvement, as shown by the records, is itemized thus: Building alone, $103,394.94; wooden furniture, $8,818.70; metal furnishings, $4,816; street wall, cement walks, grading, etc., $7,174.14—Total, $124,203.78. To meet the cost $90,000 of county bonds were issued, falling due in installments of $1,000 each in annual payments, commencing in 1905. The balance was raised by direct tax.

The old Court House was vacated in March, 1900. The September term of the Circuit Court of 1901 was held in the new building and the county officers were on duty in their new quarters. In the interim, while the building was being constructed, the Schuler building, 401-403 First Street, housed the various offices and served as a Court House.

At the convening of the September term simple appropriate exercises were had in observance of the occasion. Judges Crabtree, Shaw and Baume, the three Judges of the Circuit, were on the bench, Judge Crabtree presiding. The new court room was crowded with spectators. Suitable remarks were made by members of the bar and others, to which the Judges in turn responded.

The new building covers the ground occupied by the old. The cornerstone was laid by the Grand Lodge of A. F. & A. M. of Illinois, July 17, 1900, and the event was otherwise honored by a fitting program, Judge Kohlsaat, of the United States District Court at Chicago, delivering the address.

County-seat Contests.—At the September term, 1896, a petition was filed with the County Clerk, praying that an election be ordered by the County Court to be held November 10th, on the question of removal of the County-seat from Dixon to Amboy. The election was ordered and the total number of votes cast on the subject were 6,725, of which 4,115 were against removal. The fight was vigorous on both sides. Among the inducements offered by the Amboy party was the adoption of a resolution by the City Council to appropriate $15,000 for the purchase of a Court-house site, and a subscription list filed in the County Clerk's office, payable to the Board of Supervisors, for $50,000 for the erection of county buildings in Amboy.

The location of the county-seat had been a bone of contention from an early date, and only by the election above referred to was it finally settled. That was the only time when it was submitted to vote of the people; but a fight which may be called stalwart, if not bitter, was waged by Amboy in 1860, and another less determined, eight or nine years later. In those years it was only by special act of the Legislature that the county-seat could be moved, and hence the wars were waged in the halls of legislation at Springfield. In 1860 Lee and White-side Counties were in one Legislative District, and the Amboy party, by combining with White-side, secured an enormous advantage in the election of Dr. George Ryan, of PawPaw (afterwards of Amboy), as Representative in the Legislature, and Dr. R. F. Adams of Lee Center as Senator. The Dixon party set up Judge Heaton against Adams, but the latter was elected. Ryan and Adams, together with their home supporters, made themselves busy by the means prevalent in legislative bodies, in obtaining pledges and clinching them. Indeed, everything was culminating to their entire satisfaction and every sign was auspicious, when a force undreamed of appeared on the scene. It was the venerable, much beloved Father Dixon. His mildness of manner, his flowing white locks and winning face, accomplished their undoing as nothing else could have done. He met each member, many of whom already knew him personally or by reputation; was invited to sit by the Speaker during the deliberations of the body; was the guest of honor at banquets, and was the social lion of the hour. Members who had promised to vote for the removal bill began to weaken as the time for action approached, saying they had not the heart to take the county-seat away from the town the genial old man had founded and which bore his honored name; and with this leaven working against it, together with the shrewdness of James L. Camp, B. F. Shaw, J. C. Ayres and others, the bill was defeated. The attentions paid Father Dixon, however, had prostrated him. The change from his simple habits of life were too severe for his system. A special car on the Illinois Central was provided, and the old gentleman was carried to it on a stretcher and hurried home.

Thus ended Amboy's first attempt to remove the coveted seat of government from Dixon.

The next campaign was in 1869 or 1870 when Alonzo Kinyon of Amboy was in the Lower House of the Legislature. This belated effort, however, lacked the confidence and co-operation of the active men of Amboy which characterized the former, and easily succumbed to the organized opposition of the Dixon contingent.

Judges of Circuit Court.—For Circuit Court purposes Lee County has formed a part of different circuits, as follows: Sixth Circuit from 1840 to 1849; Twenty-second, from 1857; Third, from 1873; Thirteenth, from 1877, and from 1897 the Fifteenth, to which it still belongs.

The Judges of the Circuit Court from the bar of Lee County have been as follows: J. V. Eustace, commissioned March 16, 1857, Twenty-second Circuit; W. W. Heaton, July 1, 1861, and June 7, 1867, Twenty-second Circuit; W. W. Heaton, June 16, 1873, Third Circuit, died December 26, 1877, and was succeeded by J. V. Eustace, who was commissioned to Fifteenth Circuit, June 16, 1879, and June 16, 1885. He died December 13, 1887, and was succeeded by J. H. Cartwright, of Ogle County. J. D. Crabtree was commissioned to same circuit June 9, 1888, to succeed Judge Bailey, of Stephenson County, deceased. He was again commissioned June 16, 1891, and June 8, 1897; died May 22, 1902, and was succeeded by R. S. Farrand, who was commissioned August 1, 1902, and June 18, 1903, being the present incumbent. All were elected, no vacancies having been filled by appointment.

Members of the Legislature.—State Senators—Silas Noble, 1846-48; Richard F. Adams, 1858-62; Jas. K. Edsall, 1870-72; Henry D. Dement, 1876-80; John D. Crabtree, 1886 to May 29, 1888, when he resigned; Chas. H. Hughes, 1902, present incumbent. Representatives—Jos. Crawford, 1848-54; John V. Eustace, 1856-58; George Ryan, 1860-62 and 1866-68; De-mas Harris, 1862-64; Obed W. Bryant, 1864-66; Alonzo Kinyon, 1868-70; Norman H. Ryan, 1870-72; Henry D. Dement, 1872-76; Abijah Powers, 1876-78; Bernard H. Trusdell, 1876-80; Alex. P. Dysart, 1878-82; Solomon H. Betheha, 1882-84; John B. Felker, 1882-84; Chas. H. Ingalls, 1884-86; Benj. H. Bradshaw, 1886-90; Sherwood Dixon, 1888-92; Luther W. Mitchell, 1890-92; Washington I. Guffin, 1892-1900; Chas. H. Hughes, 1900-02.

County Commissioners—At the first election in 1839 the full Board of three Commissioners was chosen. After this the term of one expired and his successor was elected each year. C. F. Ingalls, Nathan Whitney and J. P. Dixon constituted the first Board, and their successors were as follows: A. E. Haskell, 1840; Joseph Crawford, 1841; O. F. Ayres, 1842; J. C. Morgan, 1843; D. Baird, 1844; D. H. Birdsell, 1845; James Goble, 1846, to fill vacancy caused by Baird's resignation; Warren Badger, 1847; Stephen Fuller, 1848; John Gilmore, 1848, to fill vacancy to 1850, when township organization went into effect.

County Judges—Harvey Morgan from 1839 to 1843; Otis A. Eddy to 1847; Lorenzo Wood from November, 1849, to December 27, 1853; David Welty, from December, 1853, to December, 1861; William W. DeWolf, December, 1861, to November 6, 1869; John D. Crabtree, November 6, 1869, to December 1, 1877; James B. Charters, December 1, 1877, to December 1, 1882; Richard S. Farrand, December 1, 1882, to August 9, 1902; Robert H. Scott, by appointment, August 9, 1902, elected November 4, 1902, present incumbent.

County Clerks—Isaac S. Boardman, from 1839 to June 7, 1840; Jas. P. Dixon, June to September, 1843; Charles T. Chase, September, 1843, to 1849; J. B. Gregory, November 28, 1849, to November, 1853; Thomas W. Eustace, December, 1853, to December 4, 1861; James A. Hawley, December 4, 1861, to December 1, 1882; Charles H. Gardner, to December, 1886; James H. Thompson, December, 1886, to November 24, 1902; William C. Thompson, November 24, 1902, present incumbent.

Clerks of Circuit Court—Geo. W. Chase, April, 1840, to 1841; C. T. Chase, 1841-51; N. F. Porter, 1851; Isaac S. Boardman, 1851-57; G. E. Haskell, 1857-59; Isaac S. Boardman in 1859; B. F. Shaw, 1859-68; J. N. Hyde, 1868-76; Remington Warriner, 1876 to December 1, 1882; Ira W. Lewis, December 1, 1882, to December 7, 1896; Arvane S. Hyde, December 7, 1896, to January 1, 1898; Ira W. Lewis, by appointment, January 1, 1898, to December, 1898, elected November, 1898, to fill unexpired term of Arvane S. Hyde to December, 1900; Ira W. Lewis, December, 1900, present incumbent.

Recorders—Michael Fellows, 1839-44; Edwin W. Kine, 1844-50, since which time the Clerk of the Circuit Court has served as ex-officio Recorder.

County Treasurers—John Morse, 1840-43; Nathan Morehouse, 1843-46; S. Parker, in 1846; W. W. Bethea, to 1850; Elias B. Stiles, 1850-57; Thomas B. Little, 1857-59; Elias B. Stiles, 1859-63; Joseph T. Little, 1863-71; Josiah Little, 1871-75; Frederick A. Truman, 1875-79; Josiah Little, 1879-86; Chas. H. Hughes, 1886-90; Michael M. Maloney, 1890-94; Chas. F. Welty, 1894-98; John M. Sterling, 1898-1902; Walter B. Merriman, November, 1902, present incumbent.

Superintendent of Schools (First known as School Commissioner)—E. R. Mason, to 1840; Joseph T. Little, 1840-43; Daniel B. McKinney, 1843-46; Lorenzo Wood, 1846-50; John V. Eustace, 1850-53; John Stevens, 1853-55; S. Wright, 1855-57; James A. Hawley, 1857-59; John Monroe, 1859-61; W. H. Gardner, 1861-63; B. F. Atherton, 1863-65; James H. Preston, 1865-73; Daniel Carey, 1873-76; James H. Preston, 1876, to December, 1880; Samuel J. Howe, 1880 to November 2, 1886; P. M. James, 1886-90; Jay C. Edwards, 1890-94; J. F. Edwards, 1894 to November 4, 1902, elected for third term November, 1902, present incumbent.

Surveyors—Joseph Crawford, 1839-44; S. H. Whitmore, 1844-46; S. Parker in 1846; C. Camp, 1846-49; Joseph Crawford, 1849-55; A. W. Tinkham, 1855-57; Milton Santee, 1857-61; K. F. Booth, 1861-63; W. B. Andrus, 1863-65; C. R. Hall, 1865-67; Wm. McMahan, 1867 to November 7, 1882; Henry E. Wylie, 1882-88; L. B. Neighbor, 1888-92; Chas. C. Jacobs, 1892-96; Wm. B. McMahan, 1896-1900; L. B. Neighbor, November, 1900, present incumbent.

Coroners—Samuel Johnson, 1839-41; John Lord, 1841-48; Sol. Parker, 1848-50; Jas. Goble, 1850-54; D. B. McKinney, 1854-56; H. O. Kelsey, 1856-64; Jos. Hatch, Jr., 1864-66; H. Barrell, 1866-70; A. E. Wilcox, 1870-80; J. C. Church, 1880 to November, 1888; Wm. B. Andrus, 1888 to December, 1899; Chas. T. Smith, 1899 to November 6, 1900, at which date he was elected for third term.

State's Attorney—Wm. E. Ives, 1872-76; A. C. Bardwell, 1876-80; Chas. B. Morrison, December 1, 1880, to December 7, 1896; Edward H. Brewster, 1896-1900; Chas. H. Wooster, December, 1900, present incumbent.

County Assessor, Overseer of Poor and Collector—Under the first organization, the County Commissioners chose these officers. March 7, 1840, John Morse was appointed first Assessor, April 16th of the same year, Joseph Sawyer was appointed first Overseer of the Poor and David Tripp first Collector.

LEE COUNTY IN THE CIVIL WAR.

A good sized volume would be required to fairly set forth the part which the people of Lee County took in that memorable struggle. The limitations of space therefore preclude the effort, but a few interesting facts will be set down.

The quotas assigned to the State by the Federal Government under the several calls were: Call of 1861, 47,785; call of July, 1862, 26,148; call of August, 1862, 26,148 for nine months, being equivalent to 6,537 for three years; draft call of 1863, 36,700; of October 17, 1863, 27,930; February 1, 1864, 46,309; March 4, 1864, 18,564; July 18, 1864, 52,057; December 19, 1864, 32,887. The total quotas of Lee County were 2,454, and the enlistments credited to the county were eight short of this number.

To meet this constant drain, the county and the towns of Dixon, Palmyra, Lee Center and Willow Creek, offered bounties as inducement to enlistments. The records in the County Clerk's office are very meager on the subject, but the reports of the Adjutant-General of the State show that the county paid $405,214.75 in bounties, and to soldiers' families $15,465.75, besides $218,707.55 paid as interest on county warrants or bonds—making a total of $639,388.05. This was more than was expended for this purpose by any other county in the State, Cook and Bureau alone excepted.

It is commonly supposed that no draft was made to fill any of the quotas assigned to Lee County, but the writer is obliged to dispel this illusion. As clerk to John V. Eustace, Provost Marshal, he took part in a draft which was publicly made in the court room at the Court House in Dixon. How many were drafted or on what quota, he does not recall. The number was small, and it may be that subsequent enlistments avoided the necessity of its being reported to the Adjutant-General's office.

At a special session of the Board of Supervisors held May 14, 1861, a resolution was passed appropriating $6,000 to "equip" the volunteers of Lee County, and John G. Fleck, Josiah M. Davis and Louis M. Blaisdell were appointed commissioners to expend the same. The resolution refers to the "Ten Regiment" bill, then recently passed by the Legislature, and recites that "two companies are from this county," and that no provision had been made for their equipment. The resolution authorized scrip to be issued in denominations of $1, $2, $3 and $5, payable February 15, 1862. No other business was transacted at this session. At the September meeting, 1861, a tax of 25 cents on the $100 was voted to pay this scrip.

The Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry was recruited under the Ten Regiment bill, above alluded to. It was mustered into the United States service, May 24, 1861, by Capt. John Pope of the regular army, at Camp Dement, Dixon, with John B. Wyman, of Amboy, Colonel; B. F. Parks, of Aurora, Lieutenant-Colonel, and A. B. Gorgas, of Dixon, Major. Sunday, June 16, 1861, the regiment took train for Caseyville near St. Louis, under Officers John B. Wyman, Colonel, Benj. F. Parks, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Fred'k W. Partridge, Major. We quote from the Adjutant-General's report: "The Thirteenth was the first regiment organized from the then Second Congressional District, and was composed of as good citizens as Northern Illinois contained, many that enlisted as privates rising to field offices in later regiments. Its Colonel, John B. Wyman, organized and commanded the Chicago Light Guards, the first crack corps the Garden City ever had, and he soon brought the Thirteenth to a degree of proficiency in drill and soldierly deportment that was never excelled by any regiment with which it was afterwards associated."

September 2, 1861, the Thirty-fourth Illinois Infantry left for the South, with E. N. Kirk as Colonel, Amos Bosworth, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Chas. N. Levanway, Major. The companies were raised by the surrounding counties and first went into camp at Camp Butler, Springfield, where regimental organization was effected September 7, 1861. About 530—nearly all the survivors—were mustered as a veteran organization while still at the front, and on January 8, 1864, started home on veteran furlough, rendezvoused at Dixon and started back for the field February 28.

January 14, 1862, an artillery company was organized in Dixon with John T. Cheney as Captain. Though commonly known as Cheney's Battery, it was in fact Battery "F" of First Illinois Artillery. In February, 1865, the company organization was discontinued and, on March 7th, it was consolidated with other batteries in the Regiment.

September 2, 1862, the Seventy-fifth Illinois Volunteers, which had been quartered in West Dixon camp, was mustered into service with Dr. George Ryan as Colonel, John E. Bennett, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Wm. M. Kilgour, Major. It was composed almost entirely of men from Lee, Ogle and Whiteside counties. It remained at Camp Dement until September 27, when it went to the front, crossing the Ohio on the evening of the 30th and, on the 8th of October, was engaged in the battle of Perryville, where its loss was severe.

RAILROADS.—The survey of the Illinois Central Railroad through Lee County was completed in 1851, and construction was commenced the following year. January 13, 1855, regular trains began running, though the bridge at Dixon was not then completed. Passengers were transferred by boat until February 8, when the first train crossed the bridge. The section through the county was formally opened for traffic February 1.

February 12, 1855, trains commenced running to Chicago on the "Galena & Chicago Union Air Line." It was also called the Dixon Air-Line, and is now the Chicago & Northwestern.

The Chicago & Rock River Railroad was chartered by the Legislature of 1868-9. Every town through which it passed, except two, took stock in the railroad and issued bonds in payment. Amboy Town, by a vote of 517 for to 92 against, issued $100,000 of bonds which, after long and fruitless litigation, were refunded for another issue, $65,500 of which are still to become due. Wyoming bonded itself for $50,000 for the same purpose. After stubborn litigation the town found further resistance futile and, in settlement, issued $102,380 in bonds, all of which have been paid. Other towns had similar experience; the town of Harmon alone escaping by means of an injunction restraining the issue of the bonds which the people had voted. Lee Center and Marion were the only towns on the line that did not vote to issue bonds for stock. In every case the stock thus purchased was sold by the towns at a discount. The road was completed in the summer of 1872. Later it became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System.

In 1870-71 the Chicago & Iowa Railway was constructed through Rochelle, Ogle County, on to Aurora, passing through the body of Alto Township, and a corner of Willow Creek. This, too, was soon absorbed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System.

In 1902 the Peoria & Northwestern Railway was built, connecting with the Chicago & Northwestern at Nelson and extending to Peoria, passing through Nelson Township and the northwest portion of Harmon.

The Rochelle & Southern Railway Company is, at this writing, engaged in constructing a railroad from a point on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, near Steward, to McNab in Putnam County, extending southerly through the eastern portion of this county.

Vigorous movements are now on foot to connect the towns and cities of this part of the State by electric roads. To this end companies have been incorporated as follows:

The "Illinois and Rock River Railway Company," incorporated May 31, 1900, to construct a railroad from Rockford to Rock Falls, via intermediate cities, to Wisconsin line, to Waukegan, to Cairo, to Galena, and to Chicago—capital stock, $1,000,000; duration fifty years; first Board of Directors, Glen E. Plumb, River Forest, Ill.; Thomas C. MacMillan, Chicago; Allen F. Millikan, River Forest; Ephraim Banning and Thomas A. Banning, Chicago.

The "Northern Illinois Electric Railway Company," incorporated June 24, 1901, to construct a road from Steward to Dixon, via Lee Center and Amboy; capital, $700,000; duration fifty years; office at Steward, Ill.; first Directors—E. L. Titus, I. R. Titus, S. D. Frost, Sherman L. Shaw, J. M. Durin, F. N. Vaughan and G. H. T. Shaw.

The "Sterling, Dixon and Eastern Electric Railway Company," incorporated August 18, 1902, with capital stock of $300,000, to construct "the railroad" from Sterling and Rock Falls to Dixon; principal business office to be at Sterling; term of corporation, fifty years; incorporators—Henry C. Higgins, Neenah, Wis.; J. F. Springfield, Rochester, N. H.; Ward S.

Arnold, Chicago; Harry E. O'Neill, Omaha, Neb.; F. E. Andrews, Sterling, Ill.; Charles H. Hughes, Dixon, Ill.

The "Dixon, Rock Falls and Southwestern Electric Railway Company" was incorporated March 21, 1903, with a capital stock of $50,000; duration fifty years; purpose, to construct "said railroad" from Dixon to Rock Island, via Rock Falls. Directors—O. E. Maxson, A. S. Goodell, A. J. McNeil, R. L. Leitch and H. L. Sheldon, all of Rock Falls, Ill.; office at Rock Falls.

The pioneer, however, in this line, was the "Rock River Electric Railroad Company," incorporated February 7, 1894, to construct a railroad from Rockford to Dixon; capital $500,000; duration fifty years; first Directors—Jas. S. Ticknor, George E. King, Harry B. Andrews, Jason C. Ayres and Fred G. Jones. Considerable was done by this Company in procuring right of way and other preliminaries, but hard times following 1893, finally defeated the enterprise.

The "Illinois and Rock River Company" secured franchises in Rockford, Dixon, and intermediate points, but after doing a trifling amount of work in the way of grading and setting poles, permitted these to expire by limitation. The franchises have, however, been recently extended for another year.

The "Sterling, Dixon & Eastern" has laid its tracks in Sterling, where its steam-power plant is located, and is now doing the same in Dixon. Gangs are at work between the two cities, and the prospects are that, in a few months, these places will be connected by electric rail line.

SWAMP LAND DRAINAGE.—Inlet Swamp comprises, including the tracts it directly affects, about 30,000 acres of land distributed among the towns of Alto, Willow Creek, Reynolds, Viola, Bradford and Lee Center. Inlet Drainage District was formed as early as the 70s, having the drainage of the swamp in view, but without practical results. August 5, 1887, The "Inlet Swamp Drainage District" was formally organized by proceedings in the County Court under the drainage law. Preliminary to the organization, the court appointed E. C. Parsons, Wesley Steward and John Nellis to lay out the proposed ditches and report plans and probable cost. After reducing the system to less than half what they recommended, organization was effected. It may be said that, by subsequent action, the system they advocated has been practically adopted. To meet the cost of the ditches, and such expenses as pertain thereto, six assessments have been made on the lands of the district, aggregatings $165,800. The last work on the ditches was finished in 1901. The result has surpassed the hopes of the most sanguine. Lands, practically valueless before, are now among the choicest in the county, for which credit is due to the Court (Hon. R. S. Farrand), the Commissioners, as well as the more progressive land owners. On the organization of the district, the court appointed William S. Frost, of Bradford, Henry B. Cobb, of Viola, and Wesley Steward of Alto, Commissioners. The board continued unchanged until September, 1899, when Xavier Gehant was appointed by the court in Mr. Steward's place. Owing to resignation of Mr. Frost, there are now but two Commissioners serving: A. J. McGinnis and Wm. Fell. The ditches were laid out by Engineer Rutledge, of Rockford. G. H. T. Shaw, C. E., of Dixon, succeeded him and has had charge of the greater part of the excavation work. The four main ditches have a total length of thirty-two miles, into which empty over seven and one-half miles of smaller ditches or laterals.

Brush Grove Drainage District, embracing about 10,000 acres, was organized by the County Court, August 7, 1893, to drain a tract lying in the town of Alto, and projecting over into Ogle County in the vicinity of Rochelle. In fact, a small section of the city is within the district. The first Commissioners were Albert Horton, Wesley Steward and Wallace Brown. The first assessment was made for $30,000, in October, 1893; the second, for $12,000, in May, 1895, and a third, for $6,000, has been levied and only awaits the confirmation of the Court. The present Commissioners are Albert Horton, Wesley Steward and Fred W. Craft.

Districts have also been formed to drain land in the southwest part of the county, but they have been organized before Justices of the Peace and their records are not accessible to the writer. The most active, and probably the most efficient of these, is "Union Drainage District No. 1," in the town of Hamilton, Lee County, and Hahnehan, Whiteside County, of which C. B. Keigwin, Jas. Foley and John W. Cashion are now, and for four or five years past, have been, the Commissioners. The other districts are Harmon No. 1 and Harmon No. 2.

Tornado.—On Sunday, June 3, 1860, a frightful tornado swept through the central portion of Lee County, strewing death and destruction in its path. It originated in Iowa, crossing the Mississippi River near Comanche and Albany, almost wiping out the former village. It continued eastward through Whiteside County, and on through the central portions of the towns of Harmon, Amboy, Lee Center, Bradford and Willow Creek in this county. A number of persons were killed and many buildings demolished in these towns. A special meeting of the Board of Supervisors was held on the 13th of June, to consider the question of extending aid to the sufferers from the tornado, but the Board decided that it had not the power to afford the relief.

Early Markets, Prices, Etc.—In the first years, Chicago was the only market where the farmer could dispose of his product for cash. Hither, before the advent of the railroad, the cattle had to be driven and the grain hauled. One settler at Four Mile Grove, near PawPaw, says: "We hauled corn eighty miles to market in early days, and then sold it for 14 cents a bushel; while, for oats, we received 10 cents and for wheat 40 cents a bushel. We could not pay any hotel bills out of that money. Provisions for man and team were carried from home and poor shelter gratefully accepted." Another says: "One year I raised 500 bushels of wheat, doing all the work—except exchanging labor for a reaper—with the help of my wife. She had been tenderly reared in a Massachusetts home, but went into the field and bound the grain. When the crop was sold, we had left, clear of expenses, only ten dollars to pay for our toil." A resident of Palmyra writes, but of what year is not clear: "Corn remained unsalable. Through August and September there would be a long string of teams going into Chicago with wheat through clouds of blinding, choking dust. The wheat generally sold at 50 and 60 cents. On these long drives, requiring a week or ten days to accomplish, the load was seldom more than twenty-five bushels. With the wheat was taken food for man and beast, a scythe to cut grass by the way and axe and auger for repair work."

Schools.—From Superintendent Edwards' report for the year, July, 1902, to July, 1903, the following items are gleaned: Number of school districts in the county, 162; males in the county under 21, 5,745; females, 5,824; pupils enrolled, 6,349; teachers in service—males, 53; females, 188; average monthly wages paid teachers—males, $58.96; females, $37.52. Total amount earned by male teachers, $21,584.04; females, $58,478. Total expended for all school purposes, $124,728.12. High schools—Ashton, with six teachers; Franklin Grove, with five; Amboy, with eleven; North Dixon, with twelve; PawPaw, with six; Dixon (South of River), twenty-three. School libraries in county, 123, with an average of 76 volumes in each.

The Lee County Old Settlers' Association held its first meeting at Amboy, August 30, 1873, since which date meetings and picnics have been held annually at different places in the county, Amboy seeming to be the favorite.

State Roads.—The early sessions of the Legislature were largely concerned with the establishing of public or State roads. By act, approved March 2, 1839, Commissioners were appointed to view, mark, locate and establish a State road from Fox River in Kane County westward, by a road running from Aurora in said county, to Dixon's Ferry in Ogle County. March 3, 1843, an act was approved appointing commissioners "to lay out, mark and locate a State road from Chicago, in Cook County, via St. Charles, Sycamore, Coltonville and Browdie's Grove to Dixon on the nearest and best ground." Others were, in like manner, provided for by special act of the General Assembly, and are all properly called "State roads."

CHAPTER II.

THE BLACK HAWK WAR.

---

TREATY OF 1804—BLACK HAWK AND HIS BRITISH BAND—LANDS ABOUT MOUTH OF ROCK RIVER DECLARED OPEN TO SETTLEMENT—INDIAN DISSATISFACTION—RETURN OF BLACK HAWK AND HIS FOLLOWERS—GOV. REYNOLDS' PROCLAMATION—ARRIVAL OF TROOPS AT DIXON'S FERRY—STILLMAN RUN DISASTER—PROMINENT ILLINOISANS IN SERVICE—BATTLE OF KELLOGG'S GROVE—OVERWHELMING DEFEAT OF THE INDIANS AT BAD AXE, WIS.

In the year 1804 a treaty was entered into at St. Louis between the united tribes of the Sac and Fox Indians, on the one part, and the United States, on the other, whereby, for a consideration, the tribes ceded to the latter a large tract of country embracing the Rock River valley and the Village of the Sacs at its mouth. The Indians reserved the right to live and hunt on the ceded lands until the Government should part with its title. These Indians or their ancestors originally had their homes in the neighborhood of Montreal; and although they had been driven from Canada, many of them were still loyal to the British and sided with them in the effort which our Government was putting forth to compel the English to surrender and vacate certain western forts in accordance with the treaty of Paris of September 3, 1783. Black Hawk served in the English army in the war of 1812. Moreover, the Sacs were loth to abandon their village at the mouth of Rock River; and Black Hawk, though only a brave—not a chief—became the leader of the disaffected element of that tribe known as the "British Band," which, by opposition to removal from the ceded lands, brought on the Black Hawk War. By another treaty at St. Louis, May 13, 1816, the Sacs of Rock River re-established and confirmed the treaty of 1804. But still the British Band was restive, and depredations on the white settlements continued as before the treaty. Other treaties followed: one in 1822, with the Sacs and Foxes; one in 1824 between the Sacs and Foxes; and one in 1825, in which all the former treaties were recognized. Still the Indians continued to harass the white settlers in ways known only to savagery.

In 1828 the President proclaimed certain lands open for settlement and sale. This included Black Hawk's village at the mouth of Rock River. The chiefs and most of the Indians of the two tribes promptly vacated the lands according to treaty, but Black Hawk refused, claiming that when he signed the treaty of 1816 he had been deceived and never knew that his village had been included in its terms. Then commenced a course of marauding and intimidation against the new settlers. Repeated appeals were made to the Governor of the State and, through him, to the United States military authorities. Volunteers and detachments of the regular army finally marched on the village. The Indians escaped, but their homes were burned. Then came the treaty of June 30, 1831, in which it is recited that "the said British Band of Sac Indians have, in violation of the several treaties entered into between the United States and the Sac and Fox nations in the years 1804, 1816 and 1825, continued to remain upon and to cultivate the lands on Rock River ceded to the United States by said treaties, after said lands had been sold by the United States to individual citizens of Illinois and other States." The band then agrees, by this treaty, to move to their lands west of the Mississippi and never return.

Black Hawk and his followers complied with this requirement in apparent good faith, but on the 6th day of April, 1832, defiantly recrossed to the east bank of the Mississippi near the mouth of the lower Iowa, with about 2,000 men, women and children, including about 500 warriors under arms, and thence set out on his march up Rock River. On the 16th of April Governor Reynolds issued a proclamation, the opening sentences of which were calculated to startle the country: "Fellow Citizens: Your country requires your services. The Indians have assumed a hostile attitude and have invaded the State in violation of the treaty of last summer. The British Band of Sac and other hostile Indians, headed by Black Hawk, are in possession of Rock River country to the great terror of the frontier inhabitants. I consider the settlers on the frontier in imminent danger." As in all other emergencies in our history, men all over the State responded with alacrity.

It is beyond our present purpose to give a detailed or extended account of this war as it progressed. We must be content with such incidents as are directly connected with the locality whose history we are endeavoring to sketch.

Father Dixon was early advised of the approach of Black Hawk and his followers. He was assured by a leading Winnebago Chief, Pachinka, that the Winnebagoes held possession of the lands through which Black Hawk would have to pass, and that they would not dare to injure the white friends of his nation, among whom Father Dixon was numbered. Thus it came about that Father Dixon remained at his home when the army of savages passed in May, and camped a few hundred yards above the ferry, at a spring which was submerged by the building of the dam. He estimated the force at 600 exclusive of women and children.

On the 12th of May, 1832, Governor Reynolds was at Dixon's Ferry with about 1,800 mounted riflemen under command of General Whiteside, awaiting the arrival of General Atkinson's forces of the regular army, coming up the river with army stores and provisions. Immediately after the arrival of the forces, General Whiteside sent a party of four men, with a guide and interpreter under command of Captain John Dement of Dixon (then State Treasurer), to Shabbona's Grove, to warn the friendly Pottawatomie chief, Shabbona, who lived there on a small reservation with his family and a few followers, not to allow Black Hawk to locate on their lands. Losing their way the second day out, they came across four Sac Indians, from whom they learned that Black Hawk was encamped on a stream only a few miles distant, that his people were in starving condition and were going over to Mud Creek to hunt.

Just before Captain Dement and his party returned Major Stillman was permitted, contrary to the advice of Father Dixon, to advance up the river and spy out the hostile camp. The locality where they found the foe—or more correctly where the foe found them—has been immortalized by what there happened. The cowardice and unsoldierly bearing of the troops at approach of the red-skins stamped the site with the name "Stillman's Run." It is said that many of the soldiers ceased not their running until they reached Dixon's Ferry, twenty-five miles distant, or some other place of refuge.

Immediately on receipt of the news of the rout, 1,600 volunteers moved out on forced march, leaving 200 to guard the Ferry. On reaching the field they discovered that the main body of the enemy had decamped northward, while small bands had scattered among the settlements to pillage, burn and murder. The loss to Stillman's force was found to be eleven killed. Being out of provisions, the pursuing party was obliged to return to Dixon's Ferry to await the arrival of the boats.

By order dated May 22, 1832, General Atkinson made Dixon's Ferry his headquarters and base of operations. At the same time a fort was ordered erected on the north side of the river. It was called Fort Dixon. It consisted of two "block," or log, houses within an inclosure consisting of a breastwork of earth and sod, four and a half feet high and abutting on the river bank near the west line of what is now North Galena Avenue. The northeasterly of these houses was at least four times as large as the other, and was provided with loopholes. The smaller one was probably a powder magazine. The buildings stood many years after the war, and persons now living were familiar with them. As nearly as can be ascertained, the larger building stood near the line between Lots 3 and 10, Block 54.

Great dissatisfaction developed in the volunteer portion of the army among those who were impatient to get back to their neglected fields and other industries. They had been sent on an expedition which brought them to the mouth of Fox River, where they were mustered out May 27, whither General Atkinson repaired on the 29th. A new levy of 2,000 men had already been ordered, and he urged that 1,000 of the discharged volunteers re-enlist for twenty-day temporary service. Five companies promptly responded, including that of Captain Iles, in which Abraham Lincoln (formerly captain) became a private. Men who were subsequently conspicuous in the affairs of the State were among them: Joseph Gillespie, Pierre Menard, James Semple, John T. Stuart, John Dement, John J. Hardin. It must be remembered that the real war was still to come.

Captain Iles, and another company were ordered to Galena by way of Dixon's Ferry, where Col. Zachary Taylor had remained with a few regulars to guard the supplies. Iles, in his book, "Early Life and Times," says that when he reached the Ferry, he camped at a spring a half mile above, and then sought Colonel Taylor on the north side of the river and found him "in a little fort built of prairie sod." He further says, regarding the march: "John Dixon, who kept a house of entertainment here and had sent his family to Galena for safety, joined us and hauled out wallets of corn and grub, which was a great help." The company returning reached Fort Wilbourn, between Peru and LaSalle, June 16, and was there mustered out by Lieutenant Robt. Anderson, of Fort Sumter fame, who had mustered it into service twenty days before.

Lincoln enlisted a third time and again came to Dixon's Ferry, this time as private in Captain Early's company, which formed a part of the new levy. The headquarters or place of rendezvous of this new army was at the "Rapids of the Illinois," where General Atkinson caused Maj. John Dement's battalion to be detached to scour the country, and join Colonel Taylor at Dixon, to whom Lieut. Jefferson Davis was acting as aid. It is said of Dement's battalion, that it embraced men who had held nearly every office in the State from Governor down—Dement himself being, at this time, Treasurer of the State.

From Dixon the battalion moved on to Kellogg's Grove, where a desperate battle was fought with a band of mounted Indians, stripped to the skin and in their war paint under command of Black Hawk in person. The brunt of the fight fell on the commanding officer and a few as plucky as himself. In the annals of Indian warfare, few engagements of small numbers will be found more desperate and bloody. Without going into details it must be said that no praise can exceed the meed to which Major Dement is entitled for bravery on that occasion. Black Hawk speaks of him in his autobiography thus: "The young chief deserves great praise for his courage and bravery, but fortunately for us his army was not all composed of such brave men."

The Quartermaster was ably assisted by John Dixon, who accompanied the army to the end of the campaign. John K. Robinson says, in this connection: "During the Black Hawk War, Father Dixon had the contract for supplying the army with beef up to the final battle of the Bad Axe River," and hence, facetiously gave himself the title of Major of the Steer Battalion. It is understood that the troops, both regular and volunteer, were all mounted.

The war closed with the defeat of the Indians at the battle of Bad Axe, Wis., and the surrender of Black Hawk, August 2, 1832. The treaty of peace was signed at Rock Island on the 21st of September following. The troops, then remaining in the service, were mustered out at Dixon's Ferry. The pack horses used in the war were gathered and corralled here, preparatory to being driven further south for sale in more densely settled portions of the State.

That portion of the army which marched to Dixon's Ferry from the southeast to take part in the war, crossed Bureau Creek one-half mile southwest of the point where the Illinois Central Railroad now crosses it, near the east line of the county, and marched thence to the point where the residence of Mr. William R. Long now stands near the north line of Section 13 in the Town of May, and from there to Rocky Ford, where they crossed Green River. Mr. M. Perkins, now of Perkins' Grove, near the south line of the county, in LaSalle County, came in 1834 when the evidences of the line of march were plain to be seen.

In the course of the war troops of the regular army were brought to the field from St. Louis under General Atkinson, from Fortress Monroe under General Scott, and from Detroit under General Brady, as well as those at Prairie du Chien, Wis., under Lieut-Col. Taylor, and those at Portage, Wis., under Lieut-Col. Culter. To these were added the volunteer militia of the State.

Lincoln became well acquainted with Col. Dement in these war days, and though belonging to opposing political parties, each entertained the highest regard for the other, and their friendship was not allowed to wane in after years. After Lincoln had been elected President Mr. Dement called on him at Springfield, and Lincoln, grasping his extended hand in both his, greeted him as "Jack," and expressed his delight at meeting him.

ALTO TOWNSHIP.

FIRST WHITE SETTLERS—ALTO SET OFF FROM WILLOW CREEK TOWNSHIP—FIRST TOWN OFFICERS—SUBSCRIPTION TO RAILROAD—CHURCH HISTORY—THE VILLAGE OF STEWARD—GRAIN ELEVATORS AND NATIONAL BANK.

On the northeast quarter of Section 21 grows "Plum Thicket," the only natural grove in the town. The propensity, universally followed by the pioneers, to gather in or around the timber, prevailed in this instance, for the first settlers located at this grove. Here John Grimes, in 1847, built the first house, although he arrived in 1843. About two years later came Rev. J. Wood, of the Baptist faith, who remained two or three years and removed to Earlville, LaSalle County. Then followed Jedediah Loveridge in 1853, who, after some twenty years, emigrated to Nebraska. After these came James Holcomb and his father's family, and Hubbel Williams, Mason Herrick, the Mills family, James Tyler, C. R. Hall, the Kirbys, McDonnells, Stewards, Carpenters and others.

Alto was set off from Willow Creek by resolution of the Board of Supervisors, at its February meeting in 1860. At the first election in the town 47 votes were polled, resulting in the election of the following officers: Supervisor, C. R. Hall; Town Clerk and Assessor, James Tyler; Collector, Josiah Carpenter; Justices of the Peace, Daniel Carey and H. C. Holcomb; Constables, Josiah Carpenter and John Dorson.

The town voted to take $32,000 of the stock of the Chicago & Iowa Railroad when that road was about to be built through the township, and to issue bonds in payment therefor. This was in the early part of the winter of 1869. Grading was commenced early the next summer on this part of the road, and it was completed into Rochelle on the night of December 31, at 10:25 o'clock. A compromise was finally effected by which the town, instead of investing $32,000 in stock, donated the company $25,000 in bonds.

The Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church organized, June 25, 1870, and built a church building three miles east of Steward, at a cost of about $2,300.

Steward.—The town of Steward was platted, November 22, 1872, by Mr. Wesley Steward, who owned the land and founded the town. It was incorporated as a village, April 13, 1903, by proceedings in the County Court.

The first dwelling to be erected in the village was built by Patrick Casey on Lot 6, Block 1, and the first store was built by Henry A. Robinson on Lot 3 of same block. The first school house was built in 1882 at a cost of about $3,000, and was destroyed by fire February 8, 1903. A new building was erected on the same site at a cost of $7,000 ready for opening of the fall term of the school the same year.

The first elevator in the place was put up by Wesley Steward, who after two years took in G. F. Henning as partner, and the business, including dealing in lumber, coal, etc., was carried on by them, under the firm name of Steward & Co., for twenty-five years, the firm of Titus Brothers, the present owners, succeeding them. Another elevator was erected in 1880 and is now owned by Titus Bros. It is asserted that about one million bushels of grain are shipped from this point yearly, and that it ranks as the greatest grain-shipping station in Northern Illinois.

The First National Bank of Steward furnishes the banking facilities of the community. It was organized January 6, 1903, with a capital of $25,000. Its directors are: E. L. Titus, J. M. Durin, A. B. Titus, R. W. Hough, W. P. Graham, George E. Stocking, Wesley Steward, G. W. Durin and I. R. Titus. The officers are: E. L. Titus, President; J. M. Durin, Vice-President; I. R. Titus, Cashier. Its deposits, at close of business August 28, 1903, were $51,742.44.

Steward is a very prosperous village and is looked upon as one of the best of the smaller towns in the county. According to the census returns the township had a population of 923 in 1890, and 924 in 1900. The census of the village does not appear separately from that of the township.

AMBOY TOWNSHIP AND CITY.

EARLY SETTLERS—VILLAGES OF BINGHAMTON AND ROCKY FORD—PALESTINE GROVE SETTLEMENT—AMBOY CITY AN OUTGROWTH OF THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD—EARLY BUSINESS HOUSES—DISASTROUS FIRES—SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES—NEWSPAPERS—LOCAL BANKS—GEN. JOHN B. WYMAN AMBOY'S FIRST MAYOR—LINCOLN AND GRANT EARLY VISITORS—LIST OF CITY OFFICIALS.

A Frenchman by the name of Filamalee is believed to have been the first white settler in Palestine Grove, within the present limits of Amboy Township. His shanty is said to have been located about a mile below Rocky Ford. He was a roving character and soon disappeared.

The first permanent settler was John Dexter, who emigrated from Canada in the spring of 1835 and staked out a claim on the northwest quarter of Section 14, north of Palestine Grove.

His nearest neighbors were at Inlet Grove. In 1836 James Doan and wife settled at Palestine Grove.

The district known as Palestine Grove was not confined to the timber, but extended to the site of the city of Amboy, and also eastward about two miles beyond the Lee Center town line.

In 1837 Dexter's brother-in-law, Andrew Bainter, located in the neighborhood. In October of the same year, Asa B. Searles arrived from New York, whence he had driven with a horse-team. He came by way of Peoria where Benjamin Wasson joined him. Mr. Searles staked off a claim in the south half of Section 14, on which he later laid out the Village of Binghamton. He was the first Postmaster in the settlement. Warren Badger succeeded him. His commission was dated May 28, 1840, and made him Postmaster at Winooski, the name by which Palestine Grove office was then designated. Nathan Meeks, who acquired a reputation of the banditti order, was living about four miles south and west of Rocky Ford the same year. His "Corn Cracker," situated on Green River, is claimed to have been the first mill for grinding grain in Lee County.

When Mr. Searles arrived he found a saw-mill in operation at Rocky Ford, owned by Timothy Perkins and Horace Bowen. After passing through several hands, in 1848 it became the property of F. R. Dutcher. A log dam created the mill pond, and the mill was run by a "flutter-wheel."

The year 1838 seems to have been a notable one for the arrival of settlers; for in this year, James Blair and three sons, William, Winthrop and Edwin, arrived, and John S. Sawyer and four sons erected a cabin south of the ground now occupied by the Illinois Central shops. In 1841 Sawyer sold a part of his claim to Joseph Farrell and the remainder to Joseph Appleton. Alexander James likewise became a resident that year, and a year later sold his claim to Chester S. Badger, who, after working as millwright, in the year 1837 returned to his New York home in the fall. In 1838 Mr. Badger and his son Simon became permanent settlers. In 1839 Warren, another son, arrived bringing the mother and her two daughters, Sarah and Roena. In the autumn Warren went back to New York and remained until 1842, when he again came west and resided in Amboy Township until his death in 1861. In 1840 Chester Badger, a younger son, drove through from New York with a two-horse team. He still resides in Amboy and is the only surviving member of the family.

The Badger's located their homestead about a mile and a half east of Amboy. Henry Badger came in 1849 and lived in Binghamton up to the date of his death, a few years ago. The father, Chester S., brought hardwood lumber from Franklin Grove and built the first frame house in the settlement. John C. Church, William Church, Curtis Bridgman and two sons, and Wm. Hunt arrived in the summer and fall of 1838. Also came this same year, Martin Wright, Frederick Baldwin, Harvey Axtell, Ransom Barnes and Frederick Bainter. About this time Curtis Bridgman located about two miles southeast of the present site of Amboy. James Daley was an arrival of 1842, as was also William Rolf. John H. Gardner came in 1844. In this same year J. Henry Adams, then a child of eleven years, reached the neighborhood with his father, Orris, and mother. Cyrus Davis came in 1839. Space will not permit us to name the settlers of subsequent years.

Binghamton promised to be the town of the section. It was laid out in 1848 by Asa B. Searles. It had a store and a hotel. Robert G. Ingersoll, who lived to impress the country with his oratory and agnosticism, then about fifteen, was a boy of all work about the inn for a year or so. In 1844 the first flouring mill in the county was built, and in 1858 passed into the hands of Chester and Henry Badger. Chester Badger made thirteen trips to Chicago, some of which were with ox team, hauling grain, going and bringing timber back for this mill. It was burned in 1872, and immediately rebuilt, but was finally destroyed by lightning in 1881. The place also had two plow factories at one time and a saw-mill, blacksmith shop, shoe-shop, wagon-shop and carding machine. A dozen or more of the residences still remain in a good state of preservation. The removal of the Badger dam was necessary to give sufficient outlet to the ditches of Inlet Swamp Drainage District. Proper proceedings to this end resulted in its entire removal in the summer of 1900.

Rocky Ford (also known as Shelburn) was likewise a place of activity in the early days. The Indian trail from Council Bluffs to Chicago crossed Green River or Inlet Creek, at this point. It had a saw-mill, a distillery and two stores. In 1856 the Shelburn Manufacturing Company erected an extensive distillery and flouring mills combined, at a cost of $65,000. In 1859 the property was wrecked by an explosion, and ten years later, fire finished the work. This was practically the last of Shelburn.

A plat of "Palestine" was made May 10, 1854, and serves to mark the probable center of the Palestine Grove settlement. The plat was located about a quarter of a mile northwest of Rocky Ford, and consisted of three blocks of ground, two of which were on the Dixon and Peoria road. It was laid out for Rhoda E. Hook who, it is to be presumed, owned the ground. It was here on one of the Palestine lots that those of the Mormon faith laid the corner-stone of a temple which never rose higher than this foundation stone.

CITY OF AMBOY.

Amboy is an offspring of the Illinois Central Railroad. The town was laid out in 1854. The first residences were those of L. W. Borden, E. S. Reynolds and Dr. David Bainter, erected that year. In 1855 the extensive shops of the company were built. By the spring of 1856 the population was estimated at 1,000. R. D. Peironett was the first merchant to start business in the town, and Samuel Goldman the second. Next came Josiah Little in 1854, his line consisting of drugs, hardware and groceries. In the same year Wilcox & Wooster built a store, the lumber for which, as well as that for Little's store, was hauled from Mendota, and the stone from Lee Center. In 1855 the business of the place greatly increased. The first bank was started that year by G. H. Ambrose and Francis Little. The "Lee County Times," the first newspaper to be published in the town, was started the same year. This paper under date July 31, 1856, speaks of the place thus: "We have now between 2,000 and 3,000 inhabitants, two churches and another in process of construction, about thirty stores and groceries, a steam planing mill and sash factory, three hotels, two livery stables and, in fact, establishments of almost every variety."

The town became incorporated as a village under the general law in 1854-5. A. E. Wilcox was President of first Board of Trustees. It was incorporated as a city by act of the Legislature, March 2, 1857. John B. Wyman was its first Mayor. It was incorporated under the general law, May 8, 1858.

In 1885 reduction of the force was commenced, so that in 1894 there were about 200 at work. In that year the machinery was removed, principally to Freeport and Clinton, and the extensive buildings were vacated. One is now occupied by the bridge-building works of C. C. Jacobs, and the others are rapidly going to decay.

The loss of these shops was a severe blow to Amboy, from which, however, she has slowly recovered until she has at last reached a stage of prosperity probably equaling, if not surpassing, that of the factory days, when the shops dominated the town. She has water works, electric lights, long stretches of cement walks and shows evidence of general thrift and steady growth. Her water supply is drawn from a well 2,000 feet deep.

Fires.—Amboy has been visited by several disastrous fires. The first occurred December 10, 1863, from which there was a total loss of $35,000, with insurance amounting to $14,000. The next occurred in the same locality November 10, 1864, and destroyed five business houses; loss $45,000, with $38,000 insurance. Another fire did its destructive work, March 10, 1865, sweeping away seven business buildings. Again, August 24, 1867, sixteen buildings were licked up by the flames—the estimated loss being $7,500, with insurance for about one-half that amount. April 2, 1868, four business places were burned down. But by far the most calamitous fire was that of August 25, 1871. Twelve buildings were consumed, causing a loss of $175,000, on which there was an insurance of $103,000. The most deplorable feature of this holocaust was the burning to death of John Shannon, who was confined in the calaboose for the unlawful selling of mortgaged property. Besides these were numerous fires not general in their effect.

School Houses.—The first school building in Amboy was the two-story brick now in use, erected in 1857. Next, in 1864 came the one-story frame-building in Gilson's Addition. Following this, the old Methodist church was purchased and, in 1868, the two-story brick on the west side was added to the number. About 1896 a modern building was erected for the use of three departments, at a cost, all complete and ready for school, of a trifle less than $15,000.

Churches.—Father Gorbus, a Methodist minister, was the first to hold service in the section covered by Amboy Township. Father Hetcher, a German Baptist, was probably the next. It is supposed that Rev. Curtis Lathrop was the third, and Father White the fourth—both Methodists. In 1843, the "Congregational Church of Palestine Grove" was formed at the home of Amos Crombie, the first of that denomination in the county. The first pastor was John Morrel, who was followed by the father of the great agnostic, Robert G. Ingersoll. Following him came Joseph Gardner and Mr. Pierson. About 1849 the place of worship was moved to Lee Center, and the society name changed accordingly. From this the present Amboy church of that denomination has descended. In 1840 a Methodist class was organized in the vicinity of Binghamton where, in 1850, a house of worship was erected. When Amboy came into being the building was abandoned for the one early erected there.

One branch of the Mormon church secured a considerable foothold in the neighborhood of Rocky Ford, near which they were instrumental in having the town of Palestine laid out. At one time there were sixty members. The founder, Joseph Smith, visited friends at Palestine Grove, where he was arrested in 1843 on requisition of the Governor of the State, issued at the instance of the Governor of Missouri. In 1860 the annual conference of the branch referred to convened in Amboy.

A meeting for the organization of the Baptist church of Amboy was held March 24, 1855, resulting in the founding of the First Baptist church of Amboy. Messrs. Hill and Bryant were deacons and W. E. Ives clerk. Rev. P. Taylor was the first pastor, and services were held in a small church building, on Main Street west of the railroad tracks, which cost about $500. During Mr. Taylor's pastorate the present church building was erected at a cost of $4,500. The first public meeting held in the new church was addressed by Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, Ill., and J. V. Eustace of Dixon. Both were strong anti-slavery champions. At the end of the second year, Mr. Taylor resigned and was succeeded by T. H. Ball. The church was dedicated September 13, 1857, the sermon being preached by Rev. Silas Tucker, of Galesburg. Reverend Ball was succeeded in September, 1858, by J. C. Miller, who resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Thirtieth Illinois Regiment, Company "C" of which was composed of Amboy citizens, to each of whom a new testament was presented on their departure. This building had the only large audience room in the place, and was consequently the gathering place for war meetings which were incident to the period. Following Mr. Miller came W. R. Webb in May, 1861. During his pastorate the General Association of the State met here. Mr. Webb served as pastor four years and was followed in June, 1865, by Rev. J. H. Hazen, during whose term the parsonage was built and the church building put in thorough repair. Following Mr. Hazen was Rev. James Buchanan, who, acting as pastor, was in reality a supply. About 1870, Rev. M. T. Lamb came to the pastorate. August 27, 1871, the records were destroyed by fire. New records were opened March 26th following. September 8, 1872, George Westelius became pastor and resigned the last Sabbath in March, 1874. On the first Sabbath of the succeeding November, W. D. Clark was called. Succeeding Mr. Clark came N. A. Reed, who resigned June 8, 1881, to be succeeded by B. H. Humphrey on the 16th of the next October. He remained until September 25, 1882. Then came Mr. Fuller, who served temporarily for about a year. D. W. C. Hervey came to the pastorate in November, 1884, and was followed in February, 1887, by W. L. Jones, who resigned February 1, 1889. J. T. Mason followed the next April. His labors continued to the time of his death in 1896. T. B. Collins, the next pastor, served for two years, and was succeeded by E. W. Anable, who has now been serving the church for five years.

The second church to be built was by the Methodists in 1857. It was afterwards converted into a school house as already mentioned. A Rev. Mr. Thayer was the first pastor. The present church of this society was dedicated April 1, 1866.

The earliest religious society in the place came into being June 27, 1854, ante-dating the sale of town lots. It named itself "Church of Jesus Christ."

A Congregational Church was established June 17, 1856. Its first regular pastor was David Wert, and its first house of worship was dedicated April 1, 1858. The present edifice was dedicated June 10, 1866.

The Episcopal Church was established in spring of 1859 by organization of St. Thomas parish. Mr. Brodnax was the first rector. A suitable church was built but the date of its erection is not at hand.

The first Evangelical Lutheran Church in Amboy was formed by Rev. William Angelberger, of Franklin Grove, January 30, 1870, who acted as first pastor. Rev. Anthes was the second. Following him in succession came: W. Framm, G. Hagemann, H. Schmidt, H. Linder, S. E. Hoffmeister, F. W. Kampmeier, S. Pritschel, M. Ren and L. Lentz. Rev. H. F. Schmidt, of Dixon, the present pastor, has been in charge since Nov. 20, 1897. In May, 1876, it was changed to German Evangelical, a different denomination. William Framm was the first pastor. They purchased the old Congregational church in 1870.

In 1854 the Catholics of Amboy began holding service at the residence of Michael Egan. Father Anthony was the first to celebrate mass. The first building for the use of the society was erected in 1857, but before completion it was destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt and completed in the spring of 1859. The society owns a priest's residence on the same lot.

Under the management of Father Gallagher, the present incumbent, a commodious one-story brick building was erected in 1900 for the purpose of a hall to accommodate large gatherings.

The Free Methodists' Society was organized about 1864. Rev. Miller was the first regular preacher. The society was eventually merged into and replaced by the United Brethren. John Dobson and J. W. Lewis were the first pastors. In 1871 a meeting house was built.

The Advent Christian Church was organized at Binghamton in 1859, and later worshipped at Amboy. The society never built a meeting place.

Newspapers.—In February, 1855, the "Lee County Times" was launched with Augustus N. Dickens, brother of the noted author, Charles Dickens, as editor. It was fathered by the Amboy Printing Association, of which W. E. Ives, Alonzo Kinyon, Henry E. Badger, A. E. Wilcox and others were stockholders. By August 1st of that year it passed into the hands of H. B. Judkins, and Dickens ceased to be connected with the paper. When the paper passed out of the control of Mr. Judkins does not appear, but on February 6, 1856, H. C. Pratt was editor and proprietor. April 3, 1856, the name was changed to "The Amboy Times," with Cottrell & Pratt proprietors and H. G. Pratt editor. January 14, 1858, the name was changed to "Amboy Weekly Times" with Cottrell, Pratt & Miller owners—the first two being the editors. H. G. Pratt, Joseph Lewis and James F. Some—by the firm name of Horace G. Pratt & Company—became owners November 18, 1858. April 19, 1860, it was changed to "Amboy Times." Pratt, Shaw & Company proprietors, the firm being composed of H. G. Pratt, B. F. Shaw, of Dixon, and John Lewis. Beginning in May, 1861, a daily edition was issued, called the "Amboy Morning Daily Times," but survived only a few months. Mr. Pratt sold his interest to W. H. Gardner, July 31, 1862, and the new firm name was Gardner, Shaw & Company. Sometime between July, 1862, and March, 1863, the files for which period are incomplete, the firm of Pratt, Shaw & Company again appears, John Lewis being the "Co." Between June 30 and September 22, 1864, when the files are again incomplete, Lewis returned. August 10, 1865, A. J. Goff and B. F. Shaw assumed the proprietorship and, on the 17th of the following March, the name was changed to "Lee County Journal." Mr. Shaw had been elected Clerk of the Circuit Court in November, 1864. February 16, 1867, Burrington & Shaw became the publishers. December 12th of that year the paper was discontinued for "lack of support," but this difficulty seems to have been promptly removed, for the issue was resumed with the lapse of only two numbers. Mr. Shaw became sole proprietor January 16, 1868, and, on January 6, 1870, sold out to Stimpson & Corbus. March 24, of the same year, Stimpson stepped out, leaving Dr. J. R. Corbus sole proprietor. He sold out to Captain William Parker September 22, 1870, who, on the 20th of the next month, changed the name to "The Amboy Journal," by which the paper is still known. Capt. Parker sold to W. H. Haskell, September 7, 1872, who, in turn, sold to E. W. Faxon & Company, October 15, 1879, William J. Keho, manager of the office for twenty years and still at the same post, having an interest. October 2, 1881, Dr. Clark E. Loomis purchased it and remained sole proprietor and editor until January 1, 1889, when it passed into the hands of George A. Lyman, the present proprietor.

The "Amboy News" was first issued by W. M. Geddes, proprietor, at PawPaw, May 6, 1878, with Henry Adams local editor. With the issue of July 1, 1882, the proprietorship changed to the News Publishing Company, with Capt. William Parker as editor in chief and Henry Adams as local editor. From that date the paper has continued to be printed and published at Amboy. W. M. Geddes became proprietor and editor June 30, 1883. Henry Adams still continuing as local. July 12, 1884, J. H. Adams and J. H. Preston became owners under the firm name of Adams & Preston. October 18, 1884, J. H. Preston became sole owner. Mr. Preston having died from accidental injuries, his widow assumed the publication of the paper, February 19, 1897, with Chas. H. Eby, as editor and manager. March 3, 1899, Mr. Eby became editor and proprietor with C. F. Preston as assistant editor. January 5, 1900, E. E. Chase acquired an interest and the paper appeared under the firm name of Eby & Chase. It passed into the hands of Mr. Chase August 3, 1900, and in December 14 following Henry F. Gehant appeared as owner and editor. With the next issue Riley J. Whitney became manager. A. E. Dafeo succeeded to the ownership August 5, 1902, with B. L. Vaughan assistant editor, Riley J. Whitney continuing as manager until September 5, 1902, when R. G. Sherwood became editor and manager and was followed by E. O. Trickey November 28, 1902. G. L. Carpenter, the present editor and proprietor, purchased the paper and took charge July 3, 1903. The News issued a daily edition April 3, 1899, which was discontinued with number 22 of the same month.

Grand Army of the Republic.—The date of the organization of the first Post (No. 65) of the Grand Army of the Republic and particulars regarding it, are not accessible, as the records are supposed to have been lost or destroyed. Amboy Post, No. 572, was mustered in May 10, 1886, with twenty-four members. The first officers were: George Ryan, P. C.; C. E. Loomis, S. V.; W. H. Hyde, J. V.; A. P. Wenrick, Q. M.; George E. Young, O. D.; O. W. Grant, Surg.; C. W. Freeman, O. G.; C. D. Knowles, Adj.; A. Ousey, S. Maj.; Fred Kreahl, Q. M. S. The present officers are: George Blocker, Com.; C. D. Knowles, S. V. C.; B. F. Berkley, J. V. C.; M. T. Spencer, Adj.

Banks.—In 1868 Josiah Little established a private bank which continued until November 1, 1899, when it was organized as a National Bank, with $50,000 capital and $10,000 surplus, with Josiah Little as President; Lemuel Bourne, Vice-President; Fred N. Vaughan, Cashier, and H. H. Badger, Assistant Cashier. Mr. Vaughan has been connected with the bank continuously since 1864. The largest deposits were last year, when the sum reached $640,000. Normally they run from $500,000 to $600,000. Loans and discounts have averaged from $350,000 to $450,000. The bank occupies its own building with fixtures, and recently its safety devices have been greatly improved by the introduction of a system of electrical protection, and an additional vault lined with steel and made fireproof. In this respect it has no superior. Safety deposit boxes are being installed.

The "Amboy Bank" was organized in 1899, with Henry Kline as President and Cashier, and J. C. Preston as Assistant Cashier. It is a private institution with $100,000 personal responsibility. The deposits of January 1, 1903, were $100,000, and loans and discounts $150,000. Mr. Kline has been a resident of Amboy for the past forty-five years.

Bonded Indebtedness.—In the summer of 1872 the Chicago & Rock River Railroad was built through Amboy Township. To secure the construction of this road the town, by vote of 517 for the proposition to 92 against it, issued $100,000 of bonds. A bitter contest was waged in the courts against the payment of these bonds, resulting in judgments in the United States Courts against the town. These judgments were in part compromised by two issues of refunding bonds, some at the rate of 40 cents on the dollar, and some at 50 cents. Seven or eight years were consumed in these transactions and, when there seemed to be no further chance of compromise, 6 per cent. bonds were issued to the amount of $130,000 to meet the balance of the unsettled judgments. On July 1, 1899, this last issue had been reduced by payments to $93,500. Four per cent. bonds were issued to take up this outstanding balance. On this last issue $65,500 is still outstanding, the balance having been paid. The total amounts of judgments and costs, exclusive of interest for which the town thus became indebted, aggregated about $275,000. All the suits commenced by different bondholders were in the United States Courts and the litigation reached the Supreme Court of the United States. In all these contests the town was defeated.

Miscellaneous.—The Illinois Central brought to Amboy John B. Wyman as its Superintendent, of whom the town came to be proud as a General in the War of the Rebellion, where he laid down his life. He was the city's first Mayor.

August 5, 1856, a Fremont Club was organized in Amboy with John B. Wyman as President, Henry Badger as Secretary and W. E. Ives Corresponding Secretary. This recalls the visits of some of the men who afterwards became great. In the days of the Illinois Central building Geo. B. McClellan, in war times Commander of the Army of the Potomac, was the Civil Engineer of the road with headquarters at Amboy. And he who became Lieutenant General of all the armies and one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of commanders of modern times, Grant, was frequently in town buying hides for his Galena tannery. Abraham Lincoln, whose name and fame pales all others of his time, spoke to the people there in his campaign against Douglas in 1858, from the window-balcony of the office of W. E. Ives, who vouches for the veracity of these statements as to both of these great men.

September 11, 1856, Owen Lovejoy, who had attended an abolition meeting ten years before at the log school house west of Lee Center village, spoke at the corner of Main Street and Adams Avenue, and in October following, addressed the first meeting in the incomplete Baptist church, as already mentioned.

Amboy once possessed a court, the like of which was nowhere else to be found in the county. Alonzo Kinyon, one of the ambitious men of the period, was a member of the Legislature in 1869, and procured the passage of an act, approved, March 11th of that year, establishing "The Court of Common Pleas of the City of Amboy." It was an effort to duplicate the Circuit Court. The Judge and clerk were to be elected and receive the same salaries as the Judge and Clerk of the Circuit Court. The City Marshal was given the powers of a sheriff, and the court was empowered to appoint a Master in Chancery. The act, as approved, gave the court chancery jurisdiction, but another act was approved the same day taking away this power. Mr. Kinyon's plan was carried into effect by his own election as Judge, and the tribunal became known as "Kinyon's Court." It accomplished the purpose of its creation until the Constitution of 1870 went into effect and wiped it out. The records of the court were all destroyed in the fire of 1871.

In the fall of 1846 Rev. John Cross, of "Temperance Hill," now in China Township, called a meeting at a log school house about one mile west of Lee Center village, to form an abolition society. Owen Lovejoy, the great anti-slavery orator and leader, addressed the meeting, and in the course of his speech said he had sworn over the dead body of his brother eternal hatred of slavery. At the close of the meeting a "Free-Soil Club" was organized. Among those who became members were Martin Wright, Lewis Clapp, Sylvester Frisbee, Ransom Barnes, Joseph Farwell, Benoni Harmon, Daniel Frost, Ira Brewer, Moses Crombie and John Cross. Lovejoy addressed another meeting there that fall. In this same log school house, which Ira Brewer helped to build, Robert G. Ingersoll, the great agnostic of later years, attended school, his father being minister of the Congregational church in that section.

The Wasson school-house, which stood west of the road at the center of Section 14 in Amboy, was built about 1846, and was the first frame school building in the town. For many years it was the meeting center and rallying point of that section for miles around.

When the division of the county into towns under the township organization law was about to take place, it is said on good authority that a meeting was held at the Wasson school house to choose a name for the town. The choice was "Bath," but Lorenzo Wasson, who went to Dixon to meet the County Commissioners, took the responsibility of changing the name to "Amboy."

In the winter of 1854-5 the postoffices at Binghamton and Shelburn were discontinued, and one office was established at Amboy, with Orange D. Reed as Postmaster.

The Mayors of the city have been: J. B. Wyman, 1857; John R. Stevens, 1858; Jos. Rosebrugh, 1859; J. B. Wyman, 1860; W. E. Ives, 1861; C. M. Butler, 1864-5; C. D. Vaughan, 1866-7; Michael Egan, 1869-70; Isaac Edwards, 1871-3; Robt. Richards, 1874; Isaac Edwards, 1875-7; J. B. Felker, 1878 to March, 1883; Geo. Ryan, March, 1883, to March, 1884; J. B. Graves, March, 1884, to March, 1885; C. H. Wooster, two years, ending March, 1887; Michael Egan, March, 1887, to March, 1888; Geo. Ryan, March, 1888, to March, 1893; C. A. Wilcox, March, 1893, to March, 1895; E. E. Chase, March, 1895, to March, 1899; J. P. Johnson, March, 1899, present incumbent.

The Clerks have been: D. T. Wood, 1857; W. B. Andrus, 1858-9; R. H. Mellen, 1860-1; W. C. Sears, 1862-3; H. G. Pratt, 1864; N. H. Ryan, 1865-7; Lee Cronkrite, 1869; Everett E. Chase, 1870 to 1883; A. E. Merwine, 1883-4; Geo. E. Young, 1884-6; R. C. Bear, 1886-7; H. J. Masterman, 1887-9; M. J. Monahan, 1889-94; S. E. Appleton, 1894-5; H. Swisher, 1895-1901; F. A. Flach, April, 1901, present incumbent.

The population of the city of Amboy, according to the census of 1900, was 1,826. Its population in 1890 was 2,257. The population of the city and township in 1900 was 2,726, while in 1890 it was 3,139.

CHAPTER V.

ASHTON TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWNSHIP—TOWN ORIGINALLY NAMED OGLE—FIRST SETTLERS—EARLY CHURCHES—DESTRUCTIVE FIRES—BUSINESS HOUSES AND BANKING INSTITUTIONS—BUILDING STONE—SCHOOLS AND VILLAGE IMPROVEMENTS.

What is now the Township of Ashton was set off from the town of Bradford, by resolution of Board of Supervisors, at its February meeting in 1861, to be known as the town of Ogle. The first settlers in the neighborhood were C. Royce, J. Clark and I. Rosecrans, in 1835. In 1838 Andrew Drummond and John Weatherington, with their families, settled on the west side of Lafayette Grove. Erastus Anderson was the first settler within the boundaries of the township. His year was 1848. In a few weeks his brother Timothy joined him, and in December, his father. At that time there were only four houses within view, some of which are said to have been twenty miles distant. In 1849 a man by the name of Hubbard settled in the west part of the township. In 1852 Daniel Suter located near the present site of the German Baptist Church and Henry Sanders farther to the west. These comprise about all the settlers of what is now Ashton Township, up to the time the railroad was built in 1854.

The railroad company named the station "Ogle," which in time was dropped for the present name. The site of the village is claimed to be the highest point of ground between Chicago and the Mississippi River. It was platted as the "Town of Ogle," May 9, 1855, by Joseph Crawford, County Surveyor, for D. B. Stiles and Thomas D. Robertson. The first house was built in what was to be the village in 1854 by James L. Bates, and he kept the first store. The first warehouse was put up in the latter part of 1854. The next year S. M. Kifnes started the first blacksmith shop.

The first meeting house put up in Ashton was the Methodist Episcopal, in 1863. It was considered a temporary structure. The next year the Free Methodists erected a building, which is claimed to be the first one built by that denomination in the State. Indeed, the birthplace of the sect or society is said to have been just over the Ogle County line, where J. G. Terrol started it in 1860. The third church to be built was the Catholic, in 1866. The German Baptists erected their house the same year about a quarter of a mile south of the village. Next was the Christian church built in 1868. The Presbyterian church was erected in 1877. The denominations now maintaining service in the village, with present pastors, are the Methodist Episcopal, J. E. Honeywell pastor; Free Methodist (name of pastor not ascertained); Evangelical, C. Marth pastor; United Evangelical, W. Schuster pastor; Lutheran, H. Stauffenberg pastor; Presbyterian, W. J. Manifold pastor; Catholic, Thomas Finn pastor.

Fire has dealt cruelly with Ashton. In 1863 a grain elevator was burned, with estimated loss of $2,000. Flour mills were burned the same year; loss $60,000. In 1871 railroad property, consisting of the depot, two tanks and the coal-house containing 1,200 tons of coal, besides a lumber yard and four dwelling houses, were consumed; estimated loss, $75,000. In 1874 a hay-press and elevator were burned; loss $30,000. In the summer of 1889 fire consumed twenty-eight business houses in three hours. The village was still without any protection against fire, but the Dixon and Rochelle Fire Companies were on the ground in time to check the progress of the destroyer. The estimated loss from the last fire was $65,000, with an insurance of $17,000. Within twenty-four hours Mills & Petrie, bankers of the place, commenced preparations to erect new brick buildings, not only for themselves but to supply store-rooms for those who were not in position to build. In the summer of 1891, fire again did its work, consuming nearly all the frame business buildings spared by the fire of 1889. The estimated loss was $20,000 without insurance. The village now has a fire company of seventy-six members, equipped with fine hand engine, hose and cart, hook and ladder truck and two tank wagons.

The village possesses fifty-seven business places and offices; has four doctors, five blacksmith shops and two meat markets. Four grain elevators handle the grain of the section with a capacity of 45,000 to 60,000 bushels. Three are owned and operated by A. L. Clark & Son and one by Zeller & Hutchinson. The latter also conduct extensive sheep-feeding sheds and yards, where as many as 15,000 head have been fed, at one time, in preparation for the Chicago market.

But probably the most important institution of all, in a business sense, is the Ashton Bank, because it is largely the mainstay of the business interests. S. F. Mills and N. A. Petrie, under the name of Mills & Petrie, commenced banking in Ashton in September, 1869, and sold out January 1, 1903, to the Ashton Bank, which was incorporated about that time under the State Banking Law, with $25,000 capital and $5,000 surplus, and organized with N. A. Petrie as President; Geo. H. Mix, Cashier; and M. D. Hathaway, Vice-President. Deposits are about $140,000. During the long experience of Mills & Petrie, covering a number of financial panics, their business stood on a conservative basis, commanding the confidence of the community, and every check rightly drawn on them was promptly honored. The banking facilities have been added to by the establishment, early in 1902, of the People's Bank of Ashton, a private institution, with Booth & Lyons as proprietors.

Ashton village is underlaid with a superior quality of building stone, which has been on the market, in a small way, for a number of years. It admits of high polish and stands the action of acids better than most Illinois stone. Experts give it the credit also of resisting a higher pressure than any other building stone in the State, with but one exception.

The village has a large two-story public school building built of this stone. The school is graded and employs six teachers.

The cemetery is controlled by the "Ashton Cemetery Association," which was incorporated August 14, 1902.

The village put in a gas plant in the summer of 1903, which supplies satisfactory gas for street lighting and other purposes.

The population of the township, including the village, was 1,031 in 1890, and 1,125 in 1900; that of the village alone, in 1890, being 680 and, in 1900, 756. The village was first incorporated March 5, 1867, and again under the general law, July 23, 1872.

CHAPTER VI.

BRADFORD TOWNSHIP.

---

ORGANIZATION AND NAMING OF THE TOWNSHIP—FIRST TOWN OFFICERS—EARLY LAND-OWNERS AND FIRST SETTLERS—EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN
COMPANY.

The present town of Ashton originally belonged to Bradford, and was set off as Ogle by resolution of the Board of Supervisors in February, 1861. Bradford acquired its name from the circumstance that many of the organizers were from Bradford County, Penn.

The first town meeting was held at the house of Ralph B. Evitts, when the following officers were elected: Charles Starks, Supervisor; Ira Brewer, Town Clerk; E. W. Starks, Assessor; Samuel S. Starks, Collector; Ralph B. Evitts, Overseer of the Poor; Sherman Shaw, Stephen Clink and George Yale, Highway Commissioners; Samuel S. Starks and Daniel Barber, Constables; Elisha Pratt and LaFayette Yale, Justices of the Peace. Town meetings were held at private houses until 1856, when a meeting was held at the school house at Ogle Station (now Ashton.)

Many of the early land owners of the town first settled at Lee Center and, as their lands became subdued and they grew able to build, moved onto them. The first to erect homes within the bounds of the township were Sherman Shaw and Mr. Whitmore, the house of the latter having been built prior to 1839. Shaw's was built in 1840 on the northeast corner of Section 31. Owen Hillison soon followed in the erection of a home, having prior to this lived in a sod-house, and having made his way on foot from New York to Chicago and thence to Bradford. In 1838 Charles Starks located at Inlet, and the next year filed a claim on the east half of the northwest quarter and west half of the northeast quarter of Section 32, and built and moved onto it in 1842. About this time the Whipples located their claim a little north of this. In 1842 N. C. Yale moved onto Section 1. Prior to this Jesse Woodruff settled on Section 32 and R. B. Evitts on Section 29. About this time Stephen Clink built a stone dwelling on Section 33. In 1842 Elias Hulbert moved onto the south half of the southwest quarter of Section 19, and in 1845 John Hotzel, a bachelor, lived in a sod shanty on the east half of the southwest quarter of Section 31. He is said to have been the first German settler in the township. Mr. Bender came in 1845. Ira Brewer reached Lee Center in June, 1843, and the same year bought of O. W. Wright a claim to the west half of the northwest quarter of Section 32 for $40 in trade, and of a Mr. Sturdevant a claim to the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 31, with a ten-acre timber lot added, for $100. In 1849 he built a dwelling on the latter tract. In 1845 E. W. Pomeroy joined the settlement and soon became the owner of the west half of the northwest quarter of section 31. He and J. H. Gardner are credited with bringing the first reaper into the community.

In 1859 an Evangelical Church was built on Section 17 at a cost of $1,300. In 1874 an addition was made and a steeple erected, at a further cost of $2,700. The society was first organized at the house of John Hotzel.

Egbert Shaw is said to have been the first white child born within the township.

The Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Bradford, is one of the important institutions of the county. It was incorporated by special act of the Legislature, March 30, 1869, Ira Brewer, R. B. Evitts, Thomas S. Hulbert, Charles D. Hart, Valentine Hicks, C. F. Starks and George Hulbert being the incorporators. Ira Brewer was the first President and continued to hold the office for twenty-five years until advancing age forced him to retire. Thomas Hulbert was the first Secretary, serving one year. C. D. Hart followed for a like term. Samuel Dysart, the present Secretary, has served continuously since 1871. The present officers are: B. F. Lane, President; Samuel Dysart, Secretary; H. W. Hillison, Treasurer; Christian Gross, William V. Jones, Geo. Shafer and Wm. S. Frost, Board of Managers. It has paid over $60,000 in losses. The average annual outlay for salaries, clerk hire and all other expenses, has been less than $400. The Company has 750 members holding 860 policies, representing a total insurance of $1,586,155.54. The amount insured is increasing at the rate of about $50,000 yearly.

The population of Bradford, as shown by the Government census, was 720 in 1890 and 677 in 1900.

CHAPTER VII.

BROOKLYN TOWNSHIP.

---

PIONEER SETTLERS—FIRST MARRIAGE—COMPTON A PROGRESSIVE VILLAGE—WATER WORKS AND ELEC-TRIC LIGHT PLANT—WEST BROOKLYN VILLAGE—
BUSINESS HOUSES, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The earliest settler in Brooklyn Township was Zachariah Melugin, who came in the spring of 1834 and located on the northwest quarter of Section 4, in the grove which has since borne his name. The Chicago road ran along his south line, and here he soon built a tavern. A. V. Christiance and wife were the second to arrive at the grove, and located at the south side on the only thoroughfare, the Chicago road. This was in 1835. His log house also became an inn. Here a son, Cornelius, was born that year, being the first white child born in the township. In July, 1835, John Gilmore settled on the northwest quarter of Section 2. His son, W. W. Gilmore, was the second white child to be born in the township, his birth being only six weeks later than that of Cornelius Christiance. W. W. Gilmore became Supervisor of the town, and was one of the building committee of the board which had charge of the erection of the present Court House. William Guthrie located near by. In 1838 Oliver P. Johnson and wife came. When the Black Hawk War broke out, Mr. Melugin was living in the vicinity of Springfield in this State. He enlisted at Rock Island. After the close of the war he went back to his home. In the fall of 1833 he returned to Dixon's Ferry, where he was persuaded by Father Dixon and others to establish a stage station at the grove on the mail route between Chicago and Galena via Dixon's Ferry, on which stages commenced running January 1, 1834. Being unmarried, his sister Mary joined him the next spring and made a home for him until the following October, when he was married to Mary Ross. During this summer his sister was the only white woman at the grove. She visited Mrs. Dixon, at Dixon's Ferry, that summer, and there met John K. Robinson, who was the first school teacher in Mr. Dixon's family and who became her husband. The wedding occurred at the grove September 10, 1835, and was the first to be celebrated in that locality. Mr. Robinson built his log house about half a mile from Mr. Melugin's.

Two buildings contend for the distinction of being the first school house in the township. At a very early date a log school house stood within the grounds now occupied as a cemetery at the "Berg," and was also used for church purposes until 1859, when the first meeting house was erected. There was likewise a building known as the "Red School House," standing at an early date on the northeast quarter of Section 4, near its southwest corner. Which one of these was the earlier we have been unable to determine, but it is probable that one of them dates back as early as 1837. Prior to the coming of the school house, Zachariah Melugin, the pioneer, conducted in his own log cabin the first school in the township.

The first church to be organized was the Methodist, in 1837, at the dwelling of Mr. Melugin. The first pastor was Rev. Stephen R. Beggs. The first Sunday School was started by Rev. Haney of the Methodist Church, in 1847 or '48. A. V. Christiance was the first postmaster and Charles Morgan & Son were the first merchants in the place.

Compton.—Compton Village was platted in 1873 on land of Joel Compton, from whom it received its name, the survey having been completed May 8. The building of the railroad, now the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, that year, gave birth to the town. Located about three miles from the hamlet of Melugin Grove, most of the few buildings in the "Berg," as the latter was called, were early moved over to the railroad, as well to escape the inevitable decline of the older settlement as to participate in the prospective advantages of the new. The Methodist church, built in 1860, was one of the structures that migrated, and two hotel buildings, which took the names of the Compton and Young's Hotel, were also in the procession.

Compton was a corn field when platted, and the first house was a store built by Joel Compton in the corn stubble. It faced the railroad and was completed in the spring of 1873. The next house to go up was a small meat market, built by M. M. Avery that same spring, and the third was Mr. Avery's residence. The place has a grain elevator, which is owned and operated by Warner & Guffin. Its banking demands are provided for by the Farmer's & Trader's Bank, of which Charles Bradshaw is President, L. Carnahan, Vice-President, H. L. Fordham, Cashier, and A. B. Fordham, Assistant Cashier. The capital stock is $25,000 and deposits about $40,000. It has recently become a National Bank, and is about to occupy a fine new bank building. The village has two churches—the Methodist and United Brethren. It is equipped with an efficient system of waterworks, for private use as well as fire protection. Its streets are lighted by electricity, as are also many of its stores and homes. It has a graded school embracing three grades. Compton was incorporated as a village December 6, 1875.

West Brooklyn.—This village was laid out the same year Compton was, on land belonging to O. P. Johnson, D. L. Harris and R. N. Wood. The past few years has not witnessed a rapid growth of the place. With a population now claimed to be 425, it does a business in excess of what would be expected from a town of its size. It has two grain elevators, one operated by Charles F. Guffin and the other by the Atlas Grain Company of Chicago. The latter elevator, with its contents of about 15,000 bushels of grain, was destroyed by fire February 19, 1903, and it was at once rebuilt. The village has a prosperous private bank, which was opened by the present proprietor and manager, Henry F. Gehant, June 1, 1897. Its present capital is $10,000, with a surplus of $5,000 and deposits ranging from $50,000 to $75,000. It not only serves the community in a banking capacity, but meets the demand in matter of insurance, conveyancing and other conveniences, such as usually attach to an institution of its kind in a small town. The village is fortunate in being so provided.

Without referring to other lines of business the bank and elevators are pointed to as an index of the business transactions and importance of the place.

Brick and tile of a superior quality have been manufactured here, for about six years, by J. M. Beale & Co., the demand largely exceeding the output.

The school house was erected in 1874 at a cost of $1,200.

The first church to be erected in the place was the Methodist, about twenty-four years ago.

The membership of the Catholic Church, in and around West Brooklyn, is both large and wealthy, as is evidenced by the fact that, in 1902, they erected here a splendid church edifice at a cost, including decorations and furnishings, of $18,000. It is 48x98 feet and built of brick, with a spire 125 feet high. In the last five years at least $25,000 have been paid out by this society on church, parsonage and grounds, all of which has been accomplished under the pastorate of the priest in charge, Rev. A. H. Leising.

The church was dedicated September 5, 1902, with imposing ceremonies, Archbishop Muldoon, of this diocese, officiating. Excursion trains brought participants from neighboring towns, and, although the day was rainy, it is estimated that 5,000 people were brought to the place in honor of the occasion.

The village was incorporated under the general law, by order of the County Court, September 24, 1894.

According to census returns the township had a population, including Compton and West Brooklyn, of 1,154 in 1890, and 1,347 in 1900. Compton had a population, in 1890, of 234 and, in 1900, of 428. West Brooklyn does not appear in the census table of 1890, but is credited with a population of 279 in 1900.

CHAPTER VIII.

CHINA TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZED AS FREMONT TOWNSHIP—FIRST TOWN OFFICERS AND FIRST SETTLERS—SOME NOTABLE CHARACTERS—FRANKLIN GROVE—CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, FACTORIES, BANKS AND NEWSPAPERS.

When township organization was adopted in 1850, this town was named "Fremont." Later the present name was substituted at the solicitation of Russell Linn, an early settler whose native town in Maine was of that name. The following were the first officers of the town of Fremont: George R. Linn, Supervisor; Josiah Wheat, Clerk; Christian Lahman, Assessor; Moses Curtis, Collector; Jesse Hale, W. C. Robinson, Nathan Whitney, Highway Commissioners; Robert B. Sproul, Justice of the Peace; Moses S. Curtis and W. C. Robinson, Constables. The highest number of votes cast for any one office at this election was 46.

According to the most reliable information, Cummings Noe built the first cabin in China Township, in 1835 or '36. It stood about eighty rods north of the W. H. Hausen place. James Holly and his father-in-law, Charles Harrison, built in 1836. The "Minor House" was one of the early buildings. It formed the western part of the old "Bishop Hughes Hotel." Nathan Whitney came in 1835, as did Cyrus Chamberlain and Lockwood Miner the same year. The latter's father, Cyrus R. arrived in 1836. Mr. Whitney seems to have returned to his New York home, and to have made trips back to Lee County in 1836 and 1837, his family arriving February 8, 1838. In 1850 he introduced one of the first, if not the first, threshing machines in the country. He built, probably in 1838, the house which afterwards became the "vinegar house" at the nursery. In 1838 Amos Hussey arrived with his family and located on the south side of the grove.

In 1845 Christian Lahman and family and his father-in-law, Mr. Emmett, from Pennsylvania, were added to the meager settlement. Edward Morgan and family came in 1836. His son, John Wesley, was born the next year, and his is believed to have been the first birth in the grove. Edward Morgan built a double log cabin north of the timber. Jeremiah Whipple and family located near the "cave" which bears his name, in 1837. Hugh Moore and his brother Rufus landed in 1836, and their brother James the year before. They settled near Grand Detour. Silas Tolman and family reached Inlet in 1837 and joined the Franklin Grove colony early the next spring. Henry and Harrison Hausen, with Philip Stahl, came in 1838. The father, Charles Hausen, Sr., followed in 1840, leaving his son Charles at their Maine home to bring the mother and younger children later. The family in charge of the young son Charles, reached Franklin in December, 1840.

As early as 1840 Whipple's mill, on Franklin Creek near "Whipple's Cave," was sawing logs cut from the near-by woods, into lumber for building purposes.

E. C. Thomas and family arrived in 1839 and Nathaniel Yale and family came still earlier, in 1836. D. M. Bradstreet came in 1844. James Dysart arrived in 1846 and, by 1849, had secured land enough to provide each of his several children with a half-section.

The northeast portion of the northwest quarter of Section 34 was known as Temperance Hill. Here, on the tract now owned by W. F. Wolcott, lived John Cross, a Presbyterian minister, who gave the "hill" the name "Theoka," but this early gave way to the more suggestive one connected with sobriety. Cross was an anti-slavery fighter and a recognized and self-confessed conductor on the Underground Railroad. Indeed, he once boasted to Chester Badger that, in one load, he had sent twelve slaves on their way towards freedom. His home was one of the stations on the underground road. In 1848 Mr. Cross moved to Wheaton and became Principal of Wheaton College. Next east of Cross, Sylvester Frisbee settled, and still east of him, Mr. Hannum and family were living in a sod house as early as 1842, when Martin Eastwood and wife came into the neighborhood. Eastwood made a business of breaking prairie, and built a small house which could be hauled from place to place wherever his work happened to be. Nathaniel Lewis and family took up their abode here in 1843. Frisbee and all the settlers in the vicinity were zealous temperance people, and this fact is supposed to have suggested the name for the locality now marked by a row of hardy venerable pinus. The school house hard by perpetuates the name.

In 1871 the west half of the town of China was set off to form the town of Nachusa.

In the year when short-horn cattle (Durham) were considered the best breed, China was made prominent by its successful breeders. As early as 1854-5 Christian Lahman introduced high grade short-horns, and in 1867 Samuel Dysart and Henry Hausen went a step further with thorough-breds from Central Illinois. Mr. Dysart exhibited his stock at many fairs, at none of which he suffered defeat. He was awarded thirty-five first premiums and eighteen second premiums. Twice he was victorious in Iowa State Fairs. In 1870 he introduced the first pure-bred Berkshire swine.

For a considerable time the Whitney nursery was one of the leading tree distributors in this part of the State. It was established by Nathan Whitney in 1843, and was for many years continued by his son, A. R. Whitney, under whose management it became a large and prosperous institution. Mr. Whitney's failing health necessitated its abandonment some years ago. To those who are disposed to question the fitness of our soil and climate for fruit-growing, the fact may be recalled that, in 1871, W. H. Hausen sent from this town to the Iowa State Fair ninety-seven varieties of apples and fifteen varieties of pears.

Franklin Grove.—This name is said to have been given to the grove after the youngest son of Father Dixon.

In 1853 Christian Lahman, who owned the tract south of the railroad, platted about ten acres, now constituting the extreme south-west portion of the village, and christened it "Chaplin." What are now Main and Hughes Streets were its only thoroughfares, and the lots were numbered from 1 to 35. The plat was recorded in the Recorder's Office April 23, 1855. In 1851 George W. Pense started a blacksmith shop. In 1852 Charles Bill put up the first shoe shop. Charles Ambrose opened the first store in the fall of 1851 or spring of 1852. In 1854 H. I. Lincoln came with a stock of goods from Kendall County and continued in trade until a few years ago.

The first postoffice was opened about 1848, with Abram Brown as postmaster and A. R. Whitney mail carrier. Dr. Clark was the second postmaster and, during his term, the name of the office was changed to Chaplin. In May, 1854, Dr. George W. Hewitt located here, and in 1855 John C. Black came.

The town, as it at present exists exclusive of additions, was platted by Adrastus W. Tolman, Christian Lahman, T. D. Robertson and John Dement in 1853. In 1854 the railroad was completed and the regular train made its first trip December 3d of that year. A. B. Fitch was the first station agent of the road. The station being located in the new part of the town, drew business in that direction and changed the trade center. W. Leake started the first harness shop. The first elevator was built in 1854 by one Williams. S. J. Smith & Co. and L. M. Blaisdell opened lumber yards and Rufus Covill started a furniture store. Conrad Durkes, hailing from Oregon, Ogle County, was first to open a dry-goods store in the new section of the town. Mix & Losey followed soon after in the same line. In 1855 Jonas Clisbee built the hotel building north of the track, and Josiah Hughes put up the two-story stone hotel in the old town, which was still known as Chaplin.

Village incorporation was effected in 1857. Josiah Hughes, Jonas Clisbee, L. M. Blaisdell, S. J. Smith and A. W. Tolman were the first Trustees, Blaisdell being President and Smith Clerk. The village was again incorporated under special charter in 1865, the first officers under this organization being C. Durkes, President; Josiah Hughes, J. J. Lichty, Joseph Williams, Jonas Clisbee, George W. Brayton and Geo. H. Taylor, Councilmen. Under the general law it was once more incorporated in 1872.

Churches.—The first class of the Methodist Church was formed by Rev. Jas. McKean, a missionary, probably before 1840. Cyrus Minor was leader. The first Methodist church building was erected in 1863 during the pastorate of C. W. Wright. Prior to this the services had been held at the homes of the members and in school houses. Ministers having other charges officiated for a number of years. In 1853 and 1854 R. R. Bibbins, of Light House Point, preached every fourth Sabbath evening, and in the fall of the latter year, Henry Martin reorganized the class with James Welsh as leader. In the fall of 1855 M. Decker, of Lee Center, supplied the pulpit. Following him came A. D. Field, H. Richardson and Penfield. In 1860 W. T. Harlow, principal of the Seminary at Mt. Morris, drove twenty miles to fill appointments here. Other pastors have been:

C. Webster, L. M. Anderson, H. T. Giles, John Williamson, A. P. Hatch, S. T. Snow, Jas. Bush, A. J. Scott, J. Wardle, J. C. Cooper, A. H. Schoonmaker, Revs. Stire, Stuff, Satterfield, Bassett, Harris, O'Neal, Slaughter and Honeywell, the present incumbent. In 1902 this society tore down the old church and built a new one on the same spot, at a cost of $8,100. It was dedicated October 6, 1902.

January 1, 1861, Franklin Grove Presbyterian Church was organized. The first Board of Trustees consisted of G. W. Brayton, G. W. Hewitt, G. W. Pitcher, G. H. Brewer and Jeremiah Ketchum. W. W. Harsha, the pastor at Dixon, also acted as first pastor of this society. W. L. Lyons was the second pastor. Following him have been: W. Hare, A. F. Morrison, Spencer Baker, S. N. Vail, W. C. Cort, F. C. Cochrane, H. S. Jordon (May, 1881, to December, 1882); A. L. Sarchet (March, 1883, to March, 1884); William E. Holyoke (April, 1884, to April, 1885); W. H. McKee (April, 1885, to April, 1886); C. W. Anthony (December, 1886, to December, 1897); R. F. Cressy (May, 1898, to June, 1901); W. J. Manifold, the present pastor, from September, 1902. In 1865 this society built a church conjointly with the German Lutherans, which was used in common by the two denominations. In the fall of 1887 the Presbyterians built their present church, the lot and building costing $4,000 and the furnishings $995.

The German Lutheran Church was organized by Rev. William Uhl, of Dixon, but at what date we are unable to state. George Engel, George Fishback, George Kreitzer and John Genk were the first board of Trustees. A church was built but in what year we have not ascertained. The pastors have been: William Angelberger, Charles Young, C. A. Reuter, H. Staufenberg, Rev. Stolle. The writer has been unable to learn the names of any other, or to fix the date when these served.

The German Baptist Brethren Church, familiarly known as "Brethren" or "Dunkards," are very strong, both financially and numerically, in this section. The first families of the faith to settle here were the Lahmans and Emmerts, who came in 1843. The following year came the Riddlesbargers. Father Emmert was the first preacher. Christian Lahman was also a minister of the church. Their first house of worship was a small grout house on the Dixon road in the present town of Nachusa. It has been remodeled and enlarged. The society's cemetery is in the same inclosure. They also built a meeting house in Ashton and, in 1879, erected their Central Church building a little northwest of Franklin Grove. This denomination has no officiating pastors, but the office devolves on bishops and elders.

A Society of the Universalist Church flourished in Franklin Grove at an early day, and built a church here in 1856. The Hausens, John Fish, Jonas Clisbee, John C. Black and Isaac Twombly were early members. T. J. Bartholomew was the first preacher, J. O. Barrett, C. F. Dodge, Chase and Cook were pastors.

Schools.—The first and only school house in Franklin Grove was built in part in 1856. In 1867 it was enlarged and, in 1894, a new brick building costing $9,000 took its place. The first principal was T. W. Scott assisted by his wife. The school was soon graded into four departments—one primary, two intermediate and one high school. Five teachers are now employed.

In the early years school was kept during alternate weeks at Morgan's double log cabin and at Whipple's Cave.

About the year 1840 Lorenzo Whiting taught a school near "Tolman's Timber," a short distance from the present site of Franklin Grove. Miss Sarah Edmonds, who married James Nettleton, was also one of the early teachers, her service being in a school house east of the Amos Hussey homestead. Harry Godger is named among the very early instructors.

Cemetery.—In September, 1863, the Franklin Grove Cemetery Association was formed with Isaac Twombly as President, Conrad Durkes, Secretary, Joseph Williams, Geo. H. Taylor and W. S. Thompson, trustees, its purpose being to take care of and improve the then existing cemetery. This has been admirably done. There is no record in the County Recorder's office showing the incorporation of the association. The burial of Mrs. Holly, in 1839, is said to have been the first in these grounds.

Factories.—The Cheese Factory Association of Franklin Grove was organized in February, 1881, with A. H. Schoonmaker as President; N. Hausen, Vice-President, H. A. Black, Secretary and Treasurer, and A. R. Whitney, C. L. Anthony and Chas. Wertman, Directors.

The Wind Grist-Mill was built in 1874 near the southeast limits of the village, by J. L.

Strock, J. C., J. D. and D. F. Lahman, at a cost of $13,261. The wheel was 80 feet in diameter and, at its top, was 105 feet above ground. The enterprise did not prove to be profitable. The property changed hands several times, and was finally converted by J. L. Strock into a tile-factory, which was successfully conducted for a number of years until his death in 1888, and afterwards by F. D. and C. W. Lahman and F. A. Dow. A succession of dry seasons reduced the demand for tile and, in 1900, the machinery was exchanged for western land and the buildings sold.

In 1875 the copartnership known as J. D. Lahman & Company was organized for the manufacture of the Great Western Seeder, with J. D. and J. C. Lahman and J. L. Strock partners. A year or two later J. C. Lahman retired from the firm and D. F. Lahman became a member. J. L. Strock was the business manager. In 1889 J. D. Lahman bought D. F. Lahman's interest. To simplify natural complications that arise on the death of a copartner in conducting an industry of this kind, J. D. Lahman bought the J. L. Strock estate's interest in the factory and unsold goods, and closed the business in the two years following. H. N. Bratton & Company manufactured and sold a few machines for several years succeeding. The business grew from a small beginning to a brisk little enterprise, as many as 2,400 seeders being manufactured in a single season.

Camp Meeting.—On July 12, 1881, the Dixon District Camp-Meeting Association was organized with the following officers: Rev. Luke Hitchcock, President; Isaac Rive, Vice-President; Rev. I. E. Springer, Secretary; Rev. A. H. Schoonmaker, Treasurer. Executive Committee—Revs. Schoonmaker, F. P. Cleveland, R. M. Smith, G. W. Carr, F. G. Petrie and Messrs. R. B. Sproul and James Brown. Ten acres of ground in the timber just outside of the village was bought and suitably fitted up for camp-meeting purposes. The first meeting opened August 31, 1881, and successful sessions have been held yearly since then. It soon became recognized as one of the established institutions of the county.

Banks.—For a number of years Conrad Durkes furnished banking facilities for the community as an adjunct to his mercantile business. At different times other merchants—Henry A. Black, P. C. Rooney and possibly others—did the same. Having retired from trade

Mr. Durkes, in 1889, organized the "Franklin Grove Bank" under the State law with a capital of $25,000, and with J. D. Lahman, President; C. Durkes, Vice-President; W. C. Durkes, Cashier. The organization stands the same to-day except that, on the death of C. Durkes, his son Warren C. succeeded him as Vice-President and another son, Stelzer A., was made Cashier. The deposits the first year averaged about $20,000. They now average about $150,000 yearly.

Newspapers.—The only newspaper now published in the village is the "Franklin Reporter," which was started by John Blocker August 14, 1869. Dr. D. H. Spickler succeeded him in the proprietorship, September 7, 1871. May 8, 1875, T. W. Scott became its owner and John Blocker acquired an interest with him September 4, 1875. They sold out to D. B. Senger, August 5, 1876. October 16, 1886, E. E. Manning became publisher. June, 1889, T. W. Scott again became proprietor. W. T. Tuttle followed him March 13, 1891, and September 1, 1894, G. W. Gaver, the present proprietor, took the helm.

Other papers have appeared from time to time, but soon went out. The "Franklin Grove Gazette," printed at Dixon, the "Enterprise" and "Electric Light" were of this class.

The population of China Township, including Franklin Grove, according to census, was 1,361 in 1890, and 1,315 in 1900. The population of Franklin Grove was 736 in 1890, and 681 in 1900.

CHAPTER IX.

DIXON TOWNSHIP AND CITY.

THE OGEE FERRY ESTABLISHED—ARRIVAL OF JOHN DIXON AND FAMILY—OTHER EARLY SETTLERS—GOVERNMENT LAND OFFICE AT DIXON—THE TOWN INCORPORATED—IMPORTANT EVENTS IN LOCAL HISTORY—VISITATION OF CHOLERA SCOURGE—DISASTROUS FIRES—SKETCH OF "FATHER" JOHN DIXON—DISTINGUISHED VISITORS—LINCOLN AND JEFF DAVIS—CHURCH HISTORY.

In 1828 a Canadian half-breed, named Joseph Ogee, built a log cabin and established a ferry across Rock River at the present site of Dixon. John Dixon had, at this time, a contract for carrying the mail between Galena and Peoria, and induced Ogee to establish the ferry here on the mail route between the two points. There is authority for the statement that license was granted Ogee by Jo Daviess County—which then embraced Lee County—to keep this ferry, while there is credible authority stating that the ferry was unlicensed.

The banks of the river then sloped gently to the water's edge, instead of being abrupt as at present. This, it is said, was at that time the only crossing below Rockford, and the few settlers in that vicinity had to come to Ogee's or Dixon's Ferry for their mail.

In 1829 a postoffice was established at the ferry, and a man by the name of Gay appointed postmaster.

April 11, 1830, John Dixon, with his wife and family of five children, came to Dixon, bought Ogee's claim and ran the ferry, and in 1834 the name of the postoffice was changed from Ogee's Ferry to Dixon's Ferry.

Between the years 1832 and 1836 a plat of a town called Burlington was laid out on a part of the land now included in Adelbeld Park. In the latter year, it had three log houses. Some years ago John K. Robinson wrote that, in 1834, "a Mr. Kirkpatrick attempted to start a town one and a quarter miles below Dixon, on the place now known as Dr. Everett's farm," and tried to establish a ferry, but both town and ferry failed. Some time prior to 1840, the "Town of Oporto" was platted. Its location is not definitely ascertained; but from allusions to it found in early conveyances, it was probably a small piece of ground on the north side of the river, included in the triangular piece between Everett and Fellows Streets in Parson's Addition. Recently the plat of Oporto was discovered among ancient papers in the Recorder's Office at Galena, but was so poorly prepared that it gave no assurance of the exact ground it was designed to fit.

It must be remembered that, prior to 1840, all plats, including the original plat of the town of Dixon, were recorded at Galena, then, as now, the county-seat of Jo Daviess County. The first plat of the Town of Dixon to be recorded in the Recorder's Office of Lee County, is found in Book "A" of Deeds, page 62. It was made by Joseph Crawford, October 28, 1840, for John Dixon, Smith Gilbraith, William Wilkinson, and Bowman and Lane. On the margin of this plat is a note reading: "Numbers of lots in red ink, are the same as those upon the original plat recorded in Jo Daviess County." The "red figures" indicate that boundaries of the two plats were alike.

North Dixon was platted as "Town of North Dixon," April 22, 1842, by Joseph Crawford, for and under the direction of John Dixon.

For his first dwelling, Father Dixon occupied a log cabin partly built by Ogee and extended by himself, standing at the northwest corner of what is now First and Peoria Streets. It was ninety feet long. The site is appropriately marked by a bronze tablet, placed in the wall of the building standing on this corner by the Dixon Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The original dwelling was torn down in 1845.

In the spring of 1836, the first store was started by Chapman & Hamilton in an addition to Father Dixon's log house. Prior to this, however, in 1833-4, a man by the name of Martin kept a small stock in the block-house forming a part of the fort on north side of the river. Father Dixon also carried on quite a business, largely with the Indians, in the principal commodities in use in frontier life. In 1837 a dry-goods store was opened by S. M. Bowman & Co. on the corner of River and Galena Streets.

Joseph Crawford came to Dixon in the spring of 1835 and located on a farm in the "bend" near Grand Detour.

Dr. Oliver Everett reached Dixon September 3, 1836, which then consisted of four log houses, a frame house, a blacksmith shop and two or three houses in course of erection.

At the Presidential election in 1836, polls were opened in Dixon for Rock River precinct of Jo Daviess County, Ogle County not yet having been set off.

In the fall of 1840 the Government Land Office was moved here from Galena. John Dement was made Receiver and Major Hackelton Register. D. G. Garnsey became Receiver soon after, and John Hogan Register.

In 1841 a small stone two-story building was erected on the northwest corner of Ottawa and Second Streets, and for four years was occupied as the Government Land Office. The office was then moved to a grout two-story building standing at No. 115, Hennepin Avenue. It was taken down about two years ago to give place to the brick building now occupying the ground. The Land Office remained in that building as long as it was continued in Dixon.

In the winter of 1839-40, J. T. Little and S. G. D. Howard opened a dry-goods store on the corner of River and Hennepin Streets.

In June, 1841, William Cullen Bryant, the poet, visited Dixon and, on his return to his brother's home at Princeton, Ill., wrote of the place, in part, as follows: "Five years ago, two cabins only stood on the solitary shore, and now it is a considerable village with many neat dwellings, a commodious Court House, several places of worship for the good people, and a jail for the rogues, built with a triple wall of massive logs, but I was glad to see that it had no inmates."

In 1841 the now quite dilapidated old frame building on River Street, used as a livery stable (No. 114-116), was built by J. T. Little and occupied by Little & Brooks as a dry-goods store for a number of years, and afterwards by Webb, Rogers & Woodruff. It was in this store that P. M. Alexander took employment when he first came to the town, and where he continued to clerk until he embarked in business for himself.

March 20, 1843, an election was held on the question of village incorporation. Forty-four votes were cast, all in the affirmative.

A business roll-call of the town of Dixon, in the summer of 1845, would have shown: 6 lawyers, 3 physicians, 5 dry-goods and 3 grocery stores, 4 blacksmith and 3 wagon-shops, 3 tailors, 2 shoe-makers, 1 painter, 2 cabinet-makers, 2 harness shops, 1 bakery, 2 hotels.

In the first issue of the "Dixon Telegraph and Lee County Herald," May 1, 1851, the dam is referred to, and it is said that "a saw-mill is already in operation on the north bank, and a large flouring-mill is about to be erected on the other. A rope ferry is the means of crossing the river, which is in operation night and day. The stages meet here from almost every direction." A time table of the "Chicago & Galena Railroad," published in the same issue, closes with, "stages will connect at Aurora and St. Charles, for Dixon, Albany and Rock Island."

As early as 1845 Dixon boasted of a "Young Men's Lyceum."

July 29, 1851, a brass band of eleven members was organized, H. T. Noble, H. P. Wickes, B. F. Shaw, Andrew J. Brubaker, Henry Brookner, O. F. Herrick, T. H. Eustace and A. B. Judd being members.

At the Presidential election November 2, 1852, 327 votes were cast in the precinct, of which Pierce received 185 and Scott 138.

December 18, 1852, the first flour mill on the water power was completed. It was built by Brooks & Daley at a cost of $15,000.

March 7, 1853, Dixon was incorporated as a town (not city). The first Trustees were John Dixon, A. L. Porter, P. M. Alexander, Lorenzo Wood and L. Wynkoop.

April 16, 1853, the local paper notes that, after the murder of the Mormon high priest, Joseph Smith, his brother William, with a small band of followers, took up their residence about twelve miles south of town, where they have kept up their organization and meetings, and that, at the April term of the Circuit Court of that year, William's suit against his wife for divorce came on and the jury found in favor of the wife. May 4, 1854, he was in jail for "jumping bail." The "residence" referred to was Palestine Grove, where Mormonism gained quite a foothold. (See Amb-boy.)

May 21, 1853, "The Telegraph" records the advent of a milk wagon and dray.

The pioneer "strike" of the community occurred in March, 1854, during the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad through the town. The hands employed on the work struck for $1.25 a day. Frequent rows and knock-downs were the accompaniments.

In 1846 the first brick building in the town was erected. It is still standing as Nos. 109 and 111 First Street. The west half was erected by James and Horace Benjamin, and the east half by A. T. Murphy.

In 1854 one of the buildings which formed the nucleus of the present Grand Detour Plow Works, was erected by John Dement for manufacturing purposes. In this same year Exchange Block (Nos. 102 and 104 Galena Avenue) was erected by Stiles, Eustace & Webb, and Nos. 84 and 86 Galena Avenue, were built by P. M. Alexander and J. B. Brooks.

One hundred and thirty buildings were erected in 1855, among which were the brick building, corner of First and Hennepin (No. 124 First Street), erected by Davis Bros.; "Union Block" (Nos. 105-107 First Street), erected by Nash & Noble. This was originally four stories high, but in April, 1862, the fourth story being considered unsafe, was removed. The three-story brick building on the north side of First Street (No. 115) was erected in the fall of 1856.

In the fall of 1858 C. Godfrey & Sons, who then owned the Brooks & Daley mill on the water-power, completed the "Farmers' Mill," located on present site of electric power-house, lots 2 and 3, Mill Block.

The year 1854 was a very eventful one in the annals of Dixon, not only in matters of growth and development, but on account of the cholera scourge which afflicted it. There had been a few deaths from the disease prior to July 21, including those of Mrs. Alanson Smith and a few railroad hands; but on the 21st it became epidemic, breaking out in full force on Saturday the 22d. During that night many of the inhabitants fled into the country. The next day, Sunday, fourteen victims lay dead in the town. The total number of deaths from July 20th to August 7th by cholera was 34. Doctors Everett and Abbott, who were in attendance, give the following as the death roll: Mrs. Patrick Duffee and child, Michael Harris, Mrs. Jacob Craver, Wm. Lahee, Daniel Brookner and wife and Daniel Brookner, Jr., John Finley, Joseph Cleaver (Postmaster) and cousin of same name, John Keenan, Mrs. Cooley, Marsh, Mrs. Owen's child, John Connells, John Barnes, Elijah Dixon, Wm. Patrick, Benj. Vann, Mrs. Scheer, Cyrus Kimball and wife, Israel Evans, Mrs. Catherine Dailey, Mr. Peck, Edward Hamlin, Roderick McKenzie and wife, Mrs. Huff, Mr. Jones, Mr. C. Johnson, Owen Gallinger and E. Boswick.

October 12, 1854, Mr. Ferris Finch was occupied in the painting of the fine portrait of Father Dixon, which for many years hung in the Court House, and is now in the Public Library.

At an auction sale of town lots, made March 15, 1856, by Brooks, Eddy and Wood, the average price obtained was $52 a front foot for business property. A corner lot on First and Galena Streets (not stated which corner) brought $72 a foot. Property bought in 1848 for $225 sold for $3,000.

At the first election under the city charter 298 votes were cast against licensing the sale of liquor, and 170 votes in favor.

June 6, 1855, the Maine Prohibitory Liquor Law was submitted to popular vote and received 318 votes for to 38 against.

February 20, 1856, the "Nameless Minstrels" gave a concert, "the proceeds to go towards purchasing a fire engine for the corporate town of Dixon." The names of J. C. Ayres and H. T. Noble appear among the "talent."

In 1856 the excitement over the Kansas-Nebraska issue ran high and $1,000 was raised to aid bona fide emigrants to Kansas to assist in making it free territory.

July 14, 1858, the Lee County Agricultural Society was organized and held its first fair on fair-grounds near the cemetery, in October of that year. A similar society had been organized February 6, 1854.

July 30, 1858, the steamer "Rockford" arrived on its first trip up the Rock River.

December 4, 1858, the proposed city charter was submitted to vote of the citizens and by them indorsed. It was passed by the General Assembly and approved February 19, 1859. Two previous efforts to incorporate had been defeated at the polls.

August 10, 1859, the North Dixon depot of the Illinois Central Railroad was opened, with George L. Herrick as agent.

April 5, 1860, the "Dixon Improvement Association" was formed for the purpose of improving and beautifying the city by planting trees, etc.

In the fall of 1862 the Illinois Central Railroad replaced its wooden bridge with an iron one, on the same piers.

The "Quaker City" building (No. 209 First Street) was erected by Isaac Jones in the summer of 1862.

June 22, 1863, a "Society of Vigilance" was organized for the purpose of detecting and bringing thieves to justice, and reclaiming stolen property.

June 24, 1870, the Dixon Hose Company, No. 1, was organized with about thirty members—H. S. Dey, Foreman—and a week later, the Monitor Hook & Ladder Company was organized with W. N. Johnson as foreman.

June 2, 1870, the Dixon Park Association was formed, and held its first fair that summer on its grounds west of the city, now included in Maple Park.

January 12, 1871, the City Hall building, (frame) at the corner of Second and Hennepin Streets, was completed for use of the fire department.

November 30, 1876, the Opera House, erected by H. J. Stevens, F. A. Truman, J. D. Crabtree and W. D. Stevens, was opened.

December 4, 1879, trains commenced running on switch track connecting depots with water power. This track was paid for by citizens of Dixon with funds raised by subscription.

In 1892 a new frame passenger depot was built by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, about two blocks south of the old one. The latter, a small brick building, was the first to be occupied by the company and was permitted to hold its ground until the summer of 1903, when it was demolished.

Old Settlers.—It is well nigh impossible to give anything like a complete list of the early settlers of Dixon and immediate vicinity, but the following is offered as a partial roll of arrivals prior to 1850: John Dixon, 1830; Joseph Crawford, 1835; Dr. J. B. Nash, 1838; J. H. Moore, 1847; J. V. Eustace, 1843; Isaac S. Boardman, 1837; Oliver Everett, 1836; Joseph T. Little (who died this summer), 1839; Sally Herrick, who recently died at an advanced age, sister of Dr. Nash, 1840; Mrs. N. G. H. Morrill, who also died recently, 1838; John Richards and daughter Sarah, September 1, 1836; John L. Lord, 1838; Noah Beede and son, A. A. Beede, 1836; A. T. Murphy, 1840; Reuben Eastwood and son Sumner D., 1837; John Dement, 1840; W. W. Heaton, about 1840; Alexander Charters and son James, 1838; John Clute, 1840; Philip M. Alexander, 1838; Hiram Hetler and parents, 1837; David H. Law and parents, 1839; Daniel McKinney and parents, 1846; Andrew J. Brubaker, 1848; John H. Page, 1834; Joseph B. Brooks, prior to May 15, 1844. Mrs. E. B. Baker (Ann Elizabeth Kellogg) passed through here in 1828 with her father's family; they settled at Buffalo's Grove (Polo) and she became a permanent settler of Dixon in 1846; Stephen Fuller arrived in 1836; Joseph Brierton and son Sylvester, 1838. (Wm. S., the son of Joseph, was born the next year.) Of these all but the following have passed to the "great beyond:" Mr. Moore, Miss Sarah Richards, Mrs. Murphy, S. D. Eastwood, Mr. Clute, Hiram Hetler, Dr. D. H. Law, Mr. Brubaker, Mrs. Baker, Mr. Fuller, Sylvester and W. S. Brierton.

FIRES.—In 1846 the first recorded fire visited the town, consuming the Phoenix Hotel, Stiles & Eddy's Store (Bowman's old stand), corner of Galena and River Streets.

October 14, 1859, a disastrous fire occurred extending on both sides of First Street from Hennepin west. Seventeen buildings were destroyed. The estimated loss was over $50,000; insurance, $10,200.

January 29, 1860, John Dement's machine shop, opposite the Mills on Water Street, was burned out, ruining the machinery—loss $25,000; no insurance.

March 7, 1861, three buildings on or near the northwest corner of First and Galena Streets were destroyed by fire.

March 3, 1871, three buildings in center of the block on north side of First Street, between Hennepin and Peoria, were destroyed by fire—loss $4,000.

November 30, 1871, St. James Hotel (formerly Shabbona House) was burned to the ground.

March 12, 1873, the Western Knitting Mills were entirely destroyed by fire—loss $20,000. The Flax Factory adjoining was damaged to the extent of $5,000.

December 7, 1875, a fire broke out in the upper story of Becker & Underwood's Flouring Mill, resulting in a loss of $13,000. The main building of the Dixon Power & Lighting Company now occupies the ground.

April 8, 1880, the most disastrous fire that ever visited Dixon broke out at one o'clock in the morning, at the water-power. In an hour all the buildings on the north side of the race, were consumed. They consisted of the double stone building—one-half of which was owned by Caleb Clapp and the other half by John Dement—Thompson's Flouring Mill and that of Becker & Underwood. The only pumps affording fire protection were on the race in front of these mills, and they were soon disabled. The Amboy Fire Company, with its engine, was sent for and its timely arrival and efficient work saved the buildings on the opposite side of the street. When the flames reached the Becker & Underwood Mill there was a terrific explosion, cause, it was supposed, by the combustion of flour dust. Men were in the building at the time striving to check the fire, two of whom, Ezra Becker and William Schum, were killed, while ten others were wounded more or less seriously. The total loss was $190,000; insurance, $66,900.

The interior of the Catholic Church was entirely destroyed by fire May 7, 1887.

On the morning of June 3, 1903, all of the Opera House above the first floor within walls, was destroyed by fire; insurance paid, $12,000.

Biographical Sketch of Father Dixon.—John Dixon was born in the Village of Rye, Westchester County, N. Y., October 9, 1784. On reaching his majority he moved to New York City where, for fifteen years, he was the proprietor of a clothing store and merchant tailoring establishment. He was actively interested in the temperance cause and religious matters, and became one of the directors of the "Young Men's Bible Society of the City of New York," organized February 11, 1809. It was the first Bible Society established in the United States, and developed into the American Bible Society of the present day. When Fulton took his first steamboat on its trial trip up the Hudson, Mr. Dixon was a passenger and insisted on paying fare against the inventor's protest. He thus came by the distinction, not only of riding on the first steamboat, but of paying the first fare for such a ride.

Being threatened with pulmonary disease, he left New York in 1820 for the West with his wife and children, the means of transportation being a covered wagon drawn by a single team. On reaching Pittsburg a flatboat was purchased on which they embarked with their team and belongings, and floated down the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill., where they disembarked and proceeded with their wagon across the trackless prairies to the locality where Springfield now stands. On Fancy Creek, nine miles from the site of the future capital, he located after over seventy days' journey. Early the next year Sangamon County was organized. At the first session of Court in the new county, John Dixon was foreman of the grand jury. In 1825 he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court and Recorder of Deeds for Peoria County, necessitating his removal to Peoria, then also known as Fort Clark. Northern Illinois was not then divided into counties and, within the territory attached to Peoria County were the voting precincts of Galena and Chicago. This whole region, which now embraces thirty counties, then had but 1,236 inhabitants.

While Mr. Dixon was thus engaged at Peoria, the Government established a mail route from that point to Galena, crossing Rock River at the present site of Dixon, mail to be carried once in two weeks on horseback. Mr. Dixon secured the contract. In order to effect safe passage of the mails over the river, he induced a French and Indian half-breed by the name of Ogee to establish a ferry, which was later purchased by Mr. Dixon, who with his family moved to this point April 11, 1830, and the crossing was thereafter known as "Dixon's Ferry." Whether this is the same "Joseph Ogee" referred to in the treaty of Prairie du Chien, heretofore quoted, nowhere appears, but it is highly probable.

The Winnebago Indians were occupants of a large part of the country, and Mr. Dixon soon established business relations with them and secured their entire confidence which, on the return of the Sacs and Foxes in 1832, proved to be of great value to himself and family, and he reciprocated with services equally valuable to them. His unflinching integrity and strict temperance habits served often to protect his dusky friends from the exactions of unscrupulous traders. Owanico, or "Jahro," chief of the Winnebagoes, became an active disciple of temperance. Even at that early day, Mr. Dixon's hair was so white that he was known among the Indians as "Na-chu-sa" (the white-haired.)

In 1838 Mr. Dixon was appointed by the Governor of the State one of the Commissioners to carry on the system of internal improvement then inaugurated, and later was elected to the position by the Legislature. Although the movement was ill-conceived and resulted in ridiculous failure, no fault was ever attached to the Commissioners.

The acquaintance which Abraham Lincoln made with Father Dixon, during the Black Hawk War, was never forgotten by Mr. Lincoln; and when the great man had been elected President, and before his departure from Springfield to assume the office, Father Dixon called on him. Mr. Lincoln eagerly recalled the early friendship and volunteered a promise, unsolicited on Mr. Dixon's part, that he would see that his old friend was made Postmaster of the city he had founded; but when the time for the change came, another secured the post. By some political trick the commission had been obtained without Mr. Lincoln's knowledge. On being apprised of it, the President was indignant and mortified, "for," he said, "he had promised it to Mr. Dixon." This incident is vouched for by unquestionable authority.

In 1840 Mr. Dixon visited Washington, his mission being to procure the removal of the Government Land Office from Galena to Dixon. It is needless to say that he succeeded. He enlisted the interest of General Scott, who had made his acquaintance while serving in the Black Hawk War, and thus reached President Van Buren, who promptly caused the desired order to be made.

Mrs. Dixon was a woman of superior attainments, who exerted an active moral and religious influence in the community, and was a worthy companion for so exemplary a man.

Mr. Dixon died at his home in North Dixon, July 6th, 1876, universally respected and beloved, having nearly attained his ninety-second year. His wife and ten children had all departed before him, but grandchildren and other family connections were about him and tenderly ministered to him to the last. Though he had once owned the tract on which the city which bears his name now stands, and had been afforded many opportunities to accumulate a fortune, he died a poor man. The prevalent craze for speculation seems to have passed him by. He was modest, gentle and retiring by nature, a great reader and a man of large intelligence. Current events and the affairs of the nation and the world at large were of absorbing interest to him up to a short time before he was taken. His generosity and public spirit are well indicated by the fact that, in plating the town of North Dixon, he dedicated Oak Park to public use, and in laying out the town of Dixon south of the river, he gave Market Square to the public, and donated to the county the Public Square on which the Court House now stands. It is generally understood that he also donated 80 acres of land adjacent to Dixon to aid in the erection of the first Court House.

His funeral was the occasion of a demonstration seldom accorded a modest, private citizen having no official claims to distinction. It occurred on Sunday following his death. From all the surrounding towns came delegations and societies to pay their last respects to his memory. Business houses and public buildings were draped in mourning. The body lay in state at the Court House under guard of Sir Knights Templar, and for hours the people streamed by to take a last look at the venerable founder of the town. At a meeting of citizens, held the Friday evening before his burial, a touching memorial was adopted, in which the rare tribute was pronounced that he was a man of great strength of mind, force of character and determination of purpose; yet he had lived and died without an enemy. Forgetful of himself, he lived for others a pure and unselfish life. He was that "noblest work of God"—"an honest man." No life admits of a higher encomium, nor can any city boast of a name which should carry with it, into all the arteries of municipal life, more of manly virtue and civic righteousness than the one which this noble pioneer gave to the town he founded, and on whose infant life he impressed the seal of his fine personality. A monument to his memory was erected and dedicated in 1892, in Oakwood Cemetery, by popular subscription, at a cost of $1,000.

(For further notice of Father Dixon see "Black Hawk War.")

Distinguished Visitors.—Dixonites, like all the rest of creation, recall with satisfaction the distinguished personages who have tarried within their borders. Abraham Lincoln, the Immortal, heads their list. He was first here as a Captain of Militia during the Black Hawk War, and again as private on a second and third enlistment. Lieut. Jefferson Davis, of the regular army, who became President of the Southern Confederacy, and Lieut. Robt. Anderson, also of the regular army, who in April, 1861, defended Fort Sumter against the Confederacy's rebellious assault, were also here at the same time. That Davis was here has been questioned, but no longer admits of doubt. Lieut. Col. Zachary Taylor, afterwards President of the United States, and Gen. Winfield Scott were also of the number. It has often been asserted, and generally believed, that Lincoln was first mustered into the service of the Government at Dixon's Ferry, and that, as a part of the procedure, Lieut. Davis administered the oath of allegiance to him. Father Dixon and Col. John Dement so understood it, and it is said upon creditable authority that Mr. Lincoln so stated. But it may not be true. Mr. Frank E. Stevens, who, by the way, was Dixon born and bred, in his recently issued exhaustive work on the Black Hawk War, reproduces a letter from Maj. Buckmaster, under whom Captain Lincoln's company was serving, dated May 9, 1832, at mouth of Rock River, in which he writes that they were mustered into the service of the United States the day before by Gen. Atkinson; and the author submits this as conclusive proof of the fallacy of what has been so long and fondly entertained as true.

Certain it is, that this letter casts another shadow over the subject. If Mr. Lincoln was sworn into the service at Dixon, it is of course possible that Lieut. Davis was the mustering officer, but rather more probable that Lieutenant Anderson performed that function. We have said in our notice of the Black Hawk War that Lincoln entered the service three times before the war terminated. He was discharged from the first company at the mouth of Fox River, and there re-enlisted for twenty days as a private in Capt. Iles' Company. Lieut. Anderson being the officer who then mustered the company in. At the expiration of the twenty days, these men returned and were mustered out at Fort Wilbourn, located between LaSalle and Peru. On the following day Lincoln was mustered in as a private in Capt. Early's Company, this being his third enlistment. June 21st the company reached Dixon's Ferry, and thence moved north to Whitewater River, where it was mustered out July 10, 1832, the men returning homeward by way of Dixon's Ferry.

It follows, therefore, that there was only one opportunity for Mr. Lincoln to have been mustered in at Dixon, and that was when his command reached here on its march from the mouth of Rock River, where Major Buckmaster writes the troops were sworn into the service. But it must be looked upon as little less than marvelous, that Father Dixon and John Dement, both of whom were active participants in the war and were brought in constant contact with both Lieut. Anderson and Lieut. Davis, and became well acquainted with Mr. Lincoln, should be mistaken; and it is still more remarkable that Mr. Lincoln himself should state that he was sworn in here, if, in fact, it occurred at the mouth of the river, as deduced from the letter from Maj. Buckmaster. It is possible, of course, that, for some reason, Lincoln may not have been with his company at the time of the muster referred to by the Major.

There is no question but what Lincoln was at Dixon on other occasions. He had become well acquainted with Joseph Crawford, who had served with him in the Legislature, and who, being a brother Whig, was a great admirer of Mr. Lincoln. Lincoln is remembered to have visited Dixon at one time, when he sought out Mr. Crawford, if indeed he was not actually entertained at the Crawford home. He also knew Judge J. V. Eustace, whose acquaintance he had formed at Springfield, and on one of his visits here called on the Judge. One occasion was when he spoke in Court House square, September 8, 1856, in the Presidential campaign of that year. The probable spot where he addressed the people has been recently marked by a large boulder, placed there by the Dixon Post G. A. R., bearing an inscription commemorative of the event. A number of citizens still living were present. A communication from one of the audience whose identity is not revealed, is referred to in "Scribner's Magazine" for April, 1878, p. 884, in which the writer says: "Lincoln spoke in the grove in the Court House square, Dixon, Ill. I think you (Noah Brooks, to whom the letter was addressed) and I sat together and made a little fun of his excessively homely appearance. He was dressed in an awkwardly fitting linen suit, evidently bought ready made at a country store, and intended for a man at least five inches less in stature than he was, the vest and trousers not meeting by at least an inch and a half, and the last named garment being short at the feet. Lincoln made, on that occasion, his second speech on a Republican or Free-Soil platform. No other speech I have ever heard made such a lasting impression on my mind."

In Herndon's "Life of Lincoln," it is stated on authority of Mr. Horace White, then correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, who later became its editor, that Mr. N. B. Judd and Dr. C. H. Ray, then editor of the Tribune, met Mr. Lincoln at Dixon in conference the day before his memorable debate with Douglas at Freeport. It is known by those intimately associated with Mr. Lincoln at this time, that in the debate he contemplated putting to Douglas the following question: "Can the people of a United States territory, in any lawful way, against the wish of any citizen of the United States, exclude slavery from its limits prior to the formation of a State constitution?" The politicians close to Mr. Lincoln feared the consequences which would follow, and endeavored to persuade Mr. Lincoln to desist. Mr. White writes that this was the purpose of the conference at Dixon.

We are able to state, on authority of Mr. B. F. Shaw of Dixon, who was then conducting a Republican paper (The Telegraph) here and was deeply interested in current events, as well as a great admirer of Mr. Lincoln and a staunch champion of the cause he advocated, that this reported interview never, in fact, took place. One thing is practically certain; that if such a gathering occurred, he would have known of it. On the contrary, he was at the Illinois Central depot when the large excursion train, with Mr. Lincoln aboard, passed through Dixon on its way to Freeport on the day of the great debate, and on a regular train, a few hours later, he himself reached Freeport in time to hear the discussion. It might be added that he found on the train Owen Lovejoy, with whom he was acquainted, who was likewise on his way to Freeport. Mr. Lovejoy was very much disturbed over certain references which Mr. Douglas had made to him in his speech at Ottawa; and, after the debate was over, Mr. Shaw was a prime mover in bringing Mr. Lovejoy before the assembled crowd where, standing on a dry goods box in front of the Brewster House, he delivered one of the most eloquent, as well as fiery, philippics ever heard. In this connection the writer may say that, in conversation he heard Gen. S. D. Atkins, of Freeport, relate that he was present in Lincoln's room in the Brewster House on that eventful day, when several intimate friends of Mr. Lincoln were laboring with him to withhold the question above quoted, which he still expected to propound to Mr. Douglas; that Mr. Lincoln patiently listened to all that was said, and after reflecting some time without speaking, announced his determination to stand by the question, saying that while it might defeat him as a Senator, it would prevent Douglas from ever becoming President. The question was put and the predicted result followed.

Albert Sidney Johnson and Joseph E. Johnson, both of whom became leading Generals on the Confederate side in the War of the Rebellion, Col. Nathan Boone, a son of Daniel Boone, John Reynolds, Governor of the State, and Gen. E. D. Baker, one of the brilliant orators of the then future, who was killed early in the war of the Rebellion at Ball's Bluff—these, with many other notables, made the acquaintance of Father Dixon at Dixon's Ferry. Father Dixon's account book of those days shows a loan to Gen. Scott of $6.50, for which Scott gave his note.

In 1843 Margaret Fuller, a talented writer and one of the literary circle of Boston and Concord, which included Emerson, Channing, Alcott, Hawthorne and others who became eminent, passed through Lee County in what was doubtless an emigrant wagon or "prairie schooner," en route from Chicago to Oregon, Ogle County. In her book, "At Home and Abroad," she speaks of a night spent in a tavern at Paw Paw. The ladies of the party slept in the bar-room, from which its drinking visitors had been ejected at a late hour, the supper table serving as Miss Fuller's couch and the doors, of course, remaining unlocked. They crossed Rock River at Dixon's Ferry and spent three days at Hazelwood, "place chosen," she writes, "by an Irish gentleman ('Gov.' Charters), whose absenteeism seems to be of the wisest kind." "If you descended a ravine at the side to the water's edge, you found there a long walk on the narrow shore, with a wall above of the richest hanging wood, in which they said the deer lay hid." Reference is made to the commodious dwelling and the log cabin, the latter being at this writing still standing on the spot. Dwelling on the beauty of the surroundings, she adds: "It seems not necessary to have any better heaven, or fuller expression of love and freedom, than in the mood of Nature here." On parting she left a poem entitled, "The Western Eden," which would be quoted here but for lack of space.

In the days when the lecture platform attracted the ablest and most talented men of the country to appear before the people, several whose names deserve to be mentioned addressed Dixon audiences. Among these were Horace Greeley, who was here twice: T. Starr King, who later moved to California, and was one of the great forces in that State for patriotism in the days of the Civil War. Here also lectured Ralph Waldo Emerson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Bayard Taylor, Henry Ward Beecher, Joshua R. Giddings, Horace Mann, John G. Saxe and others of less note.

That most charming poet, William Cullen Bryant, who wrote so sweetly of nature, visited Dixon, as indicated by letter already quoted, and was the guest of his brother-in-law, Dr. Oliver Everett, when this entire country was a vast field of virgin prairie, covered with wild flowers, and its lakes and river frequented by birds of gorgeous plumage unharassed by the sportsman's gun. It was on that visit that Mr. Bryant was inspired to pen that most beautiful of his poems, "To a Waterfowl," in which this verse appears:

"There is a power whose care

Teaches the way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—

Lone wandering, but not lost."

Churches.—The first sermon preached in Dixon was in the fall of 1834 by a Methodist missionary named Segg. His field of labor extended from Apple River, in Jo Davies County, to Prophetstown, in Whiteside County, and he made the circuit once in four weeks.

In 1837 a Methodist class was formed with S. M. Bowman, E. A. Bowman, Maria McClure, John Richards, Ann Richards, Caleb Tallmage and Amanda Tallmage as members, and in 1839 T. D. Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Ayres were added. Preaching services were held at intervals of six weeks over Bowman's store. The circuit preachers conducting services were Robert Dunlap, Barton Cartwright, Isaac Pool, Riley Hill, Luke Hitchcock, Richard Blanchard, Philo Judson and W. H. Cooley. W. Wilcox was appointed to Dixon in 1843; David Brooks in July, 1844; S. P. Keyes, August, 1845; Milton Hawey and R. W. H. Brent, August, 1846; R. P. Lawton, 1847; William Palmer, 1848; Thomas North, 1850; James Baume (father of Judge Baume of our Circuit Court), September, 1852; J. W. Agard, 1854; Wilbur McKaig, September, 1855; N. P. Heath, 1857; L. A. Sanford, August, 1858; S. G. Lathrop, 1859; O. B. Thayer, September, 1862; W. H. Smith, March, 1864; G. L. Stuff, 1864; T. C. Clendenning, 1865; George E. Strobbridge, 1867; J. H. Brown, 1869; John Williamson, 1871; Isaac Linebarger, 1874; G. R. Van Horn, 1876; A. W. Patton, 1879-80; F. P. Cleveland, 1880-81; O. F. Mattison, 1881-84; M. E. Cady, 1884-87; F. H. Sheets, 1887-88; C. A. Bunker, 1889-90; S. Earnsey, 1890-93; O. H. Cessna, 1893-98; J. D. Leek, 1898-1900; William Phillips, 1900-02; William Craven, 1902, present incumbent. (Beginning with 1864, the term of service of each circuit rider began uniformly in October, immediately after the adjournment of the Annual Conference.)

In the summer of 1843 the first Methodist church building was completed. It was a brick structure and is still standing in good state of preservation, at No. 117 Second Street, opposite the Court House. It was dedicated that summer by Presiding Elder John T. Mitchell. The board of trustees consisted of J. P. Dixon, E. Edson, O. F. Ayres, L. G. Wynkoop, Thomas McCabe, Joseph Brierton and S. M. Bowman. A Union Sunday School was organized which, on July 15th of that year, had eight teachers, sixty scholars and a library of ninety volumes. O. F. Ayres was Superintendent; T. D. Boardman, Secretary; J. W. Clute, Librarian.

In 1854 a Methodist church was built where the present one stands, corner of Second Street and Peoria Avenue. March 1, 1855, it was dedicated by Rev. Wm. McKaig. The cost of the building, including furnishings, etc., was about $15,000. August 31, 1876, it was rededicated after extensive repairs had been made. This building was torn down to make room for the present structure, which was completed in December, 1892, at a cost of $30,000. The next year a parsonage was built adjacent to the church, at a cost of $3,500.

May 28, 1838, the "First Regular Baptist Church of Dixon and Buffalo Grove" was organized at Buffalo Grove (now Polo.) Elder Thomas Powell, a missionary, was Moderator of the meeting. The original members were: Houlard Bicknell, Rebecca Dixon, Elizabeth Bellows, Jerusha Hammond, Sarah Kellogg, Martha Parks and Ann Clarley. At the end of four years there were seventy-two names on the membership roll.

January 13, 1841, the present corporate organization of the Baptist Church was effected under the name of the "First Baptist Church of Dixon." April 16, 1842, the congregation was divided into two churches, Buffalo Grove and Dixon. The former has since become extinct. Pastors since the organization have been: B. B. Carpenter, June, 1840, to October, 1844; Burton Carpenter, December, 1844, to March, 1845. William Gates filled the pulpit occasionally, and William Walker about four months between March, 1844, and April, 1847, when E. T. Manning became pastor for one year. S. S. Martin was pastor for one year in 1849. G. W. Benton supplied the pulpit for about six months between Martin's pastorate and August, 1851, when John E. Ball became pastor and remained about four years. Anson Tucker served eleven months from May, 1855. W. R. Webb came in June, 1856, and continued over four years. William G. Pratt served one year beginning in March, 1861. W. S. Goodno came in September, 1862, serving two years. J. H. Pratt became pastor in October, 1864, and continued nine years. D. F. Carnahan followed in August, 1874, and O. P. Bestor in August, 1877, who remained until October, 1882. Rev. W. H. Parker from January, 1883, to September, 1886; John F. Howard, October 10, 1886, to September 1, 1890; William D. Fuller, March 4, 1891, to May 24, 1892; Hector C. Leland, from September, 1892, to February 1, 1899; Wm. C. Spencer, the present incumbent, came March, 1899.

May 5, 1849, the Baptist congregation dedicated their first house of worship. Rev. Jacob Knapp preaching the sermon. It was a brick building, situated on the west side of Ottawa Street at corner of the alley next north of First Street. It was abandoned as a church when the present edifice was completed, but was used in connection with a lumber yard until spring of 1899, when it was torn down.

October 1, 1869, the corner-stone of the present Baptist church was laid with appropriate ceremonies, and the building was dedicated in August, 1872, Rev. Mr. Ravlin delivering the morning sermon and Rev. J. A. Smith the evening sermon. June 23, 1878, the fortieth anniversary exercises of the Dixon Baptist Church were held in its house of worship.

A correspondent, writing from Dixon to a Rockford paper in summer of 1845, says the place then had "four congregations: Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal and Congregational, and one church structure—that of the Methodist."

"The First Evangelical Lutheran Congregation of Lee County" was organized August 20, 1848, in the barn of J. N. Burket, east of Dixon, by Rev. Jacob Burket. The name was changed November 12, 1853, to "St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church." The pastors have been: Jacob H. Burket, who continued in charge until August, 1850; Ephraim Miller, May, 1851, to April, 1852; Charles Young, May, 1852, to August, 1853; William Uhl, September, 1853, to 1855; D. Harbaugh, July, 1855, to July, 1856; William Uhl, September, 1856, to July, 1858; J. L. Guard, July, 1858, to 1861; J. R. Keiser, September, 1861, to October, 1864; A. A. Trimmer, spring of 1865 to 1870; N. W. Lilly, October, 1870, to 1874; S. S. Waltz, September, 1874, to April, 1879; L. L. Lipe, October, 1879, to 1885; J. M. Ruthrauff, 1885, to 1895; T. F. Dornblazer, fall of 1895, present incumbent. In December, 1856, the German portion of the congregation withdrew and organized a separate congregation, but were united again under the pastorate of Rev. Trimmer.

A Lutheran church was in process of erection in September, 1854, and was dedicated September 30, 1855. It was a brick building with basement and spire, located on or near No. 309

Crawford Avenue. It was demolished in 1879 to make room for residences. In 1868 the present Lutheran church was built at a cost of $14,-664.81, and was dedicated February 14, 1869. Extensive additions were made and the whole interior remodeled and equipped with an organ in the summer of 1898, at a cost, including organ, of about $7,000. A semi-centennial and rededication of the improved church was celebrated December 16-19, 1898.

The Evangelical Lutheran Emanuel Church was organized March 23, 1891, by Rev. H. Staufenberg. The church building was erected the same year and in 1899 the parsonage was built, the cost of the entire property being $5,000. The pastors have been H. Staufenberg, who served until October 14, 1894, L. Lentz from 1894 to 1897. H. F. Schmidt, the present pastor, took charge November, 20, 1897.

The local paper of June 22, 1851, has this item: "Some Presbyterians, wishing to have worship in accordance with their own views and customs," have preaching in the district school house. January 29, 1853, the Presbyterian Church was organized and held public service in the stone school house. The original members were: George Sharer, Nancy Sharer, James Means, Isabella Means, John Beatty, Nancy Beatty, Mary Richardson, Robert McBride, Mrs. Jane Smith and Mrs. Jane Little. W. W. Harsha served as first pastor, being succeeded in December, 1862, by E. C. Sickels, who continued in the pastorate until July 7, 1895, when failing health necessitated his resignation. He was followed by A. R. Bickenback from September 16, 1895, to September 30, 1899. January 1, 1900, S. S. Cryor, the present incumbent, took charge.

February 17, 1856, the first Presbyterian church building was dedicated. It was a grout structure, 28 by 42 feet, standing on a portion of the present site, now partly occupied by a chapel addition. The main part of the present church, which cost about $16,000, was dedicated in October, 1860. In 1898 the chapel addition was built at a cost of about $3,000 and, in 1902, the main church was redecorated, re-seated and refurnished throughout, and the first pipe-organ installed. The total outlay (including organ, $3,000) was between $5,000 and $6,000.

In 1854 the Catholic Church was organized under the labors of Father Mark Anthony, with about twenty-five members. They worshipped in the Court House until the completion of a frame church building the same year, on the west side of Highland Avenue near the southwest corner of that street and Fifth Street.

The pastors in charge since Father Anthony have been, in the order named: Father James Fitzgerald, succeeded by T. Kennedy in 1856; M. Ford, 1859; James Power, 1862; H. Koehne, 1863; Louis Lightner, July, 1863; M. McDermott, J. P. Hodnett, Gray, Tracy, and the present incumbent, Father Michael Foley, who took charge in June, 1892.

June 23, 1873, the corner-stone of the present Catholic church was laid, Rt. Rev. Bishop Foley of Chicago officiating, and it was dedicated by him the second day of the following November. The foundation was laid during the pastorate of Father Lightner, and the edifice completed during the pastorate of Father McDermott at a cost of $30,000. The entire inside of the building, including organ, crucifix and altar vases, were consumed by fire Saturday, May 7, 1887. Father Tracy held services the following Sunday in the front yard of the parsonage. A contract was immediately let to Contractor W. J. McAlpine to rebuild the edifice for $12,000. The insurance was $7,000.

In the summer of 1838 an Episcopal Church was organized under labors of Rev. James Depuy, but on his moving away active work was suspended and all records up to 1855 were lost. The first record, "after suspension of active labors," proceeds: March 19, 1855, a meeting of the vestry of St. Luke's Episcopal Church was held at office of Robertson, Eastman & Co., Rev. Bentley presiding. Addison Rice, S. C. Eells and Geo. C. Chapman were elected members of vestry to fill vacancies caused by removals. Soon thereafter services were regularly held in Exchange Hall until 1856, when a frame church was built on the lot immediately north of the present one. First services were held in this building September 28, 1856. When the present edifice was erected, the first church was converted into a dwelling and still stands on its original ground. Mr. Bentley was the first rector after this reorganization. Following him were: C. J. Todd, August, 1856; J. G. Downing, May, 1857; John Wilkison, August, 1858, to August, 1859; A. J. Warner took charge January, 1861, and was succeeded by

G. C. Street, in April, 1862, and James W. Coe in May, 1863, who continued in charge until July, 1865; H. H. De Garmo was rector from March to September, 1866; D. W. Dresser, November, 1866, to November, 1867; H. W. Williams, March 1868, to June, 1871; M. Byllesby, November, 1871, to April, 1873; Samuel Edson, May, 1873, to October, 1875; Joseph Cross, December, 1875, to October, 1876; W. H. Jones, November, 1876, until his death, April 26, 1878; W. W. Steel, September, 1878, to November 15, 1880; John Wilkison, as minister in charge May, 1881, to June, 1885, when he became rector, remaining until November 26, 1887; Louis A. Arthur, January 7, 1889, to February 12, 1889; Henry C. Granger, November, 1889, as lay-reader until January, 1890, when he became deacon in charge. On being ordained priest, he became rector, June 24, 1890, and continued until October 5, 1896; John C. Sage, October 16, 1896, to December 31, 1901; John Mark Ericsson, January 1, 1902, present incumbent.

September 7, 1871, the corner-stone of the present stone edifice was laid, Rev. John Wilkison officiating. It was opened for services September 15, 1872. In 1900 a fine rectory was built next east of the church (between it and the public library), at a cost of $4,200.

July 7, 1870, the Universalist Church was established. Services were first conducted in Union Hall. From there the society moved to Tillson's Hall, where services were continued until the church at the corner of Second Street and Hennepin Avenue was dedicated, August 10, 1873. H. V. Chase was the first pastor, continuing until December, 1876, when he was succeeded by B. F. Rogers who served one year. About the beginning of 1877 Mr. Chase was recalled and remained three years. Then the pulpit remained vacant for several years with only an occasional service. Mr. Skilling conducted services one year and a Mr. Yates did the same about two years. Joseph F. Newton, now in charge, was regularly called and has entered on his third year.

September 29, 1854, a Congregational Church was organized in Exchange Hall where, and in the Court House, meetings were held until October, 1856, when the society moved to the brick church on Second Street built by the Methodists (No. 117). Rev. Illiesly started it, and after two or three years was compelled to abandon it, moving to Roscoe, Ogle County, where soon after a brick dwelling in which the family lived was so undermined by a flood, that it was precipitated into the river, and his wife and seven or eight children were drowned, he alone escaping.

The West Side Congregational Church was organized, August 19, 1901. A church building was erected which, with lot and furnishings, cost about $4,400. J. G. Brooks was the first pastor, beginning his pastorate September 15, 1901. The society then consisted of sixty-two members drawn from nine different denominations. At the end of the first year the membership was exactly doubled, and the society was out of debt. They next purchased a parsonage near by, which is also paid for.

July 25, 1855, the erection of a Unitarian Church was commenced in North Dixon. It was located on the north side of Boyd Street between Galena and Hennepin, and was dedicated April 9, 1856. Rev. Kelsey was the first and, as far as can be learned, the only pastor. It was torn down some time after 1863.

Grace United Evangelical Church is located at the northwest corner of East Fellows and Ottawa Streets, North Dixon. The society had its inception in a Sabbath School, which started with twenty-two members June 12, 1892, under the leadership of Mrs. I. Divan. The church was organized September 14, 1892, with thirteen charter members, by Rev. I. Divan. A lot on which to build was bought in 1892 and, in 1893, the building was erected. The present membership of the church is ninety. The pastors have been I. Divan, June, 1892, to April, 1897; J. H. Keagle, April, 1897, to April, 1898; J. G. Finkbeiner, April, 1898, to March, 1902; E. O. Rife, April, 1902, present incumbent.

Initial services which resulted in the founding of the Christian Church in Dixon, were commenced Sunday, September 1, 1895, in a tent at the southeast corner of First Street and Madison Avenue, under the leadership of Rev. T. A. Boyer, of Eureka, Ill. The tent was occupied seven weeks, when the services were moved to G. G. Rosbrook Hall, on Peoria Avenue. The original membership, which was small when the meetings began, was thus increased to 187. A committee from the congregation was selected by the District Board to act as an executive board until the society could be organized. C. E. Evans, of Walnut, Ill., was called November 1, 1895, services being conducted in Union Hall. The church was fully organized February 2, 1896. Mr. Evans closed his pastorate in January, 1897, and was succeeded the following May by S. H. Zendt, of Eureka, Ill., who continued until October 1, 1899. In the spring of 1896 a lot near the northeast corner of First Street and Madison Avenue had been purchased for $1,350 and, in the summer of 1897, the society erected its present building on this lot at a cost of about $3,500. It was dedicated June 29, 1897. J. H. Hardin, then President of Eureka College, delivering the sermon. It was under Mr. Zendt's labors not only that the building was secured, but that a mortgage on it was paid off and committed to the flames on the first Sunday of June, 1897. The next regular pastor was Finis Idleman, the present incumbent, who has served since June 1, 1900.

Young Men's Christian Association.—This institution is one of the leading influences in the community for good. It was organized in Dixon, June 24, 1889, with twenty-eight members. During the last four years the membership has fluctuated between 285 and 400, the present membership being 317. The advantages include a gymnasium, baths, games, gospel meetings and bible classes, library of 140 volumes and a free reading room with forty-five periodicals, including daily and religious papers. Baths have been availed of at an average rate of about 425 per month. Thus a wholesome resort is provided for young men with a nominal membership fee of $5.00 a year. The first Board of Trustees consisted of Albert Johnson, Ira W. Lewis, N. F. Swartout, F. E. Wright, A. P. Armington, E. L. Kling, John T. Laing, E. E. Wingert and E. B. Raymond. The present officers and Board of Directors are: Ira W. Lewis, President; H. V. Baldwin, Vice-President; Jno. T. Laing, Secretary; W. B. Johnson, Treasurer; C. C. Kost, O. E. Clymer, E. B. Raymond, H. W. Morris, L. W. Dachsteiner, M. L. Christian, W. B. McMahon and R. M. Ayres. Mr. Lewis has been President from the first. The General Secretaries have been: Phil. Bevis, H. L. Sawyer, L. L. Everly from about July 1, 1897, to December, 1899, since which time the present Secretary, F. M. Smith, has filled the post.

In July, 1855, J. W. Hollenbeck and J. H. Cropsey completed a sash, door and blind factory on Third Street at No. 320. It was a stone building 32 by 64 feet, four stories high, with engine house 25 by 32 feet. It was torn down in 1893 to make room for residences. July, 1857, Mr. Daily bought the property to convert it into a flour mill, afterwards operated by Cheney & Co.

At a very early day a saw-mill stood on or near Lot 1 in Block 7 of the original plat, at the foot of Peoria Avenue. It is said to have been erected by Judge Wilkinson, but who this Judge Wilkinson was is not stated. The mill was operated for a short time by Huff & Thompson, and was afterwards used for a distillery and vinegar factory. There are three lots lying between the west side of Peoria Avenue and Huff's Reserve, and it may be from Huff's connection with the reserve that the building was located on this piece of ground instead of the lot mentioned.

In the spring of 1857 a joint stock company was formed with a capital of $2,000 for the erection of a starch factory. The building was erected of stone on the bank of the river in West Dixon, but never finished.

April 4, 1857, the Plow Works and Machine Shop of Dement & Co. was employing seventy-five hands and turning out thirty plows a day. The shops were included in the projected "Union Eagle Iron Works," the corner stone of which was laid July 27, 1857, with ceremonies. They were afterwards utilized as the nucleus of the group of buildings now constituting the Grand Detour Plow Works. During this same year of 1857, the Plow Works were moved from these buildings to the water-power at the corner of Ottawa and River Streets.

The breadth of Col. Dement's powers is indicated by the fact, well authenticated, that after long experiments he succeeded in welding a plate of malleable iron on the back of the steel mould-board of a plow, thus protecting the hardened steel against cracking or breaking. It is confidently asserted that he was the first to accomplish this feat. The device is now in universal use and has proven of inestimable value, and, if patented, would have been the source of large income to the inventor.

In the summer of 1858, W. C. Van Osdel erected a three-story frame sash and blind factory in the west end of Dement Town. In 1862 it was converted into a sorghum mill and is now a residence.

In August, 1859, Cheney & Co. vacated their steam flouring mill on Third Street (No. 320) and started a mill in building at water power built by Godfrey & Sons, and known as "Farmer's Mills." February 29, 1860, Charles Godfrey & Son succeeded Cheney & Co. as proprietors.

August 9, 1866, the Bucklin File Manufacturing Company was incorporated with a capital of $100,000 and erected a two-story factory building of stone at the water-power, 40 by 140 feet, but the business failed in less than a year. December 2, 1868, the "Western Knitting Factory" was established in the same building by McIlroy & Crane. It was located at the southeast corner of Ottawa and First Streets. A few months later it passed into the hands of W. H. Godfrey and Jas. B. Charters. The building and contents were destroyed by fire, March 12, 1873, entailing a loss of $20,000.

In the summer of 1866 John Dement erected the stone flax-factory building at the water-power, 45 by 64 feet, and in the following February the manufacture of flax-bagging or cotton-baling was commenced by Jerome & Downing. About 1870 the building was extended to its present depth of 140 feet. (It is now occupied by the Reynolds Wire Company.)

In the spring of 1867 the wagon and carriage factory of Cheney & Mason was started in stone building then standing at what is now 320 Third Street, and in August of the same year, Severance & Cheney commenced the manufacture of platform scales. In 1869 the latter business was in the hands of John T. Cheney and John P. Hutchinson, and the scale became known as the "Victor." The factory was finally moved to Moline, Ill.

The Grand Detour Plow Works were established at Grand Detour, Ogle County, by John Deere and Major L. Andrus, in 1837. At the start two men sufficed for the iron-work and two for the wood-work. In about two years a horse power was brought into requisition. The product was peddled about the country in wagons. In 1848, Mr. Deere went to Moline and built up a very large plow-manufacturing business which is still in operation. Sometime after the withdrawal of Mr. Deere, Col. Amos Bosworth became associated with Mr. Andrus. He died at his home in Grand Detour in March, 1862, from typhoid fever contracted in the army. The shops were destroyed by fire in 1857, but immediately rebuilt, Theron Cumins became a partner in the concern in August, 1863, the style of the firm becoming Andrus & Cumins, so continuing until Mr. Andrus' death in February, 1867. The business was then carried on by Mr. Cumins alone until June, 1869, when Col. H. T. Noble was admitted as partner, and the firm name became T. Cumins & Co. It was in this year that the works were moved to Dixon and located on their present site. In June, 1879, Mr. O. B. Dodge became connected with the firm, the style being changed to Cumins, Noble & Dodge. In June, 1879, the business was incorporated under its present name, the "Grand Detour Plow Company," with a capital of $120,000, which has since been increased to $500,000, Theron Cumins, Henry T. Noble, Orris B. Dodge and Charles H. Noble being the incorporators and officers. Col. Noble died, April 15, 1891, and Mr. Cumins August 3, 1898. The present officers are O. B. Dodge, President; Charles H. Noble, Vice President; L. D. Dement, Secretary; Amos Bosworth, Assistant Secretary, and F. O. Coleman, Treasurer.

On July 1, 1889, the factory of the Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Company received its first milk from the farmers. It was erected and equipped at a stated cost of $500,000. Since then additions and improvements have been made, which are said to have increased the investment to $750,000. The largest quantity of milk received in one day has been 150,000 pounds, while the average daily receipts have exceeded 100,000 pounds. It is estimated that about 10,000 cows are milked daily within a radius of ten to sixteen miles of Dixon, to yield this product, and that an average for the year of about $40,000 is paid to the farmers monthly for milk. This milk is condensed and placed on the market in cans and large packages. In addition to this, an entire floor of one of the large buildings is occupied in the manufacture of caramel candy, the average daily output of which is from seven to eight thousand pounds. Persons who have occasion to use the products of this concern will find comfort in the assurance that superlative cleanliness everywhere prevails, and every precaution is exercised to safeguard the health of the consumer. The city and community cannot too highly honor the memory of Mr. George H. Page (a Palmyra boy) who, as founder of this splendid enterprise, and by a public spirit which death cut short of its final aim, made them his lasting debtor.

July 1, 1902, the Borden Condensed Milk Company succeeded the Anglo-Swiss and, after a year's experience, has become thoroughly entrenched in the respect and confidence of patrons and people.

C. M. Henderson & Co. located a shoe factory in Dixon in 1887, the citizens having donated about $27,000 to the concern as an inducement for its coming. Two or three years later a second purse of $6,000 was raised towards a second factory building near the first, but $3,000 of this was afterward turned into the hospital fund by Mr. Watson. (See Hospital.) Three factories were here brought together from Allegheny City, Penn., Fond du Lac, Wis., and Jefferson City, Mo., where the work had been done by State's prison labor. August 30, 1901, the "Watson-Plummer Shoe Company" was incorporated with Frederick A. Watson, Joseph P. Plummer and Frank N. Stackpole as the first Directors; capital stock, $50,000; duration, ninety-nine years. This company purchased the two Henderson factories, and also the Fargo factory, elsewhere referred to, and is now operating them. Mr. Watson, who was Dixon born, and occupied a very responsible position with C. M. Henderson & Co., and possessed the company's entire confidence, was the moving spirit enabling Dixon to secure these extensive industries, and it is gratifying that he should in due time be found standing at their head.

On the 25th day of August, 1891, the Citizens' Association of Dixon entered into a contract with C. H. Fargo & Co., of Chicago, which will be found recorded in the Recorder's office of the County, in Book "E" of Miscellaneous Records, p. 597, whereby the Association agreed to donate to Fargo & Co. a factory site and $27,500 in money, as an inducement to locate their shoe factory in Dixon. The agreement was carried out by both parties, resulting in the erection of the factory on the river bank in the east part of the city. As a means of raising the required sum, the Association bought land and laid out the Fargo and the River View Additions to the city and sold the lots. The company failed in 1896, and the property remained idle for a time, but having finally passed into the hands of Mr. F. A. Watson, of the C. M. Henderson Company, is now one of the factories which is conducted by the Watson-Plummer Company.

The Reynolds Wire Company was organized October 12, 1894, with a capital of $80,000. It is engaged in the manufacture of wire cloth and novelties into which wire cloth enters. The present officers are: Horace G. Reynolds, President; S. S. Dodge, Vice President; Walter B. Merriman, Secretary and Treasurer. It operates over 100 looms and does an extensive business.

In September, 1892, A. C. Bardwell platted the West End Addition to the City of Dixon, with a view of making it a manufacturing district. Lots were sold under contract to secure the location of factories. The hard times of 1893, coming on at a critical juncture, greatly embarrassed the enterprise, and the hopes of the projector and patrons were but faintly realized. A large factory was put up on the Addition immediately west of Lincoln Avenue, for the Canton Steam Pump Company. This company reorganized and was incorporated as the Miller Steam Pump Company, and had the factory in motion in December, 1892. The Miller Company failed in the summer of 1893, and early in the spring of 1894, the Brosius Sewing Machine & Motor Company came into possession, but in August made an assignment, the property passing into the hands of the Spring Motor Company. In November, 1895, the Nash Manufacturing Company became the owner. April 1, 1896, the Terre Haute Manufacturing Company acquired the machinery and soon moved it away. All these companies, following the Miller Company, were engaged in the manufacture of a spring motor sewing-machine. The factory remained unoccupied until the Grand Detour Wagon Company became owner.

The Grand Detour Wagon Company was incorporated December 24, 1900, with $60,000 capital. Its first directors were C. H. Baldwin, J. C. Frey, O. B. Dodge, C. H. Noble and L. D. Dement. In January, 1900, it acquired title to the sewing-machine factory just mentioned, and is now using the property in the manufacture of wagons.

As a part of the West End undertaking, a three-story brick building was erected near the railroad on an elevation some distance east of Lincoln Avenue. The construction of a building designed for a knitting factory was commenced in January, 1893, but it was never occupied for that purpose. In the spring of 1894 Alanson H. Reed and John W. Reed, under the firm name of A. Reed & Sons, occupied this building under a contract of purchase for use in the manufacture of pianos. They failed in the winter of 1898-9, since which time the building has been unused.

The Dixon Cereal Company was incorporated in 1900 with capital of $10,000. John Forrest is its President and Hugh McCartney Secretary and Treasurer. Their business is milling and buying and selling grain at the stone elevator near the Illinois Central Railroad depot.

Newspapers.—The first paper printed in Lee County appeared under date of May 1, 1851, named "Dixon Telegraph and Lee County Herald," Charles R. Fisk publisher. October 5 of the same year it passed into the hands of J. F. Hooper and M. P. Bull. January 21, 1852, John V. Eustace became editor and B. F. Shaw manager. April 30, 1854, Eustace retired and Mr. Shaw became sole proprietor.

June 27, 1855, the "Daily Whisper," to be issued "semi-occasionally," made its first appearance.

October 26, 1854, the "Transcript," a Democratic paper, made its appearance. Charles Allen, its editor, was succeeded by Prof. Eberhart, May 2, 1855, who yielded the place to A. C. Appler, August 8th following. January 5, 1856, it passed into the hands of John Stevens and J. L. Johnson as proprietors, and January 15, 1857, became the "Dixon Weekly Republican," with S. W. Beckwith and E. H. Leggett editors. July 9, 1857, the "Telegraph" and "Republican" combined under the editorship of

B. F. Shaw and S. W. Beckwith. March 3, 1859, B. F. Shaw retired and I. S. Boardman became editor and proprietor December 22d J. R. Bond became associated with Mr. Boardman, but soon sold his interest to his partner. The name of the paper was reduced to "The Telegraph," February 7, 1867. Mr. Boardman retired, April 22, 1869, being succeeded by his sons, John D. and William H.

February 14, 1868, the "Dixon Weekly Herald" started with A. C. Bardwell as editor and proprietor. December 2, 1869, the "Telegraph" and the "Herald" were united under the editorship of A. C. Bardwell, and the business management of William H. Boardman, the name of the new paper being the "Telegraph and Herald." In January, 1870, B. F. Shaw became associate editor, and on January 1, 1871, Mr. Bardwell retired, leaving Mr. Shaw sole editor. Soon the "Herald" part of the name was dropped, and the paper became "The Dixon Telegraph." On the last Friday of November, 1883, the "Evening Telegraph" came out, the first daily paper to be published in Dixon. The weekly issue was continued as before until November 21, 1899, it was supplanted by the semi-weekly issue. Both daily and semi-weekly still continue their regular issues. July 2, 1891, B. F. Shaw and his son, Eustace E., incorporated the B. F. Shaw Printing Company, to carry on the publication. B. F. Shaw & Son appeared as editors and Eustace E. Shaw as managing editor and publisher.

July 24, 1858, the "Dixon Weekly Monitor" was started by Chas. Meigs, Jr., but soon failed, when E. B. Stiles, L. W. Atherton and J. V. Eustace bought the office and launched the "Dixon Advertiser" November 24, 1858, of which W. H. Staunton took charge August 10, 1859. November 24 of the same year I. S. Boardman bought the paper and it apparently became merged in the "Republican and Telegraph."

July 9, 1868, the "Lee County Democrat" arrived with E. Giles as proprietor and S. C. Postlewait as editor. November 16, 1871, W. M. Kennedy became proprietor and Eugene Pinckney editor, and on March 6, 1872, the name was changed to the "Dixon Sun." December 9, 1874, W. M. Kennedy appears as editor and proprietor. March 29, 1890, Mr. Kennedy having died, his widow, Mrs. Inez A. Kennedy, took charge as proprietor and financial manager. March 23, 1892, E. Everett Harrington appears as editor, Mrs. Kennedy still being proprietor and manager. The daily edition of the "Dixon Sun" started December 23, 1893, with Mrs. Kennedy as proprietor and manager. January 4, 1894, Frank J. Devlin became editor. January 30, 1894, the paper passed into the hands of J. T. Day, with Devlin still as editor. October 15, 1894, Mr. Devlin ceased to be editor and Day was thenceforth both editor and proprietor. November 14, 1895, T. W. and E. C. Fuller, the present proprietors, succeeded Mr. Day.

January 26, 1871, the "Rock River Farmer," a monthly, appeared with W. M. Kennedy as editor and proprietor. The last number found in the files of the paper is the issue of December, 1878.

The first number of the "Dixon Evening Star" was issued March 28, 1891, by Charles H. Keeler and Gurdon E. Bishop, under the firm name of the Star Printing Company, Mr. Keeler being the editor and business manager and Mr. Bishop general superintendent, thus consolidating the job office run by each. The business office was located temporarily over the store at No. 112 First Street, while the publication office was in basement of the north building of the Northern Illinois Normal School. About the first of May of that year, both departments were brought together at 105 Galena Avenue. In December, 1891, Mr. Keeler purchased Mr. Bishop's interest. In the spring of 1893, he sold a half interest to G. A. Fairfield, of Elkader, Iowa. January 1, 1894, he sold the remaining half to Mr. A. H. Swart. Fairfield & Swart conducted the daily a few weeks as an evening paper, when they converted it into a morning paper, styling it the "Morning Star." A short experience proved unprofitable and Mr. Swart, having purchased Mr. Fairfield's interest, suspended the daily and started a weekly named the "Dixon Star." He carried it on as a weekly until March, 1897, when he again entered the daily field, taking in two of his employees as partners, Bishop and C. H. Downs. About the first of July of the same year, the daily was suspended for lack of support, and the issue of the weekly was resumed. Shortly afterwards the plant was sold to Mr. Wilson, who conducted it for three months and then let it fall back into Mr. Swart's hands. In the following February (1898) it was purchased by the present proprietor, Mr. DeWitt C. Owen, who took possession March 1st. For eight months the weekly was continued, when it was changed to a tri-weekly and has been conducted on that plan up to the present time.

Schools.—North Dixon lies in Town 22, and the line dividing that town from Town 21, in which nearly all of the original Town of Dixon is found, throws all of Mill Block, nearly all of Block 1, more than half of Block 2 and a small portion of Block 3 into the former town. This line divides the city of Dixon for public school purposes, the portion in Town 22 being under a system independent of that in Town 21. Undoubtedly the efficiency of the public schools of the city would be greatly promoted, and the burden of taxes diminished, if the two townships could be brought under one management. Several efforts have been made to this end, but thus far without success.

John K. Robinson was a teacher in Father Dixon's family in the winter of 1833-4. Following him, Father Dixon employed a Miss Butler of Bureau County. The children of O. W. Kellogg, of Buffalo Grove (now Polo), including Mrs. E. B. Baker, still living in our midst, were members of this school. It was the custom for a few years for Mr. Kellogg to employ a teacher one winter when Father Dixon would send his children to Buffalo Grove, and for Mr. Dixon to employ a teacher the next winter, when Mr. Kellogg would reciprocate by sending his children to Dixon's Ferry. When it is remembered that the two points were about twelve miles apart, the value which these pioneers placed on education for their children may be appreciated.

In the summer of 1837 the first school house, a one-story frame building 20 by 30 feet, was built on or near Lot 1, Block 69, near the cemetery, and in 1839 was moved to the north end of Lot 5, Block 17, east side of Ottawa Avenue. For several years it served as school house, court house, town hall, meeting house, etc. It was built by subscription.

In 1838 the first school was opened in the new building under charge of H. Bicknell, being supported by individual tuition fees. The following were his successors: Mr. Bowen, part of 1840; W. W. Heaton, winter of 1841-2; Miss Ophelia Loveland (afterwards Mrs. J. B. Brooks), summer of 1843. The district then included both sides of the river as far up as "Fuller's Cave," and yet the school numbered only about 25 pupils. Lorenzo Wood taught during the winter of 1843-4; Mr. Cross and James Lumm between 1846 and 1848, and J. D. McKay in 1848.

In the summer of 1847 a stone school house was in process of construction on Hennepin Avenue, and a school probably opened in it that winter. James Lumm was the first teacher and Henry T. Noble one of the later ones. It is still standing at No. 212 Hennepin Avenue, but is disguised by a frame second story and by an outer garment of clapboards. It is a dwelling immediately in rear of Nachusa House. Doubtless it succeeded the school house built in 1837.

In 1840 Dixon's one school had 30 pupils. In the summer of 1845 a correspondent writing from Dixon, says it had "a select school and one district school, with an attendance of 75 pupils in the two and 149 children under twenty years of age in the school district."

December 7, 1854, the first school house was built in North Dixon and stood on the present site of 417 North Crawford Avenue. It had seats for 130 scholars.

January 30, 1855, a meeting was held at Exchange hall to consider a plan proposed by Rock River Presbytery through their agents, Revs. Harsha and Mason, to locate a Presbyterian college in Dixon. This school was opened, May 17 of the same year, in the basement of the Lutheran church, as "Dixon Collegiate Institute" under care of Rev. Mr. Harsha. Early teachers beside himself were his wife, E. C. Smith and wife and Miss Jennie L. Backus. July 4 following, the corner-stone of the Institute was laid in presence of a large concourse of people, Benjamin F. Taylor, the poet, of Chicago, delivering the oration. The building was a large brick structure located in a commanding position on what is now Bluff Park. The school had an endowment of $25,000, $12,000 being contributed by the citizens of Dixon, in grounds, equipment, etc. It was incorporated in 1857 by special act of the Legislature. It was instituted and continued under the care of Presbytery until 1858, when the property passed into other hands and, for a number of years, was the home of different private schools. The building was demolished in 1889 to give place to residences.

November 5, 1855, a school was opened in the Union School House on Peoria Avenue. The building was a two-story brick 33 by 45 feet, costing $6,000. It stood on the lot where J. C. Ayres residence now stands, at No. 419 Peoria Avenue. It was torn down in 1874. The old wooden desks were here first discarded and patent furniture introduced.

July 15, 1857, a female seminary under charge of the Episcopal Church was started by Rev. J. W. Downing, in a dwelling house near the Illinois Central Railroad depot.

August 27, 1857, Prof. A. M. Gow took charge of the Collegiate Institute as Principal. April 18, 1861, the Institute building was purchased by Rev. O. W. Cooley, of Wisconsin, for a female seminary.

In August, 1858, a high school department of the public schools was established in the old Methodist church on Second Street (No. 117), with A. H. Fitch as Principal. In 1859 A. M. Gow was employed as Superintendent of Schools and James Gow as Principal of the High School. The school then had five departments and an enrollment of about 400 pupils. They continued in charge until 1862, when E. C. Smith was made Superintendent of Schools and Principal of the High School.

September 3, 1863, "Dixon Seminary" was opened in the Collegiate Institute building by S. G. Lathrop and M. M. Took.

In 1866 the brick ward school house in Dement Town was built. It has since been enlarged.

September 1, 1868, Knepper & Wells took charge of the Dixon Seminary, and were succeeded September 22, 1872, by Prof. Lummis.

Prof. S. W. Moses and E. A. Gurney started a Conservatory of Music in the Institute building January 20, 1874, and November 1, 1875, the "Rock River University" was opened in the same building, with O. G. May as President and M. M. Took, Regent. October 4, 1877, Daniel M. Graham was made President and on December 2, 1878, A. M. Hansen took charge. September 3, 1879, the university opened under new management with J. R. Hinckley as President.

In the fall and winter of 1868-9, the large brick public school building in North Dixon, now in use, was erected at a cost of $20,000. Dedicatory exercises were held January 15, 1869. During the following summer the "red brick" High School building, crowning the hill on the south side, now occupied for "grammar grades," was built at a cost of $30,000. The opening exercises occurred September 25th of that year. About ten years ago a brick primary school building was placed in the school yard in North Dixon, at a cost of $4,000. Having become unsafe it was torn down in 1889, and a high school building was erected on the spot and completed in 1900 at a cost of $15,500.

The "White Brick" school house, on the southeast corner of Block 55, (south side), was completed in January, 1887, at a cost of about $5,500. It was enlarged and greatly improved, at a cost of $17,000, in the winter of 1892-3.

In 1902 the North Dixon schools entered on the experiment of a kindergarten as one of the departments of the public schools, and the south side schools introduced manual training. During this year the first school house to be erected in West Dixon was completed at a cost of $7,600. It is situated on the Block fronting Third Street, and was named the "Truman School," after Mr. F. A. Truman, deceased, who was President of the Board of Education for many years and Mayor of the city.

In 1881 the Northern Illinois Normal School and Dixon Business College was opened in the old Institute, or Seminary Building, pending the construction of buildings in the west part of city, which were completed and occupied the next year. Prof. J. B. Dille was Principal. As an inducement to secure the location of this school, citizens of Dixon and vicinity subscribed for scholarships in the institution to the extent of about $20,000. The school now occupies a large brick building, and on either side is a dormitory similarly constructed. The grounds embrace four city blocks in the west part of the city. The two southernmost of these buildings were completed in 1882, and the school became permanently located in them. In 1888 the northern dormitory was built. The school is now operating under charter of July 15, 1902, with J. B. Dille, J. C. Flint and J. W. Watts as directors.

Steinman College was established in the fall of 1882 by Mr. Chas. A. Steinman, its present President and business manager. The buildings are located on the bank of the river adjoining Assembly Park, on the up river side, and consist of a large three-story brick school building, standing immediately on the high bank of the stream surrounded by native trees, and a dormitory near by. The campus embraces many acres and the surroundings are quiet and in every respect attractive. The main building was erected in 1895 and the dormitory in 1902.

St. Mary's Parochial School was founded in 1897. The residence property belonging to the estate of George L. Schuler, Nos. 710-716 Peoria Avenue, was purchased and a plot 300 feet on Peoria Avenue by 200 feet deep, reserved for school purposes. The dwelling was overhauled and admirably arranged to meet the needs of the school. It started with an attendance of over 250 pupils, which has increased somewhat. The course includes primary and grammar grades preparing pupils for the high school. Seven teachers are employed, including a music teacher, all of whom are Sisters of the Dominican Order, whose home, as well as the home of the Order, is at Sinsinawa Mound, Wis.

Dams and Bridges.—In the summer of 1845 measures were being taken for the incorporation of the Rock River Dam and Bridge Company, to erect a toll-bridge and "a good and sufficient dam across Rock River." The bridge was built at the foot of Ottawa Street in the fall and winter of 1846-7. March 20, 1847, the freshet took out the north half of the bridge, and during the summer it was rebuilt two feet higher at a cost of $2,000. It was a toll-bridge at first, but became a free bridge June 13, 1855. In the spring of 1849, the south half was swept away by the ice and was not restored until the summer of 1851, when it was rebuilt four feet higher than the north half, the ferry being the means of crossing in the interim. In 1850 the dam was built. Father Dixon apparently continued, in some degree, the ferry business as late as December 31, 1851, on which date he sold to the Rock River Dam and Bridge Company all his "right, title and interest in the ferry, as now established at Dixon, together with ferry landing, ferry-boat, privileges," etc.

The estimate placed on Rock River in those days is reflected in the act of the Legislature, approved March 1, 1845, incorporating the Rock River Dam and Bridge Company at Dixon, wherein it is provided that, in erecting the proposed dam, said company "shall construct and maintain a lock in said dam for the passage of steamboats, rafts and water-crafts of such dimensions as were adopted by the State in the contemplated improvement of the navigation of Rock River, and shall construct a draw in said bridge immediately over said lock."

February 14, 1857, a free bridge had just been completed below the railroad bridge, when the ice wrecked it so badly as to render it useless. On the 24th of the same month the ice carried away the bridge at foot of Ottawa Street.

May 23, 1857, Jas. A. Watson commenced the erection of a footbridge at the foot of Galena Avenue. Sufficient money was raised, a few days later, to convert it into a double-track bridge.

December 10, 1857, the new bridge in West Dixon was completed. February 20, 1859, the dam was carried out by the ice and high water, sweeping four bents of the Galena Street Bridge. The West Dixon bridge was left as the only means of crossing the river except by boat.

April 23, 1859, "two factories and Brookner's saw mill," standing at north end of the dam were being undermined by high water, and in danger of tumbling into the river and floating against the toll-bridge just finished and demolishing it. The factories were moved and the saw mill burned to save the bridge. Mr. John W. King, now living in Dixon, touched the match to the mill by consent of the owner, Mr. Brookner. From him we learn that the north bank of the river, at the dam abutment, is from 100 to 150 feet farther north than it was then; that the river is thus that much wider at this point than it was then.

August 20 of this year the erection of another free-bridge, at the foot of Galena Street, was commenced to cost $12,000. Z. H. Luckey being the contractor. The opening of this bridge for travel, January 1, 1861, was celebrated by a procession with blare of band and booming of cannon. In the spring of 1863 the dam was again repaired by J. H. Cropsey, at a cost of $10,000.

May 20, 1866, a drove of nearly a hundred head of cattle broke through a span of the bridge near the center and were precipitated into the river.

December 2, 1867, work was commenced by James A. Watson in rebuilding the wagon-bridge, which was swept away before completed. City bonds to the amount of $8,000 were issued on account of this bridge.

March 7, 1868, the "free bridge" was taken out by the ice, cooperating with a very high freshet. One of the piers of the railroad bridge was battered down by the ice and two spans fell into the river. About 120 feet of the south end of the dam was also washed out. A temporary wagon bridge was erected within a few weeks.

January 21, 1869, the first iron bridge was dedicated. It was known as the Trussdell pattern, and cost, with the present stone piers and abutments, $75,000. For most, if not all, of its life it was a toll-bridge. Although it had five spans, each 132 feet in length, it was a continuous truss, each span being dependent on the others. The opening was celebrated by a procession, headed by the venerable founder of the town in a carriage, followed by a brass band, the City Council and citizens. On Sunday, the 4th day of May, 1873, (a beautiful day), baptismal services were being held below the bridge at its north end, at the hour when residents of the north side were returning from church. A crowd had already gathered on the down-river side of the northernmost span, and many of those on their way from church stopped to witness the ceremony when, without warning, the span was precipitated into the deep water beneath. The fall was not directly downward but somewhat side-wise, in a manner indicating that the accident was caused by the crowd being massed on one side. This was the sorest affliction Dixon has ever been subjected to. Thirty-seven persons were drowned or killed by portions of the iron work falling upon them or by being held under the water, while forty-seven were seriously, and five mortally, injured. Of this number all but seven were women or girls. Some were thrown against the abutment with such force as to inflict fatal injuries; others were held under the water by their clothing being caught in the framework, while still others were bruised and rendered helpless by the blows of the falling iron. The collapse of this span caused all the others to give way with varying effect. The one next to the south bank fell into the water while others, though broken, hung suspended above the stream. The mortality list from this terrible catastrophe was as follows: Misses Clara and Rosa Stackpole, Kate Sterling, Melissa Wilhelm, Maggie O'Brien, Nettie Hill, Ida Vann, Ida Drew, Agnes Nixon, Bessie Reyne, Irene Baker, Emily Deming, Lizzie Mackay; Mesdames Doctor Hoffman, J. W. Lat-ta, Col. H. T. Noble, Benj. Gillman, Carpenter (mother of J. W. Carpenter), William Took, Jas. Goble, Elias Hope, E. Wallace, E. Peters-berger and little daughter, Thomas Wade, Henry Sillman, William Merriman, C. W. Kent-er; Messrs. George W. Kent, Frank Hamilton, Edward Doyle, Thomas Haley, Robert Dyke, Jay R. Mason, and two children of Mrs. Hendrix. Five died from injuries received, to wit:

Mesdames P. M. Alexander, William Vann, Charles March and W. Wilcox and Mr. Seth Whitmore. All were residents of Dixon and vicinity.

Up to this time, ten bridges in all had spanned the river, including the Trusdell bridge.

November 18, 1873, the Howe Truss wooden bridge was completed at a cost of $18,000. In time the timber became unsafe in spite of repairs and, in 1885, its place was taken by the iron bridge now in use, which cost $35,000.

The interests represented by the dam, race and water-power have never been incorporated, but have continued up to the present to be owned in severalty as appurtenant to the abutting land. Efforts were made to consolidate the different properties into the ownership of an incorporated company, but the ideas of the various owners and the valuations they placed upon their holdings precluded this. In 1880, however, an agreement was entered into by all of the interested parties except Mr. W. H. Godfrey, recognizing the several holdings exclusive of his, and furnishing a basis of assessment for maintenance and repair, and prescribing procedure for collecting the same. The instrument is dated May 19, 1880, and is recorded in the Recorder's Office in Book "C," of Miscellaneous Records, p. 283. It seems to have served its purpose satisfactorily up to the present time.

Hotels.—In the winter of 1836-7 Peter McKinney and H. Thompson started the "Western Hotel," the building still being in existence as Nos. 112, 114 and 116 Hennepin Avenue. Father Dixon's log house had been converted into a tavern, and was kept by the same parties. In 1837 a third hotel was started known as "Rock River House," and afterwards as "Phenix Hotel." It was located about fifty feet west of the corner of Galena and Water Streets and was conducted by Crowell & Wilson, and later by George Holly and Isaac Robinson. It was destroyed by fire in 1846.

The foundation of the Nachusa House was laid in 1838 by a company from Buffalo, N. Y., further progress being stopped by the stringency of the money market. Nothing further was done until March 19, 1853, when a company was formed with a capital of $10,000 to complete the building, and, on the 10th of the following December, it was opened for business. November 23, 1854, one of the papers says: "Mr. E. B. Stiles intends building a long addition, 80 by 32 and four stories high, to the Nachusa house.

The Washington House, corner of Ottawa Avenue and First Street, was completed October 1, 1854.

About 1840 the Dixon House was built by Henry McKinney on First Street, and in August, 1855, was moved to the present site of the Countryman Block (111-113 Galena Avenue), where it was remodeled and enlarged. It was demolished in 1889 to make room for the latter block.

June 14, 1856, Cropsey, Dement & Noble commenced the erection of the Shabbona House, about a block north of the Chicago & Northwestern Depot. It was an imposing brick structure, located immediately south of No. 723 Depot Avenue. It was opened October 1, 1857, by Mr. Benjamin from Vermont, under the name of "Dement House." In the summer of 1868 it was leased by Crockett & Dake.

April 19, 1860, Cheney & Company opened the Waverly House at the Northwestern Depot.

December 2, 1868, the Shabbona House was opened by H. E. Gedney, as the "St. James Hotel," and on November 30, 1871, it was destroyed by fire—loss, $22,500.

Banks.—The firm of S. Noble & Co., consisting of Silas Noble, Henry T. Noble and Jerome W. Hollenbeck, was early conducting a real-estate agency, which, about 1854, developed into a banking business carried on in the identical room which is now 108 First Street. In 1855 the firm joined J. B. Nash in building Union Block, now 105-107 First Street. The first floor of 107 was splendidly finished and well equipped as a banking office, and as soon as completed, the firm moved into its new quarters. They failed in the panic of 1857.

E. B. Stiles was in the banking business here as early as 1854, and in 1854-5 built the bank building where the City National Bank is now located. He failed in 1864 or 1865.

In 1853 Robertson, Eastman & Co., of Rockford, established a bank at what is now 202 First Street. Here, in 1854, Samuel C. Eells found employment as clerk. In the spring of 1855 the firm became Robertson, Eells & Co. In 1859 it was changed to Eells & Coleman. On January 21, 1865, the Lee County National Bank was organized as its successor, with a capital of $100,000, and with Joseph Crawford as President; Joseph Utley, Vice President; S.

C. Eells, Cashier; John Coleman, Assistant Cashier. On expiration of its charter the Lee County National was succeeded by the City National Bank, which was organized in 1885 with the same capital, and with Joseph Crawford as President and S. C. Eells as Cashier. The present officers are Samuel C. Eells, President; Leonard Andrus, Vice President; Warren C. Durkes, Cashier; Charles E. Chandler, Assistant Cashier. It is worthy of note that, for almost fifty years, Mr. Eells has thus been identified with the banking interests of Dixon, and that now, at the advanced age of eighty-one, he is still actively engaged at the head of the institution which he practically founded. His conservative methods, together with the confidence inspired, tided him over every financial crisis and enabled him eventually to own, as he does now, the banking houses of both of his early competitors.

September 15, 1871, the Dixon National Bank was organized with $100,000 capital, and with H. B. Jenks, President; John Dement, Vice President; H. S. Lucas, Cashier. The present officers are Jason C. Ayres, President; S. S. Dodge, Vice President; C. H. Hughes, Cashier, and A. P. Armstrong, Assistant Cashier.

The Union State Bank was incorporated under the State law, January 8, 1902, with I. B. Countryman, President; C. J. Rosbrook, Vice President; R. M. Moore, Cashier—capital, $50,000. It has the only savings deposit department in the city, and makes a specialty of this class of accounts. Its business, at this writing, indicates that by September 1, 1903, the number of savings depositors will reach 900, with deposits to their credit of $120,000, exclusive of commercial deposits.

Dixon in the War of the Rebellion.—It is worth remarking that the war spirit began to take form as early as March 14, 1857, when a young men's military company was organized with Capt. J. B. Wyman, of Amboy, as drill-master, H. T. Noble Captain, B. F. Shaw First Lieutenant, L. G. Mooney Second Lieutenant, and Ellis Williams Third Lieutenant.

The first company to volunteer for the war organized April 22, 1861, by electing A. B. Gorgas, Captain; Henry T. Noble, First Lieutenant; Henry D. Dement, Second Lieutenant; Benj. Gilman, First Sergeant; O. M. Pugh, Second Sergeant. The company became Company "A," Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The promotion of Capt. Gorgas to the office of Major of the regiment resulted in Henry T. Noble becoming Captain; Henry D. Dement First Lieutenant, Benj. Gilman Second Lieutenant; George L. Aiken, First Sergeant, and A. J. Pinkham, Second Sergeant. April 25th the company was presented with a silk flag by the ladies of Dixon, Miss Mary Williams (later Mrs. H. D. Dement) making the presentation address, and on June 1st the ladies presented the company with uniforms made by their own hands.

Two other companies, the "Dixon Cadets" and "Dixon Blues," were organized within a few days, but were not needed, as the regiments under the first call of the President for troops were already full.

October 1, 1861, a recruiting camp was established on the bank of the river in West Dixon.

December 5, 1861, "Dement Phalanx" went into winter-quarters, in a vacant stone building, now part of Grand Detour Plow Works, referred to as Dement Barracks. It was organized as "Co. H," Forty-sixth Illinois, John Stevens Captain, and left for Springfield, February 2, 1862, to join the regiment.

June 20, 1861, the "Volunteer Aid Association" secured subscriptions to the amount of $2,625 for the benefit of the families of absent volunteers, and, in 1864, the young men in the public schools formed a "Patriotic Club," for the purpose of assisting soldiers' widows and families by chopping firewood, doing chores and the like.

March 28, 1862, the ladies of Dixon formed a Soldiers' Aid Society.

June 10, 1862, another company was organized with Jas. W. Reardon as Captain. Its principal service was the guarding of rebel prisoners confined in Camp Douglas, Chicago. It was enlisted for three months and became Co. H, Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

May 21, 1863, John V. Eustace was appointed Provost Marshal for this Congressional District, with office in Dixon.

November 26, 1863, the Board of Supervisors offered a bounty of $100 to every accepted volunteer from the county.

January 21, 1864, the Thirty-fourth Regiment, which went out 1,000 strong, returned on thirty days' furlough only 340 strong. They were given a public reception.

June 16, 1864, the One Hundred Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which had been in camp at Dement Barracks about six weeks, departed for Springfield, where it was mustered into the service, with Lorenzo H. Whitney, Colonel; Michael W. Smith, Lieutenant Colonel; and William O. Evans, Major.

June 21, 1864, Company A of the Thirteenth Regiment returned. A concourse of people met them at the depot and escorted them to the Court House, where a sumptuous dinner awaited them. (See "Lee County in War of Rebellion.")

Dixon in Spanish-American War.—A company of 100 men left Dixon for the camp of rendezvous at Springfield, at three o'clock on the morning of April 27, 1898. About half the number were members of Company G, of the Sixth Regiment State Militia. They were under command of Capt. Philip McGrath, of Wosung, and Maj. W. C. Baldwin, of Dixon. Martial spirit ran high up to the hour of their departure. A farewell demonstration was held in front of the Nachusa House, at which Mayor Truman presided and stirring addresses were made. A Sterling company joined the Dixon company here en route to the State Capital, and the night was taken up with attentions to the soldier boys. After partaking of a supper served at the Armory by the Woman's Relief Corps, about midnight they were escorted to the Illinois Central Railroad depot by the Grand Army Post and civic societies, and sent on their way midst the huzzas of the crowd and strains of martial music.

September 21, 1898, the company returned, after having served in Cuba and Porto Rico. It was a bright day, and it seemed as if the whole town was out to greet them on their march to the armory on Second Street, where a royal dinner, furnished by the citizens and served by Mr. Young of the Nachusa House, awaited them. In the evening a band concert in Court House Park and a reception and dance tendered the soldiers in Rosbrook's Hall, testified to the joy of the community at their return. The officers on return were, Philip McGrath, Captain; C. E. Frisby, First Lieutenant; H. B. Trowbridge, Second Lieutenant; S. Frisby, M. J. Doctor, H. T. Roberbeck, C. H. Nye and Sam. Cushing, Sergeants. Corporals, other subordinate officers and privates numbered 72. Maj. Baldwin contracted a disease from which he died in hospital before reaching home. He was buried at Oakwood Cemetery, a few weeks later, with honors becoming his rank and service.

Grand Army of the Republic.—Dixon Post, No. 299, Department of Illinois, was organized June 29, 1883, in the court room of the Court House, with Charles W. Dey as Commander; Dwight Heaton, S. V. C.; David Erisman, J. V. C.; A. F. Robinson, Chap.; D. H. Law, Surg.; G. G. Messer, Q. M.; H. W. Eaton, Adj.; Wm. Coffey, O. D.; Louis Allemand, O. G.; H. S. Palmer, S. M.; John Merriman, Q. M. S. The post has prospered and now has a membership of 123 in good standing. The present officers are: M. M. Avery, Com.; H. C. Cook, S. V.; ——— White, J. V.; S. W. Youngman, Q. M.; William Post, Chap.; Alex. Depuy, Surg.; C. W. Dey, Adj.; L. W. Mitchell, Q. M. S.; Calvin Frisbee, S. M.; S. F. Thomas, O. D.; Wm. A. Vann, O. G.; L. W. Mitchell, C. H. Noble and S. S. Dodge, Trustees.

Women's Relief Corps.—Dixon W. R. C. No. 218, auxiliary to G. A. R., was organized, December 12, 1892, with one hundred members, which has increased to 223, ranking first in the State in charter membership, and second in present membership. Its first officers were Dorothy N. Law, President; Grace Johnson, S. V.; Hattie Dodge, J. V.; Mary A. Noble, Sec.; Catharine J. Thompson, Treas.; Evelyn Street, Chap.; Rachel M. H. Dey, Conductor; Rachel Guthrie, Asst. Cond.; Ella Parkhurst, Guard; Sarah A. Brubaker, Assistant Guard. The present officers are: Clara Goodrich, President; Nellie Eastman, S. V.; Carrie Meyers, J. V.; Harriet Smith, Sec.; Nettie Dixon, Treas.; Nancy Prescott, Chap.; Katherine Greig, Cond.; Nellie Johnson, Asst. Cond.; Lydia Cummings, Guard; Ella Bresia, Asst. Guard; Lucy Rosbrook, Ella Drew, Fannie Toot, Anna Gray, Color-Bearers; Eda Honey, Instructor; Hattie Reed, Musician. The Corps has done a splendid work in caring for afflicted soldiers and those dependent upon them. It has been a model of harmonious cooperation and efficient work.

Hospital.—Dixon has a hospital of which it is justly proud. It was built in 1896 at a cost, including furnishings, of about $12,000, and was opened for patients January 1, 1897. This beneficent enterprise was made possible through the initiatory benevolence of one of Dixon's citizens, Mr. Solomon H. Bethea. The beautiful, and in every way suitable, site on which the building stands, was purchased by him at a cost of $3,500 and donated to the city for this purpose. To avail of this gift the hospital was established by ordinance of the City Council, passed November 1, 1895, "for use and benefit of the inhabitants of said city, with a Board of Directors of nine women, to be chosen from the citizens at large by the Mayor, with approval of the Council," and by resolution of the Board it was very appropriately named the "Katherine Shaw Bethea Memorial Hospital." November 1, 1896, Mary A. Noble, Sarah J. Brubaker, Louise B. Cumins, Lizzie J. Shaw, Susan A. Smith, Delia L. Watson, Nellie McMartin, Kittie Finley and Annie Geisenheimer were chosen as the first Board of Directors, which was organized by the election of Mary A. Noble, President; Lizzie J. Shaw, Vice President; Kittie Finley, Secretary, and Nellie McMartin, Treasurer.

Mr. Bethea conveyed the grounds to the "Dixon Public Hospital" by deed, dated May 26, 1896, and recorded in the Recorder's office, in Book 71 of Deeds, p. 138, in memory of his wife, Katherine Shaw Bethea. The conditions of the grant, as set forth in the deed, are very explicit and in reality form the operative framework of the institution.

The building was erected by contributions from various sources. Citizens of Dixon had raised a purse to secure the removal to Dixon from Jefferson City, Mo., of the third of the shoe factories of C. M. Henderson & Co. Mr. F. A. Watson, manager of these factories, procured the consent of the contributors that three thousand dollars of this purse might be turned over to the hospital fund, instead of being used for the benefit of his company, as intended. The city appropriated $1,000 to the building. The remainder of the cost was raised by individual contributions and entertainments. We would be glad to insert the names of all the givers with amounts, did space permit, but can only make room for subscriptions of $100 and over: Theron Cumins, for sun room (since converted into wards), $700; C. M. Henderson & Co., $500; Grand Detour Plow Company, $500; Geo. H. Squires, $200; J. C. Ayres, $200; Mrs. Jos. Crawford, $200; Mrs. H. T. Noble, $200; Loveland & Stitley, $150; C. F. Emerson Lumber Co., $100; I. B. Countryman, $100; J. W. Crawford, $100; J. D. Crabtree, $100; C. H. Hughes, $100; C. H. Fargo & Co., $100. The total raised up to December 31, 1896, was $7,831.68.

Not less to be appreciated was the assistance afforded by individuals and societies, in the way of furnishing patients' rooms and equipping the institution for its humane work. Mrs.

F. A. Watson furnished one room; Mrs. John Reilly another; the ladies of Palmyra, one; and the Lutheran, Methodist, Catholic and Episcopal churches each did the same, while Miss Lizzie J. Shaw furnished the reception room. The room outfits consisted of suitable furniture, bedding, linen and other necessities and conveniences. In each instance, generosity and good taste regulated the supply. It was estimated that the cost did not average less than $200 per room; and, with only one or two exceptions, the donors have kept up the equipments of their respective rooms. The contributions of Mrs. Crawford and Mrs. Noble were applied to the equipment of the operating and etherizing room, with all modern accessories.

The hospital is supported by reasonable charges where patients are able to pay, and by a yearly appropriation from the City Council; and for a number of years the Board of Supervisors, recognizing the benefits to the county as a whole from a humanitarian, as well as a business standpoint, have annually voted $500 to its support. Mr. Theron Cumins, by his will, bequeathed $5,000 as a permanent fund for its benefit, the interest alone being available. In addition to these sources of revenue, charitable contributions in the shape of money or supplies are received and highly appreciated. By the terms of the deed referred to, provision is made for the safeguarding of gifts or bequests which may be made to the institution for any special purpose, thus assuring those who are philanthropically disposed that the terms of their benefactions will be faithfully observed.

The present Board of Trustees consists of Mrs. Susan S. Smith, President; Mrs. Louise Cumins, Vice President; Miss Anna L. Geisenheimer, Secretary; Miss Nellie McMartin, Treasurer; Miss Lizzie J. Shaw, Mrs. Delia L. Watson, Mrs. Carrie Todd, Mrs. Jennie McAlpine and Miss Kittie Finley.

Library.—Dixon is not only proud of its Public Library and Hospital, but of the public spirit and generosity that prompted them. The O. B. Dodge Library, a gift by deed to the city from the citizen for whom it is named, is not only architecturally beautiful without and within, but possesses all modern conveniences suited to a library of its size, and is admirably adapted to the purpose to which it is devoted. Construction was commenced in 1900 and the building opened and dedicated to public use, by appropriate exercises, February 16, 1901. The building and grounds cost $22,000.

In admirable keeping with the spirit of this noble gift, came a library endowment of $15,000 from the estate of another citizen, Theron Cumins, deceased, which was placed in the hands of the Trustees at the dedication, and the income from which is to be used for the purchase of books. In addition to this income, the city makes an annual appropriation towards the support of the library. Mr. Dodge's gift carries with it the condition that the city shall maintain the library and keep it open every week day. The present Library Board are: O. B. Dodge, E. C. Parsons, J. C. Ayres, B. F. Shaw, Geo. H. Squires, E. E. Wingert, C. E. Groves, H. W. Baldwin and J. B. Dille, O. B. Dodge being President; E. C. Parsons, Secretary, and J. C. Ayres, Treasurer.

Earlier efforts towards a public library must not be overlooked. As early as 1872 the Dixon Hose Company got together a library of 500 volumes, mostly donated, Alexander Charters alone giving 150 and the Women's Christian Temperance Union 300. Started originally solely for the benefit of the members of the company, it became a public library in 1873, where persons paying an annual fee of one dollar became entitled to its privileges. Under this policy the volumes increased to 2,000 in 1884.

In 1895 the City Council passed an ordinance establishing a public library under the State law, which was opened January 1, 1896. On the 1st of the following June the Hose Company library was merged in this public library. Up to the date of the change the Hose Company had raised $1,500 by means of memberships, entertainments and fairs. The popularity of the Company's undertaking will be appreciated, when it is recalled that $875 was once cleared in a single night's entertainment. All honor to the Hose Company for its splendid work. The volumes it accumulated are now in the O. B. Dodge Library.

The first Library Board appointed by the City Council at the organization of the Public Library consisted of O. B. Dodge, J. C. Ayres, J. B. Charters, B. F. Shaw, G. H. Squires, J. E. Dille, William Jenkins, J. C. Joselyn and E. E. Wingert.

Rock River Assembly.—This, one of the most highly prized institutions of which Dixon may rightfully boast, is controlled by the Lutherans. Its inception sprang from a movement at a meeting of the Synod of that denomination, held at Lena, Ill., September 27 to October 2, 1887, to inaugurate a summer Sunday School Institute. Rev. J. M. Ruthrauff, then pastor of the church at Dixon (recently deceased), suggested that it be made a reunion occasion for members and friends of the church and Sunday school, and that an attractive grove, by some body of water, be selected as the meeting place where rest and recreation might combine with church work. The outcome was a meeting beginning on the night of July 17, 1888, and closing on the 18th at Hazelwood, three miles up the river from Dixon. The vacated residence or the once owner, Alexander Charters, and the log cabin, which was his first dwelling, and seven tents accommodated the campers. Rev. J. W. Ruthrauff was elected President and Rev. W. H. Hartman Secretary. The total expense of the session was about $50. About two hundred were present from abroad. The next year a ten days' session was held at the same place and, by a small admission fee for persons and conveyances, $700 was realized, which exceeded expenses by ten dollars. The present name was given to the enterprise, and a committee appointed to secure a permanent location, as the Charters estate had parted with Hazelwood. The committee consisted of Revs. J. M. Ruthrauff, W. H. Hartman, J. J. Delo and Owen Clymer, W. T. Schell and A. A. Krape, who selected the present site. The ground was rented with an option to purchase expiring September 1, 1890. At the August assemblage the stock of a company with $10,000 capital was all subscribed, and a permanent organization was effected with J. M. Ruthrauff, W. T. Schell, Geo. W. Bruner, O. B. Blackman, F. Klosterman, O. Clymer, W. H. Hartman, H. A. Ott and A. A. Krape, Directors, who made Ruthrauff President; Krape, Vice President; Hartman, Secretary, and Schell, Treasurer.

The grounds, consisting of about thirty-four acres, were purchased at $150 per acre by deed dated November 1, 1890. A hotel was built and a tabernacle 75 feet wide by 110 feet long, ready for the session of 1891. This was superseded in 1900 by a splendid auditorium costing about $8,000, with a seating capacity of 5,000 people. It is circular in form, 160 feet in diameter without supporting posts anywhere to obstruct the view. It was projected by Mr. R. J. Bennett of Chicago, who contributed $1,000 towards its cost. Mr. Morrison H. Vail, now of Dixon, was the architect.

Cemetery.—The first burial was that of a man by the name of Lafferty, who died in the fall of 1836.

In 1882 or 1883 a considerable extension of the grounds was added on the south and east, and in the summer of the present year (1903) the city entered into contract carrying the grounds still further eastward. The cemetery has always been owned and controlled by the city. Scant attention was, however, paid to it until about 1890 or 1891, when, largely through the efforts of Ald. C. C. Godfrey in preventing the revenues of the cemetery from being diverted to other uses, means were at hand for improvement. From that time the betterment was manifest. A few years later the city accepted the aid and co-operation of a number of ladies, under the name of the Cemetery Association, but for some time past their services seem not to have been sought.

The Dixon Loan & Building Association was organized in June, 1887. Its first officers were Sherwood Dixon, President; A. C. Bardwell, Vice President; Jas. A. Hawley, Treasurer; W. D. Barge, Attorney; Lloyd R. Hawley, Secretary. Its present officers: C. H. Hughes, President; M. Maloney, Vice President; A. P. Armington, Treasurer; H. S. Dixon, Attorney; J. N. Sterling, Secretary.

Its first statement, December 1, 1887, showed assets amounting to $3,335.05. Its last statement, June 1, 1903, gave assets, $88,478.86. The first statement showed loans in force, $3,200; the last, $81,000 in force.

The total number of loans has been 272, aggregating $304,400. The Association has furnished the funds for building over 200 new houses in Dixon, and has enabled its members to purchase over fifty houses already built. In the last sixty-five months, since the stock commenced maturing, it has paid its stockholders $162,000—certainly a valuable institution to the community. During the sixteen years of its existence it has had but one foreclosure.

Mayors.—At the election, March 7, 1859, John Dement was elected Mayor, but failed to qualify. Alderman Joseph Crawford served as acting Mayor until a special election, April 4th, when A. C. Stedman was chosen to fill the vacancy. The Mayors in succession have been: A. C. Stedman, 1859-1860; G. L. Herrick, 1861; Jas. B. Charters, 1862; Oliver Everett, 1863; Jas. K. Edsall, 1864; Person Cheney, Jr., 1865-6; Andrew McPherran, 1867-8; John Dement, 1869-72; Joseph Crawford, 1873-5; Jas. A. Hawley, 1876-7; John Dement, 1878-9; John V. Thomas, 1880-4; R. S. Farrand, 1885-6; A. C. Warner, 1886-7; S. H. Bethea, 1888-9; H. T. Noble, 1890-1; Geo. Steel, 1891-2; J. F. Palmer, 1893-4; Chas. H. Hughes, 1895-6; F. A. Truman, 1897-9; Chas. H. Hughes, 1900-1; F. A. Truman, 1901-02; Henry S. Dixon, 1903, present incumbent.

City Clerks and Treasurers.—A. P. Curry, 1859; Jas. L. Camp, 1860; J. C. Ayres, 1861-84; Geo. Steel, 1885-7; A. C. Warner, 1888; E. W. Smith, 1890, present incumbent.

Dixon is still governed under its original special charter and amendments thereto, the provisions of the general law relating to cities and villages never having been adopted.

City Lighting.—December 22, 1874, the Western Excelsior Gas Company commenced operation. Its franchise was, however, repealed May 10, 1877, and in June, 1877, one was granted to J. D. Patton, under which Henry C. Higgins and Thomas Higgins established the gas plant now in operation. The company was known as the Dixon Gas Company, and was succeeded by the Dixon Gas and Electric Light Company. November 13, 1889, the city granted a franchise to F. A. Watson, and the Dixon Light & Power Company was formed to operate under it. An electric light plant was placed in the larger shoe factory of C. M. Henderson & Co., in West End, and supplied electric light, while the Gas & Electric Light Company limited its product to gas. In the winter of 1891 the two companies consolidated under the name of the Dixon Power & Lighting Company, its first officers being: F. A. Watson, President; Geo. Steel, Vice President; Geo. C. Loveland, Secretary. In August, 1892, the company purchased the property at the water power, then known as the Becker & Underwood Flour Mills, and moving its machinery from the shoe factory, commenced running there April 1, 1893. In fall of 1898 the company commenced the erection of an addition on the adjoining lot, formerly known as the "Farmers'" or "Thompson's" Mill, and on April 1, 1899, the machinery there installed was set in motion. This company now supplies electric light and gas to the city and its inhabitants. Its officers are: F. A. Watson, President; H. E. Paine, Vice President; I. B. Countryman, Secretary; F. E. Stiteley, Treasurer; E. P. Maxwell, superintendent.

The city has recently granted a franchise to the Sterling, Dixon & Eastern Railway Company, to use the streets in supplying gas and electric light in competition with the former company. The gas plant is now being erected and pipes laid. The franchise has passed into the hands of the Lee County Lighting Company, a corporation with $100,000 capital. The first Board of Directors consists of Henry C. Higgins, John Van Dyke, Jr., Scrynton Stockdale, John I. Biggs and Charles H. Hughes.

Water Works.—During the winter of 1871-2 water mains were laid, from a rotary pump which had been installed at the water power, extending to the corner of Galena and First Streets, at a cost of $600.

July 18, 1883, the city granted a franchise to Alex. H. McNeal. S. S. Murphy was his agent and the real projector of the enterprise. The Dixon Water Works Company was incorporated May 10, 1884, with a capital of $75,000, to take over the McNeal franchise. The capital was reduced to $60,000, June 28, 1890. The duration of the franchise was thirty years. The company is now operating under this franchise. The works were in operation in 1884. Bonds were issued to the extent of the capital, and the mortgage securing them was ultimately foreclosed in the United States Court, Chicago, and sale made to the bondholders; but before the deed was issued, A. K. Trusdell, J. D. Crabtree, J. A. Hawley and S. S. Murphy purchased the works. The first officers under the new management were: J. D. Crabtree, President; J. A. Hawley, Secretary and Treasurer; Jno. Wasley, superintendent. This was continued until after Mr. Hawley's death, when, on May 9, 1899, his son, Geo. Hawley, succeeded his father as director and A. K. Trusdell was made President and J. D. Crabtree, Secretary and Treasurer. After Judge Crabtree's death, his son, John B., succeeded him as Director and also as Secretary and Treasurer; and the organization so stands at this date.

The water is obtained from three flowing artesian wells, which draw their supply from water-bearing rock (St. Peter's sandstone). In the winter of 1890-91 two wells were put down, one to a depth of 1600 feet, the other to a depth of 1650 feet. In 1894 another was sunk to a depth of 1700 feet. By these wells an ample supply of superior water for all purposes is assured. As originally constructed the water was pumped directly from the river. The main carrying the water across the river rests on the bed of the stream a short distance below the Galena Street bridge.

The water is distributed to consumers through about fifteen miles of mains, on which are 165 hydrants for fire protection. The consumers number about one hundred. The actual average pumpage in twenty-four hours is about 2,500,000 gallons. The natural flow from the wells into the reservoir at the works is 600 to 700 gallons per minute. The capacity of the reservoir is a half million gallons, and of the standpipe near the cemetery, 270,000 gallons. Analysis of the water shows: The total solids in a gallon, 17.5875 grains, distributed in grains and fractions of a grain, thus: Silica, .6424; oxide of aluminum and iron, .2219; carbonate of lime, 7.8006; carbonate of magnesia, 7.5154; chloride of sodium, 1.3472.

The Citizens' Association of Dixon was incorporated April 18, 1887, with Jason C. Ayres, C. F. Emerson, E. W. Smith, Joseph F. Palmer, S. S. Dodge, Chas. H. Noble and Geo. D. Laing, as directors for first year. Purpose: "To promote the interest of the City of Dixon and develop its natural resources." The present organization is J. C. Ayres, President; C. H. Noble, Vice President; E. C. Smith, Secretary; A. C. Warner, Corresponding Secretary; I. B. Countryman, Treasurer; R. S. Farrand, O. B. Dodge, M. Maloney, W. B. Page, E. C. Parsons. The association is governed by by-laws, and had an original membership of 88. It was through this association that the Fargo Shoe Factory was secured, and other good work for the city has been done.

Growth.—The growth of Dixon in recent years may be judged of to some extent by its Postoffice receipts. In 1899 they were $19,710.38; 1900, $21,236.87; 1901, $22,706.47. In 1902 they fell off somewhat, owing to reduction in classification of matter other than volume of business. The receipts that year were $21,600.35.

The following statement of improvements for the five years named, was compiled by insurance agencies and published in city papers: Business improvements of all kinds, except "roads, sidewalks and sewers," 1897, $48,410; 1898, $97,657; 1899, $84,125; 1900, $195,000; 1901, $61,000. Number of new dwellings and cost of same: 85 in 1897, costing $111,325; 90 in 1898, $135,575; 111 in 1899, $147,675; 76 in 1900, $109,650; 77 in 1901, $154,500. No statement was made for 1902, but building that year was less than in previous years.

Population.—In 1837 there were 13 families residing at or near the ferry. In 1839 the number had increased to 40 families. By 1850 the township numbered 1,073. November 7, 1855, it reached 3,054. In 1860 it was 3,408. In 1870 the number was 4,687; 1880, 4,241. (Whether the figures for 1855, 1860 and 1870 are limited to the village or embrace the entire township, we have no means of ascertaining.) The population of the township, including the city, as shown by the census, was 5,804 in 1890, and 9,128 in 1900. The population of the city, by wards, the latter year, was: First Ward, 2,027; Second Ward, 1,522; Third Ward, 2,643; Fourth Ward, 1,725. The school census of June, 1903, showed persons under 21—south side, 2,321, north side, 843.

Postmasters, in order of service: Gay, John Dixon, from Sept. 29, 1830, to summer of 1837; D. B. McKenney, Smith Gilbraith, Abram Brown, David H. Birdsall, A. T. Murphy, Joseph Cleaver, E. B. Baker, J. L. Camp, Mary A. Camp, Jas. B. Charters, Michael Maloney, Benj. F. Shaw, present incumbent.

EAST GROVE TOWNSHIP.

EAST GROVE SET OFF FROM HAMILTON TOWNSHIP—THE FIRST SETTLER—LATER ARRIVALS—AN EARLY MURDER—THE "UNION CHURCH"—PE-ORIA, DIXON AND GALENA STATE ROAD.

At the November session, 1864, of the Board of Supervisors, East Grove was set apart from Hamilton Township. In 1837 Charles Falvey occupied a claim on the north half of Section 34 in the grove, from which the town took its name. On the north his nearest neighbor was a Mr. Robinson, six miles distant. In 1849 Fenwick Anderson settled on the south half of Section 34, having purchased the claim of Robert Tate. The house, which was built of logs, was for a number of years a stopping place for the stage on the line from Peoria to Dixon and Galena. In 1852 Mr. Anderson burnt a kiln of 200,000 brick in the south part of the grove, which proved to be of excellent quality and with which he built his residence. Thomas Shehan moved onto Section 5 in 1849, buying a claim of one John Kasbier. At the time of the land sale at Dixon, in 1844, S. P. McIntosh purchased the east half of Section 36, but did not move onto it until 1856. John Downey, A. A. Spooner, John Flynn, M. Coleman, A. Harlow, D. Sullivan, Henry Hubbell and Samuel Tubbs were also early settlers.

In 1842 John W. Harrison, a Deputy Sheriff from Toronto, Canada, while on a visit in this region, was murdered by James S. Bell, near the north-west corner of Section 35. Bell was finally tried in Whiteside County, on charge of venue, and sent to the penitentiary.

On the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of Section 10 stands a church, known as the "Union Church," which was built a number of years ago by contributions of citizens without regard to denominational distinction.

The old State road from Peoria to Dixon and Galena passed through the centers of Section 10 and 13 and jogged east on or near the Marion town line, for a distance of about 20 rods west of the east line of Section 34, and thence passed directly north until it crosses Inlet Creek, or Green River. This road was turnpiked under authority from the Legislature. (See "Marion Township.")

The population of the township in 1890 was 659; in 1900 it was 653, as appears by Government census.

HAMILTON TOWNSHIP.

ORIGINAL DIMENSIONS OF THE TOWNSHIP—FIRST SUPERVISORS AND EARLY SETTLERS—PASTOR
N. G. COLLINS—EARLY SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

This town originally included what are now the towns of Harmon, East Grove, May and the south half of Marion. By the organization of these towns, Hamilton has been shaved down until it is now limited to a government township. William B. Stuart was the first Supervisor of the original town. After serving two years he was succeeded by R. B. Viele, who continued in office three years, when Mr. Stuart was again elected for two years.

What is further said here will relate to the township as at present formed. The first dwelling house in the township was of logs and built by Charles and Roos Freeman, on the south half of Section 32, and was occupied by the former, but as their sojourn was of a temporary character, Jacob Pope, who came in 1854 and located on the south half of the southeast quarter of Section 26, is considered the first permanent settler. Dolph Freeman, a brother of Roos and Charles, built a small one-story house several years later on the southeast corner of Section 31, and he and his mother lived there two or three years, when, in the spring of 1865, the school directors bought the house for $163 and moved it to the southeast corner of Section 34, where it was fitted up for a school-house. The first teacher who taught in it was Electa J. Minnerley, who afterwards was a candidate before the Republican County Convention for Superintendent of Schools. In the spring of 1871 the house was moved to the present site near the northwest corner of the northwest quarter of Section 35. In the summer of 1872 a new house was built. A. T. Keigwin bought the old house and it again started on its last journey to the old homestead, where it now is.

A. T. Keigwin built on the northwest quarter of Section 27 in the spring of 1858, and a Mr. Carpenter built on the northeast quarter of Section 26 in the spring of 1859. Mr. Carpenter farmed that season and moved to La Moille in the winter or fall, and from there went to Mendota, where he embarked in the manufacture of organs under the firm name of Tewksbury & Carpenter, having been engaged in the same business in Vermont, his old home. Anson Stone and his sons, R. P. and S. O., bought out Mr. Carpenter and occupied the place in 1860.

Morris Logue occupied the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 27, built a shanty and broke his land during the same year, and the next season brought his family. David and John Knight arrived the same year, purchased Section 35 and erected a house on his land the following year. In 1857 David Griggs located on the southeast quarter of Section 34, a house having been erected for him during the previous year. J. F. McMurray also came the same year and settled on the southeast quarter of Section 33. J. Shields bought and occupied the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 24 and most of the southeast quarter of Section 13 in 1858. William Skully settled on the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 24 in that year. Michael Dunn came a year later and located on the southeast quarter and south half of the northwest quarter of Section 24. Bennett Havens, who served as Supervisor several years, purchased the south half of the northeast quarter of Section 36, and was one of the early comers. L. B. Moore, on the southwest quarter and west half of the northwest quarter of Section 24, and Michael Flemming, on the south half of the southwest quarter of the same section, were early settlers. J. L. Reed located on the west half of the southeast quarter of Section 23 in 1862.

It will be noted that all of these settlements were south of the swamp. That portion lying north of the swamp remained unsettled for many years, and served as a range for cattle. A. T. Anderson, of Polo, owned a large farm on the north part of Section 7. Perhaps the first to break any of the prairie on this side for cultivation was William Rink, on Section 5. John D. Shaffer built his cabin on Section 8, and herded cattle for several years. James Durr was on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 19 in 1862.

Rev. N. G. Collins was a considerable factor in the early history of the town. A man of great energy, he was ambitious to own and farm large tracts of land. He became Chaplain of the Fifty-seventh Illinois Infantry in the War of the Rebellion. Though not a success as a farmer, his ambition was in part realized, for at the close of the war he had saved of his holdings Sections 8, 28, 29, 30 and the west half of 31. At the marriage of his daughter, his wedding gift was a deed to Section 8. Mr. Collins was pastor of a Baptist church at LaMoille for a number of years.

The first school in the town was taught in the residence of David Griggs. Mrs. Cornelia Maona, daughter of A. T. Keigwin, was the teacher. This was in 1861 or 1862. Miss Lizzie Larkins succeeded her the following summer, and later, Miss Lavina Swisher presided. Mr. McMurray moved into Bureau County and the house he left was made into a school house and Mrs. Maona taught there. All this was before school districts were organized. The teachers were paid by private subscription. In the fall of 1863 or '64 school district No. 1 was organized. The new school house was erected on the west side of the west half of the northwest quarter of Section 35 in 1874. District No. 2 was organized about the same time as District No. 1. The first school was opened in a portion of Thaddeus May's dwelling on Section 26 by Miss Lydia Havens. The first school house in this district was built in 1864 or '65, at the southeast corner of Section 25. It was moved afterwards to the southwest corner of the same Section.

The first preaching the settlers had was in a little school house known as the Dodge school-house, on the prairie over the line in Bureau County. The abundance of game encouraged the gunning propensity on the Sabbath in the early days; and to reform this habit, David Griggs, William Griggs, Solomon Welsh, J. F. McMurray, Johnson Griggs and J. H. Knight contributed to pay for preaching and employed their neighbor, Rev. Ford, who lived at the east end of Red Oak Grove, paying him fifty cents for each Sunday. A Baptist church was early organized at Walnut in Bureau County, Amos T. Keigwin and wife, Ezekiel Sayers and wife, S. H. Sayers and Lydia Stone, of Hamilton, being among the organizers. For a number of years meetings were held in the township at the residences of the members. When the village of Walnut sprang into existence, the services were confined to that place where, in 1871, a fine church building was erected.

The population of the township in 1890 was 329, and in 1900, 498, as shown by the Government census.

HARMON TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWNSHIP—SOME EARLY SETTLERS—FIRST ELECTION—WILD GAME—HARMON VILLAGE LAID OUT—GRAIN ELEVATORS, CHURCHES AND BUSINESS HOUSES.

The Township of Harmon was set off from Marion by resolution of the Board of Supervisors, at its March meeting, 1867. The petition asked to have the town named Dayton, but the Board took the responsibility of substituting the present name. The writer has been informed by one who ought to know, that this name was given the township in honor of Harmon Wasson, the son of Benjamin Wasson of Amboy Township.

In 1853 John D. Rosbrook, with three sons, settled at the lake, a clear body of water covering nearly forty acres on the northwest quarter in the village was built by J. M. Jater of Section 25. There was no other dwelling nearer than eight miles. The following spring the two remaining sons came. In 1854 Mrs. Robert Tuttle, a widowed sister of Mitchell Rosbrook, with her family of five children, settled in the township. During the same year came Thomas Sutton and settled with his large family one mile south of the lake. This family eventually, including nineteen children, became conspicuous in that part of the country, not only for their number but for their rugged and boisterous methods. In 1854 Mitchell Rosbrook, with his wife and five children, joined the settlement. To him is credited the founding of the first Sunday-school in Harmon, it being very successfully conducted in John D. Rosbrook's granary.

The first two elections in the township were held at the house of Mitchell Rosbrook. James McManus was elected Supervisor; Rosbrook, Town Clerk; and George Stillings, Constable. In the winter of 1856-7, Austin Balch came with his wife and two children. About this time the Brills reached the settlement, and also Patrick Grogan. The years 1856 and '57 witnessed large accessions. Joseph Julien, a brother of Anton and John; E. A. Balch, C. H. Seifken, Israel Perkins, James Porter, George Stillings and Charles Craby were among the early settlers. In 1855 Lewis Hullinger settled on the southwest quarter of Section 7.

In Harmon in pioneer days wild game abounded. We have it on good authority that one hunter brought down one hundred geese in a single day, and that another shot sixty-six mallard ducks at one discharge, a drove of thirteen deer were chased by men on horseback past the Rosbrook place, and five were killed after pursuit of several miles. These statements seem a little incredible now, but are well authenticated. One of the early settlers ventures to say that it was not an uncommon sight to see a thousand acres covered with sand-hill cranes—a bird which has now almost disappeared.

In 1856 a drove of 5,000 Texas steers were driven through Harmon on their way to Chicago. The summer had been consumed on the drive. In 1857, 2,000 very large, fat hogs were also driven through the town, but headed westward.

Village of Harmon.—The village of Harmon was platted, March 15, 1872, for Joel H. Wicker, Charles G. Wicker, Jonas S. Meekling and Alonzo Kinyon. The first elevator ques & Bro., and is now operated by the Neola Elevator Company. The second elevator was built by O. E. McIntyre and is now operated by the Atlas Elevator Company. The third was built, and is now operated by Frank Hettinger.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church was organized, September 20, 1862, Rev. J. Pinkney being the first pastor. The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1871, Rev. Rive being the first pastor. The Catholic church was built about 1874, and has been recently remodeled and repaired. It had no resident priest until it was made an independent parish about four years ago, under the pastorate of Father McGrath. Father Ryan was his successor and is now in charge. Prior to the establishment of the village the Wesleyan Methodists had a church building which is now used for a town hall. In 1882 the Methodist Episcopal Society erected their present church.

Sam Boyer, now of Dixon, started the first store in the new town, and Hempstead & Van Alstine the second general store. The first school-house to be built after the village was platted was located where the present one stands. This was followed by a larger frame building, which was consumed by fire in the early part of the winter of 1899. In its place was erected, in the summer of 1900, the present brick structure, which does credit to the community.

The population of the entire township was 840 in 1890, and 936 in 1900, as shown by the Government census.

CHAPTER XIV.

LEE CENTER TOWNSHIP.

---

FIRST WHITE SETTLER—OTHER EARLY ARRIVALS—CHURCH AND SCHOOL HISTORY—LEE CENTER ACADEMY AND VILLAGE.

Adolphus Bliss and wife were the first settlers within the territory later known as Lee Center, having located there in May, 1834. Mrs. Bliss was the first white woman to reside in the township, and the second in the county. It was a year before she had a neighbor nearer than Dixon. Mr. Bliss entered a claim on west half of southwest quarter of Section 4, and the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 9. The first to follow him was Corydon R. Dewey, who came in the following spring and entered a claim on the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 9, and later, but during the year, Cyrenus and Cyreno Sawyer joined them, and together took up a claim on the northeast quarter of Section 1. In the spring of 1836, Lewis Clapp settled on the northwest quarter of Section 8. In this year Charles F. Ingalls and his brother, George A., entered their claims in the southern part of Lee Center Township, on which a Pottawatomie Indian village then stood.

In 1837 Mr. David Tripp and family, with his brother-in-law Orange Webster, settled at Inlet. Mr. Birdsell was an arrival of the following year. During that year Dr. R. F. Adams arrived and was the first physician in the neighborhood. Roswell Streater filed a claim in 1838, on the land on which Lee Center is situated, and the following year built a log house in the edge of Inlet Grove, which was near his claim. He gave a portion of the land towards the erection and maintenance of an academy, which will be hereafter referred to. George E. Haskell early settled at the Grove. Two of the Ingalls brothers, Henry and Addison, first settled on the Illinois River near where Chandlerville now stands, and Abraham Lincoln surveyed the farm for one of them. Mr. Ralph Ford was also one of the early arrivals.

In the spring of 1836 the first sermon in the neighborhood was preached by Peter Cartwright in Mr. Dewey's house. In that year the first Methodist class was organized, with John Fosdick as leader. Mr. David Tripp was a Baptist, and services were now and then held in his house until he built a new barn, which was dedicated with protracted meeting. A Baptist society was organized with Mr. Webster as deacon and Mr. Tripp as clerk. Here meetings were held regularly until a school-house was built near the Dewey Mill. In 1835 Rev. Luke Hitchcock and Oscar F. Ayres came, and the former preached the first funeral sermon in the town. It was over the body of a young "circuit rider" by the name of Smith, who died at Tripp's homestead.

The first school-house was built in the edge of the timber on the Bliss land. George E. Haskell was teacher. It was a typical log structure. Moses Crombie settled in the village of Lee Center in 1840. Prior to the erection of this school house, Mrs. Crombie conducted a neighborhood school in her own house.

The first building occupied as a store stood on the ground where David Tripp's grout house stood. It was sold to George E. Haskell, who moved it nearer to Inlet Creek, where it stood a few years, when it was moved to the town of Lee Center and was occupied for some years by Joseph Cary.

The pioneer teacher was Ann Chamberlain, who in the summer occupied a room in Adolphus Bliss's house for her school. In the log school-house already referred to, Otis Timothy taught, and later settled at Franklin Grove where he died. His teaching was for three months in the winter of 1837-8. He had twenty to twenty-five pupils under his charge, and was paid at the rate of $15 per month. A log tavern kept by Benjamin Whittaker stood where Mr. Cephas Clapp lived in recent years. This was as early as 1839. The first wedding in the town was that of Albert Static and Elmira Carpenter, in 1836, Daniel M. Dewey, Justice of the Peace, performing the ceremony. Mr. James Brewer reached Inlet in 1843, having ridden on horseback from Montgomery, Ala., and later became principal of the academy.

There were other schools than those already mentioned. Mrs. Sallie P. Starks taught a class of five boys and five girls, ranging from one year old to near twenty-one; her teaching was for 12 hours a day all the year round.

Lee Center Academy.—The main part of the Academy building was constructed of brick and built in 1847, at a cost of $2,000. Mr. Moses Crombie was the contractor, and the school opened the same year and soon advanced to a leading rank among the educational institutions in that section. A certificate is found recorded in the Recorder's Office of the county, stating that Lewis Clapp, Luke Hitchcock, N. P. Swartwout, Martin Wright, Daniel Frost, Moses Crombie and R. F. Adams were elected Trustees of the Academy, March 3, 1847. The first Principal was Hiram McChesney, a graduate of Rensselaer Institute, of Troy, N. Y. He served one year, when he was succeeded by H. E. Leonard, of Naperville. After two years Rev. James Brewer, a graduate of Jamestown College, Mass., took charge remaining one year. After him came Simeon Wright, during whose three years of service the Academy reached a degree of prosperity never exceeded either before or after. The average attendance of the school in this year was 150 pupils. Prof. Nash came after Mr. Wright and remained until 1859, in which year he died. By this time other schools of importance had sprung up at Paw Paw, Dixon, Amboy and elsewhere, and the Academy, remote from railroads, began to decline, so that, in the year 1859, it became a graded district school. In 1853 a stone addition to the school-house was erected to accommodate the increasing needs of the institution.

In these days Lee Center was indeed a flourishing village, with an academy as its center of interest and activity. Lyceums, lectures and traveling entertainments were frequent in the chapel.

A Congregational Church was organized in 1843, at the home of Amos Crombie, near Binghamton in Amboy Township, with eleven members. The first pastor was Rev. Joseph Gardner. It was called the Congregational Church of Palestine Grove. Worship was conducted until 1849 in the Wasson school house, in Amboy Township, after which it was changed to Lee Center, when a building was erected in 1856 at a cost of $1,500. In another account of this society (see Amboy) John Worrell is mentioned as first pastor and Joseph Gardner as third. We are unable to determine which statement is correct.

A Methodist Church was organized in 1837, at the residence of Corydon R. Dewey, at Inlet Grove. Their first church building was erected in 1842, in which services were held until 1858, when a larger and more commodious one was built. For many years Luke Hitchcock was pastor. Philo Judson, afterwards an eminent foreign missionary, preached here, and "Father Penfield" often filled the pulpit. The building was badly racked by the tornado of June 3, 1860, and was finally demolished by a storm on October 30, 1882. Its place was supplied by a fine new structure erected in 1883-4.

It appears by a certificate, recorded in the Recorder's Office, that I. G. Dimick, C. R. Dewey, Daniel Frost, D. H. Birdsall and G. R. Lynn were elected Trustees of the "Methodist Episcopal Church at Inlet," December 12, 1840. On June 4, 1848, Daniel Frost, Solomon Matteson, A. W. Crombie, C. S. Frost, M. S. Curtis and Hezekiah McCune, were elected trustees of the "Methodist Episcopal Church of Lee Center." In 1849, trustees of a parsonage were elected, but we have been unable to learn when the building was constructed.

An Episcopal Church was organized in 1855, and a building erected in 1857, costing $2,500. The windows of the church were presented to the congregation by Bishop Whitehouse. The title was vested in the Bishop by instrument dated May 4, 1857. Dr. Charles Cardner and Garrett M. La Forge were the principal supporters, and after they left the town the services here declined until the building was abandoned and sold for other uses a very few years ago.

The country was greatly disturbed in the period from 1843 to 1850, by a succession of crimes indicating a thorough organization among the lawless class. The principals in the nefarious business are known in the annals of this and adjoining counties as the "Banditti of the Prairies." The vicinity of Inlet furnished one of their bases of operation. Counterfeiting, robbery and murder were included among their offenses. Two leading citizens of Inlet Grove—one of them a magistrate—were implicated in a robbery, and sent to the penitentiary where both died. Other citizens were found to be involved in like transactions. One turned state's evidence, which resulted in more arrests and the recovery of considerable stolen property. As a means of better contending with the law-breaking element, an "Association for Furthering the cause of Justice" was formed. The preamble of the constitution recited that, "appearances have plainly shown that Inlet Grove has been a resting place and depot for the numerous rogues that infest the country." A vigilance committee was appointed to hunt out and run down the rascals, by which effective work was done for the protection of the people and punishment of criminals.

The lands on which the pioneers settled were not open to purchase until 1844, when the first land sale occurred at Dixon. Hence the early settlers were known as "squatters," having no assurance that the lands they occupied would ever become their own. To protect themselves against the cupidity of interlopers who might seek to enter the lands of the first comers secretly, and also as a means of adjusting any differences which might arise between them touching their respective claims, the settlers of this neighborhood formed a "Squatters' Association," with a formal constitution containing rigid provisions for the mutual protection of its members. Similar movements were resorted to in other sections, and became known as "Grove Associations." The constitution of the one in the vicinity of Amboy was preserved by Ira Brewer, and bore date, "Inlet, Ogle County, Illinois, July 10th, 1837," and was subscribed by sixty-six members. The field of the association extended from Inlet half way to Knox, Dixon, Malugin, Palestine and Franklin Grove. George E. Haskell was the first president and Martin Wright the first clerk. The scheme called for a bond to be signed by each member, obligating him to convey to the adjoining claimant any land occupied by the latter which might, inadvertently or otherwise, be purchased by the former. Difficulties were apt to arise owing to the fact that the Government survey had not then been made. In a committee report of choice diction and marked seriousness, having much of the tone of a plea addressed to the membership, it is said: "The claims of all have been respected and a just regard had to the growth and prosperity of the neighborhood, in the accommodations afforded to all that wished to unite themselves to this community in nearness of settlement. But a change in our circumstances is about to take place. The rightful owner of the soil upon which we are located is to call upon us for his dues, and that too at a period not far distant. Some, and it is hoped all the members of this association, will be able to answer the call and obtain a title to the land which they now claim. In paying for land, whether at general land sales or under the preemption law, the individual so paying receives his title to the same, which no right of the claimant can ever reach."

The situation was manifestly one of grave peril to these frontiersmen who were in danger of losing the property—the home—which they had braved so much and forsaken so much to secure. As a rule, however, the community, by the intimidating force of a law of its own making, was able to protect the bona-fide settler against the barbarous greed of the "claim jumper." The early settlers brought with them much of the spirit of colonial days, and vigorously used all that was needed to meet the emergency.

Shaw Station was platted as "Shaw" on land of Sherman Shaw October 24, 1878. The place has an elevator operated by Chas. Guffin, a Congregational church, which was built five or six years ago, and a public school.

The population of the township in 1890 was 789, while in 1900 it was 876.

CHAPTER XV.

MARION TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWNSHIP AND FIRST OFFICERS—FIRST PERMANENT SETTLERS—SOME LATER ARRIVALS—TOWN OF WALTON PLATTED.

At the September session, 1854, of the Board of Supervisors, the north half of Town 20, Range 9, which had belonged to Amboy Township, the south half of Town 20, Range 9, and all of Town 20, Range 8, which had belonged to Hamilton Township, were set off as a town called Marion, to take effect from the first Tuesday in April, 1855. At the March meeting, 1867, the town of Harmon was created, leaving Marion a simple Government township, as it now exists. The first Supervisor of the new town was Alford Wolcott; Assessor, Sherman W. Caldwell; Justices of the Peace, Abram Morrison and A. S. Phillip; Town Clerk, Simon Dykman; Collector, David Morrison.

The first permanent settler in the town was David Welty, who came, as did many others, in pursuit of health. Starting from Buffalo, N. Y., in 1838, on a thorough-bred mare presented to him by a friend, he made the entire distance to Dixon's Ferry on horseback. His wife and son, John M., with Mr. and Mrs. Scott, her father and mother, reached Chicago by way of the lakes, and thence by stage to Dixon the next year. In 1840 he preempted land on Sections 34 and 35, Town 20, Range 9. Mr. Welty soon built a double log-house on the stage road leading from Peoria to Dixon. The lumber for the doors, window sash, floors, shingles, etc., was hauled from Chicago by team. He was considered wealthy, as riches were rated at that early date, while both he and his wife were educated and refined people who had been reared under the advantageous conditions afforded by the city of Buffalo, the home from which they emigrated. The floors of their log house were covered with velvet and Brussels carpets and costly rugs. The furniture was of mahogany and walnut, all brought from the East. The son, John M., writes: "The contrast between the log house and its belongings was so great, as to excite the wonder and admiration of strangers from the East who chanced to alight from the stages and enter our pioneer home. There were, for many years, only three houses between Dixon and Princeton, one at Dad Jo's Grove, one on the south side of Palestine Grove and the other in which we lived."

Near by was Green River, then known as Inlet Creek, which flowed through Mr. Welty's land, and here was, for many years, the only bridge across that stream. This bridge and a turnpike through the swamps were constructed under an act of the Legislature, approved February 19, 1839, granting authority to Henry W. Cleaveland to "erect a toll bridge across Green River and a causeway across the Winnebago Swamp, at or near the same." An act, approved February 3, 1843, provides for the selection of three inspectors to examine the work, and refers to it as located in Lee County, and requires their report to be filed in the office of the Clerk of that county. One toll gate was near the Welty house. The log house soon became an inn, where the traveling public were both fed and lodged. Although there was no other house in the settlement, it acquired the name of Scottville, by which it was for some time known. It may be that this was adopted out of regard for Gen. Scott, or was simply the use of the name of the old people, Mrs. Welty's father and mother.

With Mr. Welty came A. L. Porter, who settled in Dixon and was at one time Sheriff of the county. Contemporaneous with the coming of Mr. Welty to the township, was that of W. H. Blair, who located on Section 24. In 1841 J. C. Haley located on Section 13. In 1846 R. Scott settled on Section 15. George Keith arrived in 1861-62; Benjamin Brooks, long identified with the township, in 1856 bought the west half of the northwest quarter of Section 9, and soon became a resident. John R. Hawkins was an early settler, but in what year we are unable to ascertain. In 1856 Franklin H. Church settled on Section 2.

May 4, 1878, "Walton"—or "Town of Walton"—was platted on land of Price Jones. Marion Township had a population in 1890 of 750, and in 1900 of 741, as shown by Government census.

CHAPTER XVI.

MAY TOWNSHIP.

---

TOWN SET APART FROM HAMILTON TOWNSHIP IN
ACADEMY.

At the meeting of the Board of Supervisors, September, 1854, the Town of May was set apart from the Town of Hamilton, to which it had theretofore belonged. By the resolution the change was to take effect the first Tuesday in April, 1855. The name is said to have been selected in honor of a military officer of the name who fell in the battle of Palo Alto. The first settler in the township was Joseph Bay, who located on Section 13, south of Palestine Grove. The next was Ira Axtle, who located the same year on Section 6. In 1840, William Dolan, who became prominent in the town, settled on Section 14. Martin McGowen, J. Moran and John Darcy also came in 1840. In 1850 Andrew Kessler settled on Section 13. Joseph Hall came in 1857. In the latter year George Ash came and settled on Section 10. Also, in this year, Silas W. Avery arrived and settled on the northeast quarter of Section 7, while Hugh Fitzpatrick located on Section 19.

The township has always been strong in the number of its citizens belonging to the Catholic communion. In an early day the "Sandy Hill" church was built on the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 14. A brick building was erected and a cemetery started adjacent thereto. On the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of Section 17, St. Patrick's church was built at a later date. On the southwest corner of Section 25, St. Mary's church was erected in more recent years. At a very early date an academy was erected on the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of Section 24, where a school was, for many years, successfully conducted. This institution was the result of a bequest of Patrick Riley, who settled on Section 23 in 1848 and died in 1868, leaving his property for the establishment of a school. Martin McGowen and Patrick McCann were the trustees. The building was dedicated early in September, 1880, and the school soon had six sisters of the order of Benedictine nuns for teachers. It was a boarding-school for young ladies, but boys were received as day pupils. The situation, however, proved unfavorable, and the school was finally discontinued.

Across the road from this academy building was also erected a parsonage. The "Sandy Hill" church has been abandoned, but the furniture has been moved to the academy where weekly services are held. Father Kilkinney has been priest in charge for a number of years. At St. Mary's church services are conducted in German on the fourth Sunday of every month, by some priest from a near by parish.

The township had a population, in 1890, according to the Government census, of 703 and in 1900 of 654.

CHAPTER XVII.

NACHUSA TOWNSHIP.

---

NACHUSA SET OFF FROM CHINA TOWNSHIP—SOME ROAD AND BRIDGE HISTORY—EARLY SETTLERS—A FAMILY QUARREL—SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES
—NACHUSA VILLAGE.

Nachusa was set off from the Town of China, by resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Lee County February 7, 1871, being made up of the west half of the latter town. Dixon Township remained intact as first formed until the February meeting of the Board of Supervisors in 1872, when all lying east of the following line was detached and added to Nachusa: Commencing at the river and following the half section lines south to center of Section 34, thence east to center of Section 35, thence south to center of Section 2, thence west 80 rods, thence south to the north line of South Dixon. After two petitions had been rejected, a third was unanimously granted, without opposition, at the July meeting, 1877, restoring to Dixon the east half of Sections 10, 15, 22, 27 and the northeast quarter of Section 34. The construction of the bridge across the river at Grand Detour, in 1902, with its south terminus resting in the town of Nachusa, necessitated the repair of the approaching roads and rendered desirable the opening of a new and more direct highway to the bridge. Nachusa having failed—indeed, practically refused—to take the needed action, and having manifested such indifference on the subject as to arouse the indignation of the people most interested in the bridge, two petitions were placed before the Board of Supervisors, asking that the territory embracing the roads calling for repair and the projected new road be added to Dixon. Both of these petitions were defeated, but a third petition offered at the September meeting, in 1903, resulted in detaching from Nachusa all the territory embraced in Towns 21 and 22, Range 9, and adding it to the Town of Dixon. Thus Nachusa has been brought back to its original boundaries. (For further information as to bridge history, see "Lee County.")

The proximity of Grand Detour to the northern boundary of the township drew an unusual number of early settlers to this locality. Among this class was Cyrus Chamberlain, who located on Section 18. Mr. Hollingshead, coming a little later, settled on Section 19. In 1835 Joseph Crawford arrived, and after living one year with Mr. Hollingshead, then settled in Dixon Township. Solomon Shelhamer joined the settlement a year or two afterwards. In 1836 John Chamberlain bought the Hollingshead farm and, in this same year, a Mr. Fisk came from the East with a stock of goods, with which he opened a store in the Hollingshead house.

A number of dwellings, including Cyrus Chamberlain's, in time, grouped about the point on the southwest quarter of Section 18, Town 22, Range 9, where a road leads off to the upper Grand Detour ferry, in such manner as at the present day to suggest a village. This settlement has been known for many years as "The Kingdom." Old settlers trace this name to different sources, but all agree that it became attached to the place about 1844-6. One says that Sabbath-breaking, profanity, horse-racing and other irregularities caused the law-abiding, Sabbath-observing people of Grand Detour to associate locality with the devil's affairs. Another (Harvey Herrick, now living in Dixon) relates how, when a boy of twelve or fourteen years of age, he and an older brother quarreled with the boys of the only other family then in the place (Chamberlain's), and how their respective fathers took sides with the sons until finally one of the former charged that Satan had reigned ever since the other family had come into the neighborhood; that this was taken up by others in jest, and was circulated until it became firmly fixed to the place. The accompanying circumstances are told with such particularity that the latter seems to be the more probable of the two accounts. In time the satanic part of the name was dropped.

In 1844 Harvey Herrick, Sr. (father of the Harvey Herrick above mentioned) settled here, having brought a house from over the county line, which was the second, Cyrus Chamberlain's being the first.

The first school house in the township was built of stone by Cyrus Chamberlain on his land, and its use was given to the pioneers. It was built on the southwest quarter of Section 18, Town 22, Range 10, and is still standing on the Weatherbee farm at "the Kingdom." Chester Herrington was the first teacher. Prior to the building of the school house, school was taught in private houses by a man named Sheldon, who is supposed to have been the first teacher in this section. The second school house was also built of stone and stood on the south half of the southwest quarter of Section 26, Town 22, Range 10.

Mr. Chamberlain was the first Justice of the Peace in this part of the town, and was also County Commissioner when Ogle and Lee Counties constituted one county. He is also credited with building the first saw-mill in that section. It was located east of the road on the southwest quarter of Section 18, on the north side of Franklin Creek, from which the power was obtained through a mill race which tapped the creek about a mile further upstream. Harvey

Herrick, Sr., took advantage of this power for blast purposes, to start a foundry here—undoubtedly the first in the county—which he had been operating by horse power at Grand Detour.

On the county map of 1863 appears the name "Galena & Chicago Union Railroad" across the south half of Section 18 and the southwest quarter of Section 17. When the road (now the Chicago & Northwestern) was being constructed, timber was cut from these lands for ties and fuel.

In 1842 a settlement was started on the Dixon and Franklin Grove road, where Ludlum Ayres, Levi Green, Thomas Hopkins, William Parker, William Richardson, James Goddard and Don Cooper took up claims and built their huts. Most of these disposed of their claims in a few years and moved further west. In 1845 quite a number selected land near where the village of Nachusa stands. At the west end of the Franklin Grove timber and within the present town of Nachusa, Joseph Emmert bought a claim of Don Cooper where he erected, in 1845-6, a two-story dwelling and a large barn. In 1850 he put up quite a large flouring-mill on the creek at heavy expense. He was a minister of the German Baptist, or Dunkard, faith, and about 1850 erected the first church of that denomination, where the present one stands, on the Dixon and Franklin road, on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 5. In 1847, A. P. Dysart purchased the claim of Thomas Hopkins, which included the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 6, where Col. Dysart continued to reside up to the date of his death, and where he erected an attractive and expensive dwelling. This building Mrs. Mary E. B. Shippert has recently given to the Northern Illinois Lutheran Synod, to be turned over to the proper committee or trustees of the Northern, Central and Southern Illinois Synods, the Synods of Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, and the two German bodies for an orphanage. The property, embracing forty-six acres, is valued at $6,000. The gift in such hands will prove a great blessing to the parentless through long years yet to come.

John M. Crawford and Samuel Crawford, brothers, came in 1846, the first establishing a permanent home on the east half of the southwest quarter of Section 5, and the other the west half of Section 9. Jonathan Depuy reached the county in 1842, and before long settled down in this township. About 1844 or '45 William Fisco bought in Section 32, John P. Brubaker located on Sections 5 and 6, about the year 1850, and it was in this year that Benjamin Kesler also settled on Section 6. In 1852 Henry Wingert settled on Section 4, and John W. Wingert also came to the town. Joshua Wingert arrived in 1846. Jacob Wertman arrived still earlier, reaching the township in 1838. William Brandon reached Dixon in 1837, and in a few years moved to Nachusa Township, where he resided many years. Marshall McNeel came to the county with his parents in 1847, and Jacob Hittle reached the county as early as 1841, both of them spending the remainder of their days in this township. Chester Harrington arrived in 1837 and soon secured the land in Section 13, Town 22, Range 9, on which he now resides with his son. William Garrison landed in the county in 1845 and eventually, some ten years later, settled in Nachusa.

Prior to the building of the Dunkard church, above mentioned, by Joseph Emmert, and prior to his coming, the society was in existence over the river in Ogle County. Mr. Emmert first preached to its members there; but this was so inconvenient to him and the members in this county, that a society was formed in his neighborhood composed of himself and family, Christopher Lahman and wife, Jacob and Samuel Riddlesbarger and their wives, Oliver Edmunds and wife, Isaac Seits and wife, Andrew Dierdorf and wife, Benjamin Kesler and wife, with a few others. Adjacent to the church is the cemetery, in which the first burial was that of Debbie Beaver.

At an early date a Methodist minister by the name of Benjamin preached to the settlers in their homes; but the first church building to be erected in the north part of the township was the Mt. Union church, dedicated November 9, 1890, for the use of the denominations desiring to hold service there. It stands on the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of Section 26, a prominent point, giving the white building a conspicuous place in the landscape. Separated from the church yard only by a fence is the Mooers Cemetery, which was given by one of the pioneers, Josiah Mooers, whose remains were the first to be interred within its precincts. It dates prior to 1860. In 1837 the Lutheran Church erected a neat meeting house in the village of Nachusa, which is now occupied by the society. In May, 1900, Trinity Evangelical church dedicated a new building erected by its members at "the Kingdom."

Turning to the southern portions of the township, it is found that the first settler was a Mr. Jones, who located on Section 20, Town 21. In 1839 Dr. Charles Gardner settled on the northwest quarter and north half of the southwest quarter of Section 20, where he resided until his death at a good old age. Most of the pioneers emigrated from the East by means of horse or ox-teams, or by way of canals and lakes, but Dr. Gardner entered the new country by an altogether different route. He reached New Orleans by sloop from Newport, R. I., and thence by steamboat up the Mississippi and Illinois to Peru, where wagons and teams were purchased with which the remainder of the journey was accomplished. His wife followed the track across the States a few months later. Dr. Gardner belonged to the Thomsonian school of medicine, and was the first physician in that section. He brought with him a large supply of seeds, cuttings, grafts and slips, with which to start the much desired fruit and ornamental tree culture. These were freely distributed and, besides his own planting, laid the foundation for taste and interest in trees which have characterized the locality. In 1873 he built a large hay barn, the heavy timber for which was cut from the grove which he himself had planted. This southern part of the township had the advantage of the Chicago road, which was the artery of travel from Chicago to Dixon's Ferry, and, naturally, the first settlements were thickest along its course. About six months later than the coming of Mrs. Gardner, her aunt and Mrs. Hannah DeWolf arrived and purchased a home about a mile west on the northwest quarter of Section 19. Here Mrs. Gardner and Mrs. DeWolf started the first Sunday School in that vicinity, and here, in Mrs. DeWolf's house, the first public school in the township was taught. The first teacher was Miss Betsey DeWolf. On the northeast corner of Mrs. DeWolf's farm she donated a plat for a cemetery, which is still in use. This was about the year 1840, and the first person to be buried there was "Old Michael," a man who worked for her. Adjacent to this site, the first school house was built in 1841 or '42, when Miss DeWolf again taught, also a Miss Hunter. The house was afterwards moved to the southwest corner of Dr. Gardner's farm, where it was known for many years as "Locust Street School House." Later it was moved to the crossroads, where it took the name of "Hollister."

In 1841 John Leake settled in the township at Temperance Hill, having emigrated from England in 1840. His wife and three sons, William, John C., Thomas, and a daughter, Mary Ann, together with Mrs. Leake's two sisters, Mrs. Edward Willars and Mrs. Daniel Leake and their husbands, all came over in a party in 1841. Isaac Means and William Moody accompanied Mr. Leake. John Leake (2d) with his wife and two children, Clarissa, and William, made the passage from England in 1843 and settled on the highest ground at Temperance Hill, that part of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 27, lying south of the road. The two Johns became distinguishable in the neighborhood by names coined for the purpose; John, the first-comer, being called "Butcher John," from his early occupation in the old country, and the other, "Miller John," or "John on the 'Illtop," from the elevation of his land. Miller John and Daniel were brothers, and cousins of Butcher John. Alva Hale was one of the early settlers, entering a claim on Section 33.

Nachusa Village.—The station was called Taylor when the railroad was in process of construction, but when the plat was made in the fall of 1853 by Col. Dysart and George Baugh, it was given its present name—the one by which Father Dixon was known among the Indians. The first business enterprise in the place was launched by its founder, Col. A. P. Dysart, who built a warehouse, bought grain and dealt in coal and lumber. In 1855 or '56 he opened a general store in partnership with a Mr. Cunningham. They were succeeded in 1860 by the firm of (John) Dysart & Riley, who built the present elevator. The business finally passed into the hands of William C. Dysart, and now is owned and conducted by Mr. C. B. Crawford.

The first postmaster was Col. Dysart, and the office has always remained in the store where he opened it, the successive proprietors of which have held the commission, except during the first four years of President Cleveland's administration, when C. D. Hart held the office.

The first school house to be erected in the village was the one now in use. It was built in 1868 and J. A. D. Barnes was the first teacher to hold forth in it. The first blacksmith shop was started in 1855 or 1856, by Mr. Farwell.

According to the census the township had a population in 1890 of 913 and in 1900 of 886.

NOTE—The government survey of the different towns in the county was made in the following years: Town 21 range 9 in 1834; Town 22 range 9, Town 22 range 10, in 1836; Town 21 range 8 and Town 21 range 10 in 1839-40; Town 22 range 8, Town 22 range 11, Town 39 range 1 and Town 38 range 1 in 1840; Town 22 range 10 and Town 37 range 1 in 1842; Town 37 range 2 in 1842-3; the remaining towns in the county were all surveyed in 1843.

CHAPTER XVIII.

NELSON TOWNSHIP.

NELSON TOWNSHIP SET OFF FROM DIXON—ITS EARLIEST SETTLER—OTHER EARLY ARRIVALS—THE "BLUFF BOYS"—ZION LUTHERAN CHURCH—NELSON VILLAGE PLATTED.

At the February meeting, 1860, of the Board of Supervisors that part of the Town of Dixon lying south of Rock River, in Town 21, Range 8, was set apart as the Town of Nelson. The earliest settler in the township was Luther Stone, who, with his sons, Burrell and Samuel, settled in 1836, on Section 29. Abner Cogswell settled on Section 30 in 1843. Uriah Gruver has been considered an old settler, but it was as late as 1854 when he came to Dixon, and it was 1865 when he settled on Section 26 in Nelson Township. Charles F. Hubbard settled on the northeast quarter of Section 11 at an early day, but we have been unable to ascertain the year. Nathan Morehouse located a short distance north of the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of Section 17 in 1847. William Bivens bought the farm and moved onto it in the spring of 1849. Lewis Brauer settled somewhere east of Bivens about the year 1849.

It is a singular fact that this township was backward in attracting early settlers, being sparsely settled prior to 1854. In the latter year Jacob and Solomon Harding, Daniel Uhl, John and Eli Geiger came. William Uhl settled on the northwest quarter of Section 23 about 1852. Frederick Haupt and his son, Fred, and Gerhard H. Missman settled in the township in 1855, and Eli Lloyd the next year. Arthur Phillips, John Mooers, Michael Trautman, Elijah Walker, Henry Heaton, Albert Hubbard and Conrad Hartman were among the settlers of the early or middle '50s.

Mention should be made of a set of young fellows who were known as the "Bluff Boys," and who made the cabin of Charles F. Hubbard, on the river bluff, their headquarters. Among them were Alexander Charters, commonly known as the "Governor," Carleton Bailey, Capt. William Graham and Mr. Hubbard. The group was composed of young scions of wealthy families in the East or across the waters, who had enjoyed the privileges of city schools and life, and had come to a new country for fun rather than business or the opportunities which pioneer life afforded. They, to a man, were jovial, high-spirited and not indifferent to the cup. "Gov." Charters became the host of Hazelwood; Carleton Bailey settled in Dixon Township in the Bend opposite Grand Detour Township; Capt. Graham acquired land in Palmyra Township. All were congenial companions and became endeared to those about them.

Zion Lutheran church was organized in the township at an early date, and services were held in a little school-house located on southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 23, which was built about the year 1856. In a short time a larger school-house was erected on the spot, which was also used for church services until about the year 1880, when it was torn down. The present church building owned and occupied by the society, was built in 1880 and stands on the southeast corner of Section 22. The cemetery which was started within the same enclosure where the small school house stood, has been enlarged and is controlled by the Pine Grove Cemetery Association, which was recently incorporated under the State law.

December 22, 1862, the "Town of Nelson" was platted on land of Willard S. Pope and Samuel Nelson. In 1902 and 1903 the Chicago & North-Western Railroad Company built a branch, leaving its main line at Nelson, and running thence to Peoria, and here at Nelson they erected large coal sheds. This has given something of an impetus to the little village and it is manifesting unmistakable signs of growth.

Nelson had a population in 1890 of 454 and, in 1900, of 586, as shown by the Government census.

CHAPTER XIX.

PALMYRA TOWNSHIP.

ITS EARLY SETTLERS—ARRIVAL OF THE NEW YORK COLONY—CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS—CEMETERIES —PRAIRIEVILLE AND ITS SOLDIERS' MONUMENT
—PALMYRA INSURANCE COMPANY.

For the names and time of arrival of early settlers in Palmyra Township, the following quotation is made from an article by Miss Jane Johnson, appearing in "Recollections of Pioneers of Lee County" (p. 497):

"The first settlement was begun in the spring of 1834 by old Mr. Morgan and his sons, Harvey and John, and Benjamin Stewart, who settled in the south side of the Grove, known as "the Gap." They were followed in the autumn by John H. Page and wife, and Stephen Fellows, with a large family.

"The following spring (1835) the new accessions included W. W. Bethea, Absalom Fender with a large family, Capt. Oliver Hubbard, a numerous family of Gastons, Smith Gilbraith, William T. and Elkanah Bush, Daniel Beardsley, old Mr. Thomas and his sons, Enoch and Noah; Daniel Obrist, Nathan Morehouse, Jeff Harris, Anson Thummel, brother of Rev. C. B. Thummel; James Power and sons, Thomas and Jephtha. From 1836 to 1845 large additions were made to the infant settlement, most of the following being well known families: John C. Oliver, Noah Beede, Abijah Powers, Frederick and Henry Coe, Walter Rogers, Reuben Eastwood, William Myers (afterwards known as the "Prophet"), Hiram Parks, W. W. Tilton, Timothy Butler, Hugh Graham, John T. Lawrence, John Lawrence, Abner Moon, John Lord and his son John L., Jarves N. and David Holly, Wm. Martin and his nephews, James, Jacob and Tyler Martin; Capt. Jonas M. Johnson and his sons, William Y. and Morris, with their families and a son-in-law; Eben H. Johnson and wife, Joshua Seavey and sons, Jesse and Winthrop; Joshua Marden and son William; Albert and John Jenness, Harvey E. Johnson, Charles and Dana Columbia, Levi Briggs and father, Thomas Monk, William and John Benjamin, Truxton and Lemuel Sweeney, John and Joseph Thompson, John Norris, William and Lockwood Harris, Wm. Burger, Wm. Stackpole, Rev. William Gates, James Gates, William Ayres, Thomas Ayres, L. Deyo, E. Deyo, Col. Leman Mason and sons Sterne, Volney and Rodney; Moses Warner and sons Henry, Moses and George; Major Sterling, Henry and Gustavus Sartorius; Nehemiah, William, Fletcher and Morris Hutton; Abram O'Brist, Martin Blair, Wesley Atkinson, Thomas and Moses Scallion, John Carley, Hardin, Beach, Tomlin, Martin Richardson, Benjamin Gates, Mathias Schick, Anton Harms, Charles A. Becker, Henry Miller, Becker Miller, Mr. Curtis, Martin and William Brauer, William Miller, John Morse." The names of David Law (father of Dr. David H.) and family, who came in 1839, and their relatives, the McGinnisses, who came at or about the same time, should be added to this list. It should also be noted that John Lord and family first settled in Dixon, near the point where Peoria Avenue crosses the Chicago & Northern Railway.

Between 1839 and 1844 the New York Colony (so called) settled in Palmyra. Capt. Hugh Graham was its acknowledged head. William Graham, John T. Lawrence and brother were the first to arrive. C. F. Hubbard came later. The colony was made up for the most part of highly educated young men and women from New York City and across the sea. They were lured westward by imaginary attractions of a new and fertile country. It was to be their El Dorado, but proved quite otherwise. Their lack of experience in agricultural pursuits, and their unfitness for pioneer life, its hardships and problems, defeated their hopes, financially, but it is not too much to say that the community was still a distinct gainer. Their influence was always exerted in the direction of better educational conditions, and they contributed in the press and by example to raise the intellectual standards of the neighborhood. Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Geyot and Mr. Hubbard spent their lives in the locality where they first settled, and were gathered to their fathers only a few years ago. An article contributed by Mr. Lawrence to that excellent collection of essays on early days, "Recollections of the Pioneers of Lee County" (above quoted from), gives a most graphic account of their experiences, is rich in local incident and suggests the scholarly cast of the New York Colony. Mr. Lawrence says, in the paper referred to, that Palmyra was named by Fred Coe, from the town of that name in New York.

The Indians were gathering sweetness from the maple trees of Sugar Grove when the white man came, and under the latter's care the "sap bush" soon became a fixed institution.

At an early date a double log house stood in front of the spot on which now stands the John Lord family residence, of which Smith Gilbraith's family occupied one side.

It seems that there was a postoffice at the Gap in the early days, E. B. Bush being the first Postmaster and having a deputy at Buffalo Grove. This same Bush ran a ferry near where the center line of Section 10 strikes the river. Joshua Morgan also served as Postmaster. The office was continued until the recent introduction of postal delivery service.

In 1840 the settlement had sixty voters.

As early as 1843 Matthias Selricks had a blacksmith shop at Prairieville, and there were others in the town.

O'Brist had a saw-mill on Sugar Creek where, after a heavy rain, a little sawing of the native logs could be done. There were two brothers; Daniel was drowned in Elkhorn Creek and Abram then ran the mill. Aside from the assistance of this mill, nearly all the buildings were made of hewed logs, shakes or split shingles for the roof, and puncheons or boards split from logs for the floor.

There was a time not many years ago when the carriage and wagon shops of John L. Lord did a large business, considering their inaccessibility by rail. The business was founded by John Lord in 1841, and twelve years later passed into the hands of his son John L. Competition having eventually proven too formidable for works so situated, the business was, a few years ago, abandoned. The first church in Palmyra was at Gap Grove on the site where the school house now stands. Its dimensions were 24 by 36 feet and it was built in 1839 jointly by the Congregationalists and the Methodists, and was occupied on alternate Sundays by those two denominations. It was abandoned at least forty years ago and transformed into a school house and used for a number of years, when it was moved off and sold for $20, and in its place the present school house was built. The old school house was converted into a barn, in which capacity it is still doing service for H. M. Gilbert.

About the year 1855 the Methodists built a church at a point on the south side of the public road, near the west line of the southwest quarter of Section 34. Near it stood a frame school house, but when built or what figure it cut in the neighborhood we have been unable to find out. It is, however, at present used as a milk-house on Howard Martin's farm. The church was sold and torn down many years ago.

On the southwest corner of the farm now owned by Gustav Selig (southeast quarter, Section 27), near the forks of the road, once stood a log house, which is claimed by some to have been the true historic school house of the section. At one time the number of pupils here taught reached fifty.

In 1857-8 a brick church, with basement for school purposes, was erected at Sugar Grove. At an early day there was also a log school house near the John Lord residence on Section 36, and, in the "Hall" at "the Gap," which was originally a saw-mill built by W. W. Tilton, a Mr. Judd once taught an advanced school, to which many came from a distance on horse-back to enjoy its advantages.

Old settlers are not agreed touching the first school teacher of the town. Mr. J. T. Lawrence awards the mantle to Mary Hill, who in time became Mrs. Michael Fellows, while Rev. S. N. Fellows, brother of Michael (both of whom were sons of Stephen Fellows), gives the honor to his sister Margaret. Another accords it to Mrs. Hubbard, afterward wife of W. W. Tilton. However this may be, no regular school was established until 1838, when a small frame school house was erected in the center of Sugar Grove, but never finished, in which W. W. Bethea was master for two winters. In 1837 there was a school house at the Gap nearly opposite the ground where the town hall now stands. In 1847, a frame school house was built on or near the spot where the combined school and church building at Sugar Grove, on the south line of the southeast quarter of Section 22, was later erected. On the former coming into use the log house on the Selig tract was abandoned. In 1856 the house of 1847 was moved off and became a part of the dwelling on the farm now owned by Fletcher Seavey, where it still may be found. In its stead a building, with stone basement and brick second story, was put up by the voluntary contributions of the neighborhood. The basement being desirable for school purposes, was, in some way, soon sold to the school authorities of the town. The walls of the second story proving too light to safely support the roof, they were taken out without disturbing the roof and replaced with a suitable frame inclosure. About the year 1880 the building was entirely consumed by fire. It was promptly rebuilt substantially as before, and as it is now seen, except that the first story is of wood instead of stone.

Cemeteries.—In 1840 a cemetery was located at the Gap and the first interment was that of Samuel Fellows, on February 8th of that year. It was situated on the south side of the half-section line at the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of Section 34, and at the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of Section 33. A number of bodies were removed, but a number are still there, though the spot has long been abandoned to weeds and underbrush. A considerable burial ground also existed at one time about the middle of the tract south of the road in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 26, on what is known as the Beede farm. The bodies here buried were all removed, some finding a temporary resting place on the east side of the forks of the road on the west line of said quarter section; but nearly all of them reposed at last in the cemetery at the Grove church and school house, which was opened in 1855, the remains of an infant child of Asa Seavey being the first interred here. By the bestowal of much labor and taste, for which the ladies are largely to be credited, it is now an ideal little burial plot.

The cemetery north of Prairieville, at the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of Section 31, was established by deed from Abijah Powers, dated April, 1861. Its location is a beautiful spot for which nature has done much, and while considerably less has been expended upon it than on the other, it is still a respectable rival.

Prairieville was located and platted at the instance of Abijah Powers, Phillip Schock, Samuel Shaw and Winthrop Seavey, April 10, 1855. On its site a blacksmith shop was in full blast in 1843.

The village school house is a two-story brick structure surmounted by a belfry. It was built at a cost of $3,000.

In the schoolyard inclosure a soldiers' monument, costing about $900, was erected June 3, 1869, by the voluntary contributions of the patriotic citizens of the township. It is a notable fact that this is the only monument, thus far set up anywhere in the county, to the memory of the brave men who served their country in the War of the Rebellion.

On September 3, 1902, this monument was moved to the cemetery one-half mile north of Prairieville, through the interest and agency of the W. C. Robinson Post, G. A. R., of Sterling. To make this practicable, the heirs of the late Samuel Shaw donated their beautiful lot in the center of the grounds where had reposed, until removed to the cemetery at Dixon, the remains of Timothy Shaw, the son of Samuel Shaw, and brother of Miss Elizabeth J. Shaw. He was the first Lee County boy to enlist in the War of the Rebellion. The date of his enlistment appears by the records to have been April, 1861. He was at school at Jacksonville at the time, and became a member of Company B, Tenth Illinois Infantry.

The marble shaft was rededicated in its new position by appropriate ceremonies, Mr. S. H. Bethea, an honored son of Palmyra, delivering the address. On this occasion the shaft bore the following names of the country's defenders credited to Palmyra: Timothy Shaw, Jerome D. Morgan, Benj. E. Berry, Solomon Stewart, Joseph Brown, Jefferson Seavey, Michael O'Kane, Charles Becker, Henry Peek, John Strothman, Norman D. Smith, Morris Hutton, Theodore Gaston, William Hackett, Edward S. O'Brien, Emanuel Schick, Henry D. Wood, George P. Ehrman, Louis Gleichman, Deidrich Kruger, Albert Slater and Homer Clink.

There is at present the school house referred to, and a church edifice in the village of Prairieville (if the few houses there now can be so called), in which the Congregationalists and Lutherans hold service. A blacksmith shop and small store cater to the wants of the neighborhood in their respective lines.

The town hall at the Gap was built about the year 1880.

To encourage enlistment in the War of the Rebellion, Palmyra, as a town, paid $12,470 in bounties.

Palmyra Insurance Company.—One of Palmyra's permanent institutions is the "Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Palmyra," which was incorporated by special act of the Legislature, February 15, 1865, since which time it has done a large business in Lee and surrounding counties. When the company commenced doing business in the following July, it had applications for over $100,000 of insurance to start with. Its business has increased until it is now carrying risks aggregating over $1,500,000. It is what is called a "District Company," and is one of the largest of its kind in the State. Its operations are confined to Lee, Ogle, Whiteside and Carroll counties, and it insures all kinds of farm property, but never enters cities or incorporated villages. Its first officers were John H. Page, President, and C. B. Thummel, Secretary. Its present officers are F. M. Coe, President, and Fletcher Seavey, Secretary.

The population of Palmyra Township was 1,016 in 1890, and 1,019 in 1900, as shown by the Government census.

CHAPTER XX.

REYNOLDS TOWNSHIP.

ORIGINAL DIMENSIONS—NEW ORGANIZATION IN 1859
—FIRST ELECTION AND BOARD OF OFFICERS—
EARLY SETTLERS—CHURCHES.

The Town of Brooklyn originally embraced all of Towns 37, 38 and 39, Range 1. Town 38, Range 1 (now Viola) was set off under the name of Stockton, by the Board of Supervisors at the February meeting, 1861. A year prior to this the northern township of these three was, in like manner, set apart by the name of Reynolds Township. The first election under the new organization was held April 5, 1859, at which Thomas Minier was elected Supervisor and Assessor; John C. Piper, Town Clerk and Constable; Dudley C. Whitehead, Collector and Constable; Daniel Brink, Jr., Overseer of the Poor; E. F. Gatten, Job Whitehead and David Douthett, Commissioners of Highways; Peter Mills and Robert M. Piel, Justices of the Peace. The election and town meeting was held in the residence of Horace Stearns, a cabin 13 by 16 feet and six feet high, located on Section 16. It was later used as a pigpen and corn crib.

The early settlers were Sewell Reynolds, Thomas Minier, Jonathan Whitehead, John Herrington, Dudley C. Whitehead, Daniel Brink, Jr., and Charles Gooch. Reynolds located at Brush Grove, and was the first settler in the township.

The society of the Methodist Episcopal church was organized in the fall of 1875, and soon afterwards a church building was erected on the "Flats." The building committee consisted of F. F. Farmlow, C. W. Ament, C. F. Van Patten, John A. Edgar, Daniel C. Miller and B. F. Parker.

At the southeast corner of Section 19 stands the Emanuel church of the Evangelical Association (German). It was built at a cost of $4,000, and was dedicated October 13, 1872, free from debt. In 1881, $900 was expended in improvements and repairs. The building committee consisted of John Kersten, George Sandrock, George Bolei, Martin Wagner and Ernst Weiner.

The population of the township, according to census, was 674 in 1890, and 743 in 1900.

SOUTH DIXON TOWNSHIP.

THE TOWNSHIP SET APART FROM DIXON—FIRST PERMANENT SETTLER—OTHERS WHO FOLLOWED—FIRST SCHOOL—CHURCHES—A PIONEER DEBATING SOCIETY—TOWN OF ELDENA PLATTED.

At the February session, 1867, of the Board of Supervisors, the town of South Dixon was detached from the Town of Dixon, embracing all of Town 22, Range 9, except the north tier of sections. The town remained with these boundaries until the March session, 1877, when the territory lying north of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway was restored to the Town of Dixon. The earliest permanent settler in the township was Joseph Cartwright, who settled there in 1838 and died the following year. Prior to this, however, in 1836, a young man staked out a claim for himself close to the three mile branch on the Chicago road, near the northeast corner of Section 15. Abram Brown, who settled in the town in 1849 on that part of Section 13, where he continued to live until his death a few years ago, relates that Uncle Peter and Aunt Rhoda McKenney, through some misunderstanding, jumped the young man's claim and built a small shanty and set up housekeeping, by reason of which the "Claim Society" ousted them. The shanty was loaded on a wagon, much against their will, and moved off the premises.

The second permanent settler was Charles Edson, who located here in 1839. Mr. Edson and his wife did much to foster everything that was calculated to uplift and advance the interests of the community. The family afterwards occupied the farm across the road from the brick school house, which circumstance and their relations to the school gave it the name of the Edson school, by which it was known for many years. As soon as they moved into their first house, Mrs. Edson gave up her largest room for a school, and this was the first school to be taught in the vicinity. The teacher was a Miss Robinson, later a preceptress in Mt. Morris Seminary, where she married Judge Fuller of Ogle County, and after his death became the wife of Bowman Bacon, a nephew of Mrs. Joseph Crawford of Dixon. In the early '60s the Edson family moved to California.

The next family to locate in the town consisted of James Campbell, his wife and two daughters. Mr. Campbell did not live long, and on his death his widow married Isaac Boardman, of Dixon. The father of Reuben Trowbridge settled near Eldena very early, and reared a large family of boys. Hiram and Herman Meade joined the settlement soon after, and a man of a different stripe by the name of Hamill, who brought his wife from the poor-house at Buffalo, New York, came to the township. His abuse of one of his children so excited the kind N. G. H. Morrill, the County Poormaster, and other large-hearted people of Dixon, that they administered to the brute a thorough coat of tar and feathers in Dixon, in the vicinity of where the Western Hotel then stood.

Other early settlers were Christian Stevens, Henry B. True, Caldwell Bishop, Henry Page, Jacob McKenney, Jacob Groh, and son E. H., James Rogers, Matthew McKenney, William A. Judd, Nathan Hill, John Fritz, Sr., William J. Fritz, William Rink, John Anderson, Barnhard Wissman and others.

St. James Evangelical Lutheran Church was early organized and, in 1877, built a church edifice north of the Chicago road near the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of Section 14. Another church of the same denomination was built on the southwest corner of Section 20, known as Emanuel Church. In the village of Eldina the Methodist Episcopal Society built a church in 1870, which has also been used by other denominations.

Further mention should be made of the Edson school house, later known as "The Brick," on the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of Section 13, which was built at an early day, and was for many years the center of intellectual activity in that section. Mr. E. B. Edson was the first teacher in this building. At one time the attendance reached 120. In the days when Abram Brown, Ephraim Groh and others were at the height of their activity, this school house was the scene of periodical debates, which attracted a large attendance, it being a common thing for disputants from Dixon to take part. In 1858 the Edsonville Literary and Debating Society was formed, with Mr. Brown as its first President, and it was under the auspices of this organization that, for many years, the forensic contests went on during the winter months.

The only poor-farm in the county is situated on Section 26, and contains 100 acres.

July 10, 1863, the "Town of Eldina" was platted on land of the Illinois Central Railroad. The first store and house in the village was built by Reuben H. Cheney. The first grain-house was built by Reuben Trowbridge, Reuben H. Cheney and Daniel Brown. To this was later added an elevator.

The population of South Dixon, according to the government census, was 841 in 1890, and 854 in 1900.

SUBLETTE TOWNSHIP.

FIRST SETTLERS—THE ORIGINAL NAME HANNO CHANGED TO SUBLETTE—FIRST ELECTION AND TOWN OFFICERS—CHURCHES AND EARLY SCHOOLS
 HOUSES.

Charles F. Ingals settled just over the line in Lee Center Township, in 1836. Sherman Hatch reached Dixon in 1837, and soon found his way to Mr. Ingals' place. During that summer or fall he settled on the southwest part of Section 7, taking possession of and completing a log house that had been partly built by previous claimants who had abandoned their claim. He went back to Vermont that fall and returned the next year with his bride. Jonathan Peterson laid claim, in the summer of 1827, to the northwestern part of Section 4, and after building a log cabin near by in Lee Center, he, too, repaired that fall to his New England home for a wife, returning with her the next year. In the fall of 1838 Thomas and William Fessenden arrived with their families, and built a log house near the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of Section 7, and moved into it in December. In the following year William Fessenden built on the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of Section 6. Sometime in the '30s William Knox and family settled on the south side of the eastern portion of the grove which bears their name. It was on the Chicago and Galesburg road, east of the center of the southeast quarter of Section 24. Sylvanus Peterson, brother of Jonathan, located on the southeast quarter of Section 5. Earlier than 1840, John Morton and R. E. Goodall settled on Sections 5 and 8. One of the old settlers, Daniel Baird, located in LaSalle County in the fall of 1836, and came on to Sublette in 1839, planting his home on the LaSalle and Grand Detour road, near the northeast corner of the south half of the northeast quarter of Section 17. It was in this year that Phineas Rust built the first frame house in the township, on the northeast quarter of Section 21. He never lived there, however, but sold his claim late in 1840 to Philo Stanard and Thomas Angier. During the year 1839 Thomas Tourtellott built a frame house near the center of Section 31 and Obed W. Bryant settled on the Chicago and Galesburg road on Section 35. In 1843, Ephraim Reniff, with his family, located on the south half of the northeast quarter of Section 33, and Hiram Anderson did likewise on the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the same section. It was over the latter claim that the Settlers' Claim Society applied a law of their own making to a claim-jumper by the name of Bull. A force, sixty-five in number, well armed, repaired to Dixon and captured the offender. The difficulty was so adjusted, however, that Anderson held the land, and the vigorous remedy protected the settlement from "jumpers" ever thereafter.

Early in the '40s Stephen Richardson located near the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of Section 31. Jacob Vertrees came in 1843 or '44, and John Skinner in 1844 or '45. Hezekiah and John McKune were also settlers in the early '40s, the former locating on the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 8, and the latter on the southwest quarter of Section 17. In 1848 or '49 William Coleman settled on the northeast quarter of Section 7. In 1843 Alpheus Crawford bought a claim to the south half of Section 13 for $75. This was within the Knox Grove settlement, where Levi Camp had settled that year and Daniel Pratt the year before. Prescott Bartlett claimed the east half of Section 27, and built a log house near the northwest corner of the tract in 1844. Silas D. Reniff also settled on the north half of the north half of Section 20, and John Betz on the southeast quarter of Section 33, near the southeast corner, the same year. It was in this year, too, that R. P. Hubbard settled east of the road on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 17. In 1846 Bartholomew Theiss made a claim to 120 acres in Sections 29 and 32, where his sons, John, Jacob and Gotfreid Theiss, subsequently lived. John W. Skinner located on the southwest quarter of Section 13 in 1846; Stephen Averill settled on the same section about the same time. John Clink located on the southwest quarter of Section 12 in 1847, and about 1848 William Clink settled on the northwest quarter of the same section. Jacob, Andrew and Michael Lauer came in 1849 or '50. Other settlers on the south side of Knox Grove were Solomon Porter who bought out William Knox in the fall of 1845; Samuel and Nathaniel Ellsworth, who settled on the southwest quarter of Section 25, the same year, and David Maxwell, who came to the southwest quarter of Section 35 about the same time. George Hoffman settled on the southwest quarter of Section 33 about 1845, and Henry Schwab located the next year, just south of the center of Section 34. John Spielman came in 1846 and located on the eastern part of Section 34, in Perkins Grove neighborhood, and also a German family by the name of Smith. In 1849 or '50 Carl Buettner bought part of the southwest quarter of Section 35 and made it his home. About the same time the Pohls and Andrew Henkel came to the township, the former locating on the southwest quarter of Section 36, and the latter on the southeast quarter of Section 26. May 22, 1846, Eleazer Barton, father of J. B. Barton, settled on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Sec. 25. William A. Miller and son-in-law, George Gheer, settled on the northeast quarter of Section 35 in 1846. Miller sold out to H. N. Erskine, who later sold to P. H. Kapser and bought the east half of Section 12. William and Thomas Ireland and Jacob Schneck came in 1849-50, and Jacob Wolf and father, Nicholas, Jacob Eich and Andrew Hatzenger in 1850. In 1846 what was known as Knox Grove settlement covered a radius of two to three miles around the grove, and numbered fourteen families. Not a house had been built on the Chicago and Galesburg road between the settlement and Paw Paw Grove, a distance of twelve miles. There was no settlement to the south nearer than the Illinois River. To the southeast Troy Grove settlement, eight miles distant, was the nearest. On the north, Inlet Grove was eight miles away; on the northeast, Meugin Grove, ten miles, and Four-mile Grove, eight miles distant, were the nearest settlements in those directions.

The town was first called "Hanno" from "Hanau," a city on the Rhine above Frankfort in Nassau, Prussia. It was so named at the suggestion of James Tourtillott. By act of the legislature, approved February 18, 1857, it was enacted "that the name of Hanno Township, in the county of Lee" be changed to "Sublette Township." The new name Sublette has been accounted for in other histories as having been derived from the practice of "subletting" contracts for the building of the railroad. This is clearly erroneous. In the first place, if that had been its origin, the name would have been spelled "Sublet" without the final "te." In the second place there was little, if any, subletting on this section of the road, and hence the word was not brought into prominence. But, conclusively, the name on the recorded plot of the village is spelled "Soublette," and, in the Company's certificate attached, the place is named "Town of Soublett" without the final "e." Moreover the name on the station house for years was "Soublette." There is nothing to indicate where the name was found, but clearly the history commonly given it is wide of the mark.

The first town meeting was held on the second Tuesday of April, 1850, at which the following officers were elected: Daniel Baird, Supervisor; Henry Porter, Clerk; Whitlock T. Porter, Assessor; Silas D. Reniff, Collector; Daniel Pratt, Overseer of the Poor; Hiram Anderson and W. H. Hamblin, Highway Commissioners; Daniel Avery and Thomas S. Angier, Constables; Alpheus Crawford and Andrew Bertholf, Justices of the Peace. The number voting at this election is not given, but two years later forty-seven votes were cast. Town meetings were held at private residences as follows: 1853, at Daniel Pratt's, Knox Grove; 1854, at Daniel Wilcox's; 1855, at David Maxwell's. At the latter meeting $1,000 was voted for the erection of a town house in the village of Sublette.

In 1848 Alpheus Crawford and others killed a black bear north of Knox Grove, which weighed 400 pounds.

The first postoffice in the township was opened in Daniel Baird's house, about 1840. The office was called Brookfield. The second postoffice was established at Knox Grove in 1847 or '48, and named Ovid; the first postmaster was Solomon Porter.

In 1841 O. W. Bryant burned a kiln of brick on the northwest corner of Section 35. As early as 1850 a man by the name of McBirney had a blacksmith shop near the southwest corner of the town.

The Baptist church was organized in 1843 in Jonathan Peterson's log house, with thirteen members. It was known as the First Baptist Church of Palestine Grove. To accommodate the members, meetings were held alternately on opposite sides of the grove at the homes of worshipers until the school house came, when that, as a rule, became the meeting place in the different localities. In 1854 meetings began to be held in Benton's Hall, about half a mile west of the site of the church where they now assemble. Here they continued until November, 1858, when the building in the village, where the congregation now worships, and which had been built at a cost of $5,000, was dedicated. The society also had a parsonage, which has been sold.

The first organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church was effected at the house of Levi

Camp, at Knox Grove, about 1846. Meetings were held at private residences and at Knox Grove school house, until the town hall was available at the village, when the meetings became localized at that place. In 1870 a church was built in the village and dedicated the next year. Services continued seven or eight years, when the society was abandoned and the property sold, since which time Sublette has been without a Methodist church.

A Congregational church was established April 20, 1871. This, like the other societies, held its meetings in the Town Hall. Soon, however, a building was begun and when completed had cost about $5,000.

The Society of the Evangelical Association of North America erected a building in 1864, on the northeast quarter of Section 35, north of the southwest corner. It is now closed and the organization, once strong, is now weak.

The organization of the Roman Catholic Church took place in 1848, and, in 1853, a church building and parsonage were erected on the northeast corner of Section 32. The parsonage was destroyed by fire in 1869, and no services are now held in the church. In 1868 a Catholic church was built in the village, which is now being superseded by a splendid edifice of pressed brick with slate roof, which will cost, unfurnished, not less than $30,000. Its extreme length is 115 feet and its extreme width 74 feet, and the building is surmounted by a spire 141 feet high. The old church in which services are conducted while the building is going on, was moved aside so that the new structure could rise on the site of the old one. Work was commenced in August, 1902, and the building will probably be ready for occupancy in the summer of 1904. Father Tasche is the priest in charge.

The pioneer school was started in the west part of the township in a log house on Thomas Fessenden's farm. The next was in a slab building on the farm of Thomas Tourtellott. It was a structure used at first as a shelter for the purpose of preempting land, and was afterwards known as the "Sheep Pen." Maria Coleman was the first to keep school in it. The next school in the neighborhood was taught in the winter by Joseph Carey, in Mrs. Tourtellott's house, and the next of any importance was taught by John Bacon, about 1850, in Mrs. Richardson's house. The third school in the township was in a log school house on Section 5, where Mrs. Clute, sister of Jonathan Peterson, taught the first summer school about the year 1844. The winter school kept here was for several years quite important, being well attended by an advanced class of pupils.

The first school taught at Knox Grove was in a vacant log house (the first built in that neighborhood), in which William Knox had lived, being taught by Stephen Barton. The second term was kept in a "lean-to" about 12 by 16 feet, attached to Daniel Pratt's log house. The first Sunday School was organized in these same narrow quarters. This was in the summer of 1847. Later, meetings and Sunday school were held in Levi Camp's log house until the log school house was erected.

The first school house in Knox Grove settlement was built on the county line on the north side of the Chicago and Galesburg road. It was built in 1848 of logs and accommodated pupils from Sublette, Brooklyn and Mendota townships. It also served the purposes of a church for a number of years.

For a number of years the Lee County Guards, a distinctively Sublette organization, designated as Company F, Twelfth Infantry, State Militia, has reflected on the township the credit due to superior drill, discipline and soldierly bearing. They were regularly mustered into the service of the State May 30, 1879, with 98 members, which increased to 103 at the annual inspection March 31, 1880. It was then the largest infantry company in the State, and was frequently honored by being called to participate as escort on important occasions in different parts of the State. It owned a large armory in the village, and was prosperous for a number of years, but in time the members scattered, recruiting became difficult and the company finally disbanded.

Henkel.—Where the Illinois Central Railroad crosses the south line of Section 25 is a station called by this name. It is a grain buying point where a single elevator serves the purpose of storing grain.

Sublette Village.—The village was platted as "Soublette," or the "Town of Soublett," May 8, 1855, on land of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

A railroad depot and warehouse were erected in the summer of 1854. During the following winter Daniel Cook built the first dwelling.

The next summer, A. L. Wilder built a small store in the back part of which he lived. Jesse Hale began a store a few months earlier. George A. Richmond also put up a house and Mr. Swartout moved into his new house in the winter of 1855-6. In 1855 Frank Bartlett built what was afterwards the Catholic parsonage. Paul Lindstrom completed a tavern the next year. Dr. Smith moved into his residence that winter. "Uncle Alva" Hale, as well as the families of James Colvin and Robert Ash, came to the village in 1856 and, in that year, J. B. Barton opened a drug store.

The first elevator in the place was built by Fred Oberhelman in 1874. It was enlarged in 1898 by an addition much larger than the original building. Its present capacity is 42,000 bushels. The business is conducted by F. Oberhelman & Bro. A second elevator was built in 1900 by J. H. Ebersole, who is now operating it. It has a capacity of about 20,000 bushels.

The banking interests of the community are looked after by the Sublette Exchange Bank, with a capital of $12,500 and deposits amounting to $102,946 at a given date. The officers are: Geo. F. Maloch, President; John P. Maloch, Vice-President; Anton H. Lauer, Cashier.

The village was incorporated under the general law December 27, 1892. According to the Government census, the population of the township, including the village, was 1,000 in 1890 and 1,004 in 1900, of which number the village furnished 306 in the latter year.

CHAPTER XXIII.

VIOLA TOWNSHIP.

---

STOCKTON TOWNSHIP ORGANIZED—NAME CHANGED TO VIOLA—FIRST TOWN OFFICERS—EARLY SETTLERS—SOME FIRST EVENTS.

At the February meeting, 1861, of the Board of Supervisors, Town 38, Range 1, was formed into a township by the name of Stockton, having theretofore been a part of Brooklyn Township. This name was selected in recognition of the large amount of stock then being raised in the town. The name was changed to Viola, some time during the following spring or early summer, because of the fact that there was already at least one town by the name of Stockton in the State.

The first officers of the town were chosen at the April town meeting, 1861. Fifty-two ballots were cast, resulting in the election of Samuel L. Butler for Supervisor; Simeon Cole, Assessor; Samuel Vosburg, Town Clerk; John Melugin, Constable; Ford and Moses B. Van Campen, Highway Commissioners. The meeting and election were held at Van Campen's house.

Little Melugin Grove, in the southeast part of the town, was the focus of early settlement. William Guthrie, the first settler in the township, settled here in 1834 or 1836 and gave his name to the grove. It was also sometimes known as Lawton's Grove, from William Lawton, one of the early comers. Guthrie's buildings were placed at the extreme south end of the timber. Melugin Grove, lying southwest of Little Melugin, spreads itself into the two towns of Viola and Brooklyn. It took its name from Zachariah Melugin, who located in the grove but on the Brooklyn side of the timber, in 1834. Later came Evins Adrian, but prior to 1840. Walter Little came to the township about the year 1837.

It is claimed that the first marriage in the township was that of Evins Adrian to Marilla Goodale, October, 1840; that Walter Little was the first adult to die in the township, and that the first birth was that of a child of William Lawton, who died in infancy.

The first school in the township was kept at the house of M. Van Campen for three terms, and the first school house was built at Little Melugin Grove.

The town being purely agricultural without a village center, little is to be gleaned of historical character regarding it. Its history is to be traced in the development and increasing value of its farm lands, which is difficult of reduction to details. Its land-owners have been large participants in the drainage of Inlet Swamp, elsewhere noticed, and have received great benefits therefrom.

The population of the township was 598 in 1890, and 694 in 1900, as shown by the Government census.

CHAPTER XXIV.

WILLOW CREEK TOWNSHIP.

THE FOUR GROVES—FOREIGN-BORN SETTLERS—EARLY SCHOOLS—ORIGINALLY A PART OF PAW PAW TOWNSHIP—SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES—LEE VIL-LAGE.

In this town are to be found four groves, often referred to in early history and by early settlers as landmarks, by names which they still retain; Smith's Grove, Allen's Grove and Twin Grove, or Groves—for there are two of the latter, as the name implies.

The township may perhaps be distinguished from all others in the county by the large percentage of inhabitants of either foreign birth or extraction, the Norwegian and German predominating. An enumeration made in 1880 placed the population at 1,214, of whom one-half were of foreign birth. Add to this the probable number of descendants of such parents, and the number will be greatly increased. We have been unable to find the census of 1890 covering such statistics, and that of 1900 is not yet obtainable.

Settlements were made almost simultaneously at the several groves. Peter Gonzolas, a Frenchman, put in his appearance at Allen's Grove in the fall of 1836; John Smith, a Scotchman, at Smith's Grove in 1837; and William Moore at the south one of the Twin Groves, in the latter year.

The Gonzolas tract (the Shoudy farm of recent years) was acquired in the spring of 1878 by Richard M. Allen, whose name was given to the grove, and this farm was the first in the township to be improved. Allen sold in 1840 to a man by the name of Bond, who sold to a Mr. Price in 1842. Mr. Smith bought a claim on Section 35, and there settled, and the name "Dry Grove," by which the timber was first known, soon surrendered to the name of the proprietor. With Mr. Smith came another Scotchman, John Colville, who was postmaster for many years at Paw Paw, dying there in October, 1893. Mr. Smith's log cabin, roofed with mowed grass, was the second to be built in the township. In mid-winter following its construction, fire caught in the inflammable roof, and the cabin burned to the ground. As soon as possible another was erected in its place. Soon after moving into the first cabin Mr. Smith's son John died—the first white person in the township to be taken away. Mr. Smith sent to Ottawa, the nearest point, for a doctor, who was guided across the prairie by Robert, a brother of the sick boy, now residing in Dixon.

Israel Shoudy came in 1844 and bought the Gonzolas or Allen tract from Price, and lived there until his death, which occurred in California at an advanced age only a few years ago. His remains were brought back and are buried over the line in DeKalb County. Horatio G. Howlett settled at Allen's Grove in 1839, having spent the two preceding years at Dixon. Nathaniel Allen settled in the vicinity of Smith's and Allen's groves, in 1845 with four of his five sons and daughters, his son, Chandler, coming a year later. Benjamin Nettleton had joined the settlement as early as this. Isaac Ellsworth came in the spring of 1846 and Christopher Vandeverter in 1848. The Littletons arrived at Smith's about 1845.

The Indian Trail from Ottawa north to the hunting grounds in Wisconsin ran through Allen's Grove.

Twin Groves were first named Moore, from William Moore, the earliest settler there, who began his improvements in 1837 at the South Grove. James Thompson and Levi Lathrop came here together about 1842, and in partnership bought Moore's claim. The first birth at the grove was that of Robert Blair, son of Robert Blair, Sr., in 1846. Cummings Noe settled here probably as early as 1846, and together with James Thompson and James Smith, entered all of the South Grove. James Smith and Nathan Koons, Jesse Koons and A. N. Dow arrived in 1847. Cyrus Goff came in these early days and built between the two groves where he kept a tavern. Lewis G. and Gilbert Durin, brothers, joined the Twin Grove settlement in 1849. Wesson Holton's coming was in 1853. The station "Scarboro" on the Rochelle Southern Railway, now being built, is located on L. G. Durin's farm.

The pioneer among the German settlers was Gottlieb Hochstrasser in 1854. A little later, but probably in the same year, came Joseph Herman. In 1856, Frank Bates, Frank Herman and John Herman were added, and the next year witnessed the arrival of Archæart Hochstrasser.

Of the Norwegians, Ommor Hilleson was the forerunner of the large settlement, having, it is said, landed in New York in 1837 and walked all the way thence to Chicago. He settled in Bradford Township a year or two later and, after accumulating a goodly fortune, died there. Though the pioneer of his nationality, the greater portion by far settled in Willow Creek Township. Lars Larsen Rissiter located there in 1847.

In this township, as elsewhere, schools were early looked after. The first school in the township was at Allen's Grove. It was started in 1848 in one of Israel Shoudy's log houses, and Martha Vandeventer, sister of Christopher Vandeventer, was the teacher. Preceding her, however, were Miss Price, Eliza Nettleton and Laura Brace. In the fall of 1849 a frame school house was built by subscription, one-half mile east of the present one. Prior to the building of this school house, school was taught by the ladies mentioned in the dwellings of Dr. Basford, Shoudy and Howlett. The first Board of Examiners to pass on the qualifications of teachers for this school consisted of John Smith, Sr., H. G. Howlett and Colville, Smith examining as to Geography and Grammar, Howlett in Mathematics and Reading, Colville in Writing and Spelling. At Twin Groves the first school was taught in James Thompson's original log cabin, but in what year we are not informed. Later, in 1854, a school house was built at the Groves by subscription and was purchased by the school district three years later. It was destroyed by fire in the winter of 1863-4. The Ellsworth school house was built in the spring of 1855, and Mrs. Ellsworth was the first teacher.

It will be recalled that the territory now embracing the town of Wyoming, Willow Creek and Alto, was first set off as Paw Paw Township, but was soon changed to Wyoming. In 1855 the north two-thirds was made into the Township of Willow Creek. The first town meeting in the new township was convened at Twin Groves School House, April 3, 1855. A. N. Dow acted as Moderator and G. Bishop as clerk. In 1861 Alto Township was set apart. In 1874 the town house was built on the southeast corner of Section 16, Willow Creek, at a cost of $1,100, including one acre of ground. At a meeting to pass on the question of building, the proposition was carried by a vote of 50 to 47.

When the Chicago & Rock River Railroad Company (now the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) was seeking township aid toward the construction of its line, at an election held October 16, 1869, Willow Creek gave one vote in favor to twenty-four against the proposal. But when the Chicago & Iowa Railroad Company applied for a subscription of $50,000 to its stock, the town, at a meeting held March 26, 1870, by a vote of seventy-five in affirmative and fifty-one negative, agreed to subscribe for the stock on condition that the road be located within one mile of the center of the town. This condition not having been complied with, the town wholly escaped railroad taxation.

The town was one of four to levy a bounty-tax to encourage enlistments in the War of the Rebellion, Dixon, Lee Center and Palmyra being the two others. The reports of the Adjutant General of the State credits Willow Creek with $5,200 bounty paid at an expense of $232.70, being a total of $5,432.70. The patriotism of the community was further evidenced, not only by the volunteers it sent to the front, but by the fact that, although it was then a purely agricultural district, with no village to increase its population, a "Union League" was organized in the dark days of 1862 with a membership of seventy.

Churches.—As early as 1844 and for eight or ten years thereafter, regular preaching was held at Allen's Grove, and about 1848 a Presbyterian Society was formed and existed several years. In 1868 a church building, under control of the Methodist denomination, was erected on the southwest corner of Section 16, at a cost of $3,500, owned jointly by the Methodist, Congregationalist and United Brethren denominations. It was dedicated November 9, 1868, Rev. F. A. Hardin and A. P. Beach officiating. The date of the organization of the Methodist Society is not accessible to the writer. The Congregational Society was formed in 1859. It never numbered over seventeen members, the removal of whom from the section gradually accomplished its dissolution.

The Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran church was formed in the fall of 1858, by Rev.

Lidrikson. The members were then scattered through several townships, but in time the most of them were found in Willow Creek. A church building was erected on a commanding site (northeast corner of the west half of northeast quarter, Section 11), at a cost of $3,500. A parsonage, with a twenty-acre tract adjoining, belongs to the society. The Zion church of the Evangelical Association was formed in 1868, its membership being confined to Germans. The first trustees were John Yetter, William Dunkelberger and J. L. Lutz. In 1875 a house of worship was erected on the southeast corner of Section 5, at a cost of $3,000, including ground.

The German Catholics had readings of mass about 1863, by Father Westkam, of Mendota, at the house of Peter Kimbler. The following year a stone building was put up on the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of Section 16, at a cost of $3,000.

In 1863 a society of Dunkards was formed and, in 1870, a German Lutheran Society was organized by Rev. William Halleberg.

In the spring of 1878 a Catholic church was built in the village of Lee, at a cost of $3,200, John Kennedy, James Kirby and Stephen Kirby being the principal contributors to the undertaking. It was dedicated in the autumn of 1878 by Father Verdin, of St. Ignatius College, Chicago. Father Edwards, of Rochelle, was the priest in charge when it was built.

A Methodist church was built in the village in 1877, at a cost of nearly $2,000. It is located in the DeKalb County section of the village.

It is doubtful if any other agricultural township in the county has as many churches and distinct denominations ministering to the religious wants of its people.

The tornado which swept over the county from the west on Sunday, June 3, 1860, entered Willow Creek about nine o'clock in the evening, midway of the west line of Section 18, and left it midway of the east line of Section 13, on the county line. Devastation was strewn in its path. Mrs. Abram Miller, Mr. James Nealis, A. N. Dow and family, consisting of eight persons, and Mrs. McConeky were all more or less seriously injured, while Mr. McConeky and his eldest and youngest boys were killed outright. All of the buildings in the path of the storm were either injured or totally demolished, and a windrow of twisted, splintered and uprooted trees, ten to twenty yards wide, was left through the southern portion of the Twin Groves.

Village of Lee.—That portion of the village lying in Lee County was platted for Francis E. Hinkley and John Kennedy August 19, 1872.

The first building to be erected was the small grain office and grocery of Christopher & Jorgens. About the same time J. Cheasbro put up an office for trading in grain, coal and lumber. The first store was at the corner of Main and B Streets, and was built by R. J. White, who became the first Postmaster in the new town. J. Johnson was the next to start a general store, his location being on Main Street, between A and B Streets. Abel Downer's, at the southwest corner of Main and B streets, was the third general store, and included drugs. Ostewig & Leyder started in hardware the same season. The first dwelling was built by James Minnihan, in 1872. W. H. Emmett erected the second in March, 1872. The first hotel was built by Frank Bacon on B Street, and in 1874 A. B. Trask built the second. The first elevator was erected by J. Cheasbro in the fall of 1872, and that winter Christopher & Jorgens built one. A third elevator was erected in 1901 and is operated by James E. Johnson. The other two are now owned and operated by M. P. Harris. The first brick structure to be put up in the new town was the store of Sardis Vosburg, at the northwest corner of Main and B Streets. The first school was opened in December, 1874, in the Dyas building, with W. H. Emmett as teacher. Different vacant rooms were occupied until the summer of 1876, when the first school house was put up.

Lee has the distinction of belonging to two counties, the center line of B Street being the dividing line between Lee and DeKalb. It was incorporated as a village June 23, 1874.

About three o'clock on the morning of July 5, 1902, the place was visited by a disastrous fire, which licked up one entire block of buildings on the west side of Main Street. Substantial brick buildings are gradually taking the place of the ones destroyed.

According to the census, the population of the township, including the Lee County part of the village of Lee, was 1,034 in 1890 and 959 in 1900. The part of the village lying in Lee County was 153 in 1890 and 151 in 1900. The total population of the village in 1890 was 264 and in 1900, 286.

CHAPTER XXV.

WYOMING TOWNSHIP.

ORIGINALLY PAW PAW TOWNSHIP—PIONEER SETTLERS—EARLY HOTELS AND POSTOFFICE—UNDEVELOPED RAILROAD—REGION INFESTED BY HORSETHIEVES AND COUNTERFEITERS. — PAW PAW VILLAGE. — NEWSPAPERS. CHURCHES. SCHOOLS, BANKS AND BUSINESS HOUSES.

When Lee County was divided into townships in 1850, Towns 37, 38 and 39, Range 2, were given the name of "Paw Paw" by the commissioners appointed to make the division. Their report was dated July 19, 1850. On the 14th of the preceding May, six representatives of the different localities met in Dixon, as a "Board of Supervisors," convening at their first session, and at this meeting changed the name of the "town formerly called Paw Paw" to Wyoming. (See ante, "Lee County.") The authority for this action is at least open to question, and but for acquiescence in the change, Paw Paw might still be legally Wyoming. The latter name is said to have been adopted at the suggestion of James Goble, in memory of Wyoming Valley, Pa., from which his family and others came.

Levi Kelsey and Joel Griggs were the first to locate a claim and build a house at Paw Paw Grove. This was in the winter of 1833-4; but supposing that they were on the Indian reservation, whose boundaries had not yet been defined, Mr. Griggs abandoned his claim and moved to Troy Grove. Tracy Reeves, writing from Princeton, Ill., under date of July 27, 1881, says that he was with a party at Paw Paw Grove in May, 1834, and camped over night in Indian huts, and that "they saw no one there, white or Indian."

We have the authority of Mrs. Sarah Terry, now of Earlville, Ill., a daughter of David A. Town, for the following statement: "David A. Town and family arrived in 1834, and stopped at the east end of the grove, where he put up an unhewed log house (on land afterward owned by Pierpont Edwards), in which he lived until 1835, when his brother Russell came and occupied the cabin he moved out of. On moving from this cabin, David A. Town built a log house north of the Chicago road, on the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 11, on or near the spot where the residence of H. L. Roberts now stands. He soon erected a hewed log house (the first of its kind) close to this. The two houses were separated by so short a space that they were occupied as one, and the hewed portion was given the dignity of a parlor of the pioneer home. In this log house was held the first wedding in this section, George Town, the son of David A. Town, being the groom, and Fidella Sawyer, the daughter of George Sawyer, of Lee Center Township, being the bride.

"The first store at the east end of the Grove was operated by one Harris, and the first store at the west end was built and operated by Wheeler Hedges, until it was purchased by Willard Hastings, whose property it continued to be until consumed by fire, this being the first building to burn in the settlement. It was located on the triangular piece of ground east of the town plat formed by the crossing of the Chicago road and the railroad. George Town built a hewed log house where the residence of W. I. Guffin now stands, near the southwest corner of Lot 6, Block 5, Harper's Addition."

O. P. Johnson, who settled in Brooklyn Township and died there at an advanced age, stated that he rived the shingles for Town's cabin, and, with three others, put it up in a day and a half in November, 1834. Edwin (or Edward) Town, a brother of David, settled at Shabbona Grove, and Hosea Town, a half-brother, located at Melugin's Grove about the same time.

About two years later than Town came Benoni Harris, then a man approaching eighty years of age, and his equally aged wife, with a large family of children. Mrs. Harris was the first in the settlement to be taken away. They were accompanied by a son-in-law, Edward Butterfield, John Ploss, John Wilcox and William McDowell. In the spring of 1836 Butterfield built a log cabin near the county line and close to the north line of the southwest quarter of Section 19, DeKalb County, on south side of the road now leading to Earlville. It was on the east edge of the tract which became South Paw Paw. He later moved about a mile northeast of this point, and in 1854 went to Black Hawk, Iowa, whence he finally returned and is buried near his old home. Wilcox located on the fractional southwest quarter, Section 18; Stephen Harris on the fractional northwest quarter of Section 19, LeClaire reservation; Benjamin Harris on the northwest quarter of Section 19, and Joseph Harris on the northeast quarter of the same section—all in DeKaib County. These were sons of Benoni Harris. John Ploss had a claim which embraced the larger part of South Paw Paw. Here, some rods east of the county line, he built his house on the creek about the time Butterfield put up his cabin.

As late as 1840 the only tavern at the Grove was that afterward known as Simms' Tavern. It was a hewed log house, the second of its kind in the neighborhood. Simms' son, having been indicted for counterfeiting, the father sold out to raise money to satisfy the bail bond, and the criminal was permitted to escape. Isaac Robinson purchased the tavern of Simms and added a small stock of goods to his business. It was on an elevation on the north side of the road, probably on the west half of the northwest quarter of Section 12, but earlier a hewed log house on the opposite side of the road had been used as a tavern. In 1840 a log house stood on the north side of the Chicago road, on Section 12, nearly opposite the junction with the present road from South Paw Paw. This house was occupied by Charles Morgan, who came with his wife and a number of children in 1836. Here was kept the first postoffice in the town, Morgan being the Postmaster. Afterward, Hiram Wood held the office in the house then standing next west of the Robinson, or Simms', Tavern. On the south side of the Chicago road and on the east half of Section 12, a small log house stood in 1840. It was never occupied for residence purposes after that year, but was used for a time for a public school, the first in the township. It is supposed that Jacob Alcott, who had married a squaw, built it. A little east of this cabin, and on the same side of the road, a frame house, believed to have been the first in the township, was built in the hollow by one Musselman, and hence was then, and has ever since been, known as the "Hollow House." It is still standing and is used as a barn. For a number of years Musselman kept a tavern here, and the house became noted for its dance hall and bar.

On the south side of the road and about thirty rods east of David Town's house, stood a log blacksmith shop in the early '40s, where once Alonzo Osborne was the smith. Later, perhaps in 1845, a blacksmith shop stood on ground in the village now occupied as the store of R. A. Hopps, and here this same Osborne held forth for a time. A man by the name of Alger settled at Four Mile Grove in 1835 or '36. Alcott, above mentioned, married the Pottawatomie woman, Madaline, the former wife of Joseph Ogee, the half-breed, the one favored in the treaty of Prairie du Chien reserving to "Madaline, a Pottawatomie woman, wife of Joseph Ogee, one section," etc. (See ante, "Lee County.") David A. Town eventually purchased the west 170 rods of this Reserve Section for $1,000, and William Rogers the remainder. The tract has always been designated in conveyances and on maps as the "Ogee Section." In 1880 William McMahan, County Surveyor, surveyed and platted the section and recorded the plat. The section granted to Pierre LeClaire by the Prairie du Chien treaty, was surveyed and platted by Wheeler Hedges in 1843, which plat was recorded. The County Atlas of 1900 shows these sections and their relation to each other.

William Rogers, son of Charles, arrived in 1836, and was the first Postmaster. His office was located near Morgan's tavern, which was presumably the "Hollow House." Jacob D. Rogers landed in 1837. His claim included the west part of the site of Paw Paw village. He was a conductor, and his house was a station, on the "Underground Road," over which negro slaves were transported to freedom. His log house was built in 1837 on Section 10, where Mr. Ritchie's house stood in recent years. In the latter year James Goble, afterward Sheriff, came with Jacob D. Rogers, Rogers's wife being Goble's sister. Goble's father, Ezekiel, and his brother, Timothy, came at the same time. William Jenkins and family were also accessions of 1837, while Henry and Medard Comstock, both blacksmiths, were a year earlier. Reference is made in other works to a "Butterfield or George Town" cabin, when, in fact, Butterfield never built or owned a cabin in this part of the grove. His holdings were confined to the south side of the grove.

Rev. Caleb Morris joined the settlement in 1848 with his widowed daughter, Nancy Robinson, and children, all of whom settled south of the grove. About this time a man by the name of Dunbar became the second settler at Four Mile Grove. In 1840, Deacons Orlando Boardman and Hallock were added to the settlers on the south side of the grove, at which time there were eighteen families encircling the grove, thirteen being within what is now Wyoming Township. This year, also, came Baily Breese and started a cooper shop and bought of William Rogers nearly all of the land on which East Paw Paw is situated, Peter May and family were added in 1841. He bought all the land now covered by Paw Paw village, but disappeared mysteriously, ten years later, without having received a deed. Elder Norman Warriner came in 1843 and Obed W. Bryant settled at Four Mile Grove in 1842.

In the later '40s two saw-mills were in operation in the grove, both propelled by horsepower. One was put up by Stanley Ruggles on the southeast corner of the west half of the northwest quarter of Section 19, DeKalb County. The other was in Lee County on the road between the LeClaire and Ogee Sections.

Without being able to make anything like an exact comparison, it would seem that, in 1840, Paw Paw Grove was the focus of the largest settlement in the county—Dixon and, possibly Sugar Grove, in Palmyra, excepted. This is accounted for by two facts: that it was on the stage road from Chicago to Galena, and also was one of the largest, most beautiful and attractive pieces of timber in all the country. All the early settlers sought the shelter and other advantages of groves, and were slow to reach out for the now valuable prairie lands.

John D. Rogers was not the only abolitionist in the colony who, by the "Underground Road," dealt frequent, but ineffective, blows at slavery. He expressed the sentiments of many when he said: "Whether I am an abolitionist or not, my best mares are."

The township and range lines were surveyed in 1836, but the section lines were not run until the winter of 1842-3. Prior to this people had held their lands only by right of possession, awaiting the market or pre-emption day. Consequently the "claim-jumper" found the same scope and temptation to operate here as elsewhere, and as in nearly every other section, protective societies were organized to defeat his dishonest efforts. The remedy was always adjusted to the emergency and the outcome was never satisfactory to the rascal. The law was of the home-made kind, but its principles were founded in justice, and hence it was never appealed from.

tions favored them and they prospered. Paw Paw and Inlet seem to have been their favorite rendezvous or bases of operation. No other settlements in the county are as notoriously identified with them as these two. As a rule, all newcomers were under suspicion. As a settler of 1837 put it: "Paw Paw was a strange place then. It seemed to me that every other man I met was hunting a horsethief, and you couldn't tell which was the thief—generally it was both." One horsethief buried a sack containing $900 in gold and, on being sent to prison, told his wife how he had marked the spot by a notched stake, but she was unable to find it. The secret having leaked out later, Harris Breese noticed such a stake and, together with his neighbor, Hampton, dug for and recovered the treasure. The latter's share is said to have been to him the nest-egg of future wealth.

In 1834 a thousand Indians were encamped for a week at the Big Spring, at the northwest corner of the grove. They were being moved from Indiana west, and the Government made them a payment here. The local Indians had already been sent to their western reservation the same year, but the old chief Shabbona, who is held in grateful memory for the protection he afforded the settlement in the days of the Black Hawk War, afterwards returned to the scenes of his early life and died on the Illinois River July 17, 1859, aged eighty-four. He was buried in a lot set apart to him in the cemetery at Morris, Grundy County, where a fitting monument was raised to his memory a few years ago. His oldest wife and several children rest beside him. Waubunsie, Chief of the tribe at Paw Paw Grove, and Shabbona were on the most friendly relations. The latter was, however, the leader and the former loyally followed. The Indian trail from Chicago to the Indian village at Rock Island ran along the south side of Paw Paw Grove.

Schools.—The first school in Wyoming Township is supposed to have been started as early as 1836, in what was called "The Little Pole School House," which was not more than twelve feet square, and was erected expressly for school purposes. The probability is that it was the same cabin heretofore mentioned as having been built by Jacob Alcott. The schools were all necessarily small and were started and maintained entirely by individual contributions, the public school system not having then been established. Vacant cabins were sometimes utilized for this purpose, and at other times private houses sheltered the school. The first frame school building in the township was erected about 1844 on or near the northeast corner of Section 24. Here Charles Dickinson and Orlando Boardman were the first teachers, Dickinson probably preceding Boardman. In two or three years the building was moved half a mile east, and now serves as a roosting place for chickens.

Postmasters.—Before a postoffice was opened at Paw Paw, the nearest one was at Somonauk, fifteen miles eastward. A "star mail-route" was established through Paw Paw in 1837, William Rogers being the first Postmaster there. Isaac Robinson took charge of the office as early as 1838 or 1839. In 1841 a Mr. Brittain, who lived in Princeton, carried the mail from that place to Paw Paw by way of Knox Grove. Willard Hastings was the carrier between Paw Paw and Ottawa. Hiram Wood held the office of Postmaster from 1845 to 1849, when William H. Robinson succeeded him, remaining until 1853, when Wood came in again. He was followed in 1857 by James Simons, and he in 1861 by John Colville, who remained at the post many years. Then came C. F. Preston, in Cleveland's first term, Ezra G. Cass, J. H. Braffett and Sadie Case, the present incumbent.

At the first organization of the township in 1850, 113 votes were cast for town officers. David A. Town was the choice for Supervisor and John Colville for Clerk.

Paw Paw Village.—Paw Paw Village was first incorporated as a village June 7, 1882. George Town's log house, already mentioned, was the first to be erected on the site of the village. Peter May's cabin stood close to the location, in recent years, of the Sutter house, west of Siglin & Potter's brick store, and his blacksmith shop, started in 1842, was on the south side of the road nearly opposite the store. The Hastings house, formerly on the site of the Roberts dwelling, was built in May, 1841, and was the first frame house in the village or in the township. About this time Hastings put up the first brick building in the township, about one-half mile south of the village, on Fonda's corners, and it was later clap-boarded. In 1844 Rodolphus Hawley built on the south side of the Chicago road, opposite George cupied by John E. Edwards. The next year Amos Sawyer built a cabin where the Detamore house now stands. In 1846 George Town moved out of his log cabin into the house known, many years afterwards, as the "Grummond" house. In those days John Colville and Jacob Rogers were partners in the manufacture of shingles by horse power. They also had such a mill over in DeKalb County. Probably this was the same mill moved from one locality to the other.

This was the settlement in 1847. Not a store was then in the place. Enterprising peddlers traveled the roads and undertook to supply the simple wants of the people. In the latter year, however, settlers began coming in and the village entered on a career of healthy development which, though slow, has had no appreciable check up to the present. We should be glad to follow its business growth, building by building, but space will not permit. Plodding, indeed, was its headway up to 1871, when lots and buildings together were assessed at only $3,809. Allowing for the assessor's discounts, this will still prove to be very small.

Village Schools.—Prior to 1880 the demands of the village school had led to the erection of a two-story frame building situated on the west side of North Street at the west end of East Avenue. In 1883 a two-story addition was built on the west end of this building, thus making four rooms in all. In December, 1884, the building was destroyed by fire, and, in 1885, a two-story brick structure, with large hall above, was erected on the same spot. Dr. J. H. Braffett was one of the school directors, and was chiefly instrumental in having this building erected. January 27, 1897, this structure was also consumed by fire. A long contest followed over the selection of a new site, which was finally settled in favor of the present location by a majority of twelve votes. In the summer and fall of 1897, the school house now in use was erected on the ground thus chosen, occupying a campus of four acres. The building, furniture and grounds are valued at $15,000. The building furnishes ample accommodations, and is in every respect thoroughly modern. The full course of study embraces twelve years, eight in the graded departments and four in the high school course. The school is on the accredited list of the State University, the Northern State Normal, Oberlin College, as well as others. Six teachers are employed.

Newspapers.—The first number of the "Paw Paw Herald" was issued November 23, 1877, by R. H. Ruggles, editor and proprietor. In January, 1878, E. G. Cass and J. B. Gardner became publishers, Ruggles still owning the plant. On the 22d of the next month they were succeeded by W. M. Geddes, who soon purchased the outfit. The paper was Republican in politics, but ceased publication some years ago.

The "Lee County Times," originally a Democratic paper, appeared March 21, 1878, with E. G. Cass and J. B. Gardner as proprietors. In August following Mr. Gardner retired. It became a strong Republican paper and, as such, is now owned and edited by O. W. Briggs.

Churches.—The Baptist church is the pioneer religious organization of the township. In February, 1841, it was organized with Orlando Boardman and wife, Mrs. Hallock, wife of Israel Hallock, James Goble and wife, Rev. Burton Carpenter, Sr., Hiram Harding and wife, Cyrus Whitford and wife and Mr. Sampson and wife as its first members. The meetings were held in Deacon Boardman's log cabin. Cyrus Whitford and wife belonged to Johnson's Grove, twelve miles to the northeast. Harding and wife and Sampson and wife came from Harding (now Freedom), La Salle County, about the same distance southeast. The others were all living at South Paw Paw. Israel Hallock, who is now living and is respected and known as Deacon Hallock, joined the society the next year and became its second deacon, Boardman being the first. Rev. Thomas Powell preached the sermon at this first gathering. Assisting him were Rev. Burton Carpenter, Jr., from Dixon, Rev. Hadley and Mr. Stannard of La Moille. Rev. Mr. Carpenter preached a few sermons, and was succeeded by Rev. Charles Harding in March, 1841, who continued as pastor until his death, February 3, 1843. Feeling the need of an assistant in his work Mr. Harding sent for Elder Norman Warriner, of Indiana, who arrived just in time to help bury Mr. Harding. Mr. Warriner occupied the pulpit for twenty years until he resigned. In 1843 the first meeting house was commenced at South Paw Paw and was finished in 1846. Until then services were held in Boardman's log cabin, which stood on the spot where now stands the home of Deacon Hallock. The membership reached its highest point in 1859, when it numbered 162. On Mr. Warriner's resignation, J. D. Pullis became pastor serving from July of that year until December 31, 1865. During his pastorate the present house of worship was built at South Paw Paw at a cost of about $3,000, and a parsonage purchased at the cost of $1,000. In March, 1866, G. W. Scott became pastor and continued until July, 27, 1867. C. H. Perritt served from October 12, 1867, for a little over one year, and was succeeded December 26, 1868, by William Sturgeon, who remained until October 26, 1872. In 1873 the church building was moved from South Paw Paw to its present location in the village, and a basement was constructed under it at a cost of a little over $2,000. The parsonage at South Paw Paw was disposed of and a lot purchased in the village, on which a parsonage was built in the winter of 1873-4. January 24, 1874, H. R. Hicks became pastor, continuing until September, 1881. S. B. Gilbert was pastor from December 10, 1881, until July, 1885. September 26th, following, H. F. Gilbert became pastor and served until May 21, 1887, after which the church was for a while without a regular pastor. R. H. Shaftoe served from June 3, 1888, to April 1, 1891. On May 10th of the latter year, R. S. Sargent was called and continued to May 10, 1896. During his term an addition was made to the rear of the church and other improvements at a cost of $1,000. A. C. Jones became pastor, June 14, 1896, and served until September 1, 1898. He was succeeded January 1, 1899, by William A. Mathews, who continued until October 1, 1892. In April, 1901, the parsonage on Flagg Street was sold for $800, and a modern residence as a parsonage was erected on Wheeler Street, at cost of about $2,500. November 16, 1902, H. J. Wheeler, the present pastor, assumed charge. The church celebrated its fiftieth anniversary June 18, 1891.

About 1870 a class of the Methodist Episcopal Church was formed with James Fonda, Jane E. Fonda, Sarah E. Swarthout, Edward Patrick and Harriet Patrick as members, the way being prepared by the preaching of Elder Lazenby at the school house the previous year. In 1875, while Rev. Pomeroy was pastor, their church building was erected. Paw Paw was made a separate charge in Rock River Conference in October, 1879.

In 1864 the Protestant Episcopal Society, organized in 1857, but long in a somnolent state, was revived by Rev. Jacob Fowler and built up to a membership of thirty or forty. A church was built in 1866 on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 6, at a cost of $2,600. The building was finally sold at Sheriff's sale, on a judgment for $500 recovered by the minister, A. C. Wallace, for arrears of salary. Being bid in by him he sold it to the United Brethren in 1874.

The Presbyterian Church of Wyoming, at Cottage Hill, was organized under the labors of John Flemming as missionary pastor from Earlville, in 1857, with the following members: Barton Bisbee, Joseph Blee, William Winter, Sally C. Bisbee, Euphemia Blee, Mrs. William Winter, Mrs. William Sproul and James Sproul. Mr. Flemming continued to preach once in two weeks in the school house, but for how long we have been unable to ascertain. In 1858 or '59 a building was put up at a cash outlay of $200. Being too small it was sold and became James Blee's granary. A new church 36 by 60 feet was erected a little north of the first one at a cost of $2,200. It was remodeled in 1861. No pastor was settled until about 1870, when Alexander S. Peck was installed, serving at Paw Paw at the same time. Rev. McFarland succeeded him for a year and, in 1878, Mr. McCullock, the pastor at Paw Paw, became the supply and continued for three years.

About 1870 the Presbyterians began holding meetings in the school house at the village, Rev. Alex. S. Peck, of Cottage Hill, preaching every two weeks. The society was regularly organized May 26, 1873, the first members being Miss Sarah A. Wilson, Andrew J. Fuller, Susan C. Fuller, Jane Nettleton, Jane Bulentine, Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Cole, Henry Cole, Anderson G. Radley and Mrs. Jane Howell. Rev. Mr. Peck was the first pastor. In 1875 a church was built at a cost of $1,900. Mr. Peck remained until the close of 1876. Revs. McFarland and E. N. Lord filled the pulpit until April, 1878, when George D. McCullock was installed, continuing until July, 1881. "The Presbyterian church of Paw Paw" was formally incorporated May 8, 1901. On the same date the society voted to sell the old church, parsonage and grounds, and purchase the Siglin property, where the new church and parsonage now stand, the latter having been moved to make a place for the church. The project was inaugurated with an offer from Mr. David Smith to give $1,000 towards the expenses on condition that a church building, costing not less than $5,000, should be erected. Robert Pogue, David Smith, W. S. Yingling, William Moffatt and T. H. Stettler were chosen building committee. The church was completed at a cost of $10,000, and the improvements on the parsonage, with cost of ground on which both buildings stand, came to $3,000. The pastors succeeding Rev. McCullock have been: John H. Carpenter, C. E. Schaible, Edgar D. Keys, Henry A. Furgeson, Charles H. Herald, Samuel Olerenshaw, W. A. Bass and Joseph W. Mann, the present incumbent. The first Board of Trustees of the church were Jacob Hendershot, A. C. Radley and A. J. Fuller.

Banks.—A bank was organized in the spring of 1880, under the name of the Union Bank, by M. M. Morse and P. C. Ransom. Mr. Ransom transferring his interest to Mr. Morse in 1882. B. J. Wheeler and Teal Swarthout succeeded Mr. Morse, in June, 1887. In 1901 the bank was reorganized under the State law, as the State Bank of Paw Paw, with a paid up capital of $25,000, B. J. Wheeler being President; David Smith, Vice President; Teal Swarthout, Cashier, and Frank Wheeler, Assistant Cashier. Its first Board of Directors consisted of David Smith, B. J. Wheeler, S. B. Miller, T. H. Stettler and Teal Swarthout. In July, 1902, the capital stock was increased to $40,000, and the Board of Directors from five to eight members, W. I. Guffin, Alonzo La Porte and A. H. Rosenkrans being added to the former list. On November 1, 1902, they bought out the interest of the First National Bank of Paw Paw, which had been organized June 1, 1902, and the capital stock was increased to $50,000. At this time W. I. Guffin, A. H. Rosenkrans and Alonzo La Porte resigned as directors, their places being filled by the election of William Moffatt, B. F. Frantz and A. C. McBride, the latter being elected Assistant Cashier. The Bank has a line of deposits averaging close to $200,000. Loans and discounts amount to $150,000, and the institution is in every way doing a conservative and satisfactory business.

Water System.—Natural Gas.—The village is equipped with an efficient water system for fire protection and general use. While drilling a well for the water supply an obstruction was encountered which required the use of dynamite, the explosion of which opened up a powerful stream of natural gas necessitating the abandonment of the well. B. J. Wheeler purchased it and piped gas from it to several houses, but the gas soon gave out. Another gas supply was struck on the west half of the southeast quarter of Section 1, which still furnishes fuel for the houses and for the power used on the farm. The village standpipe, or water tank, stands over the first mentioned well.

East Paw Paw.—This settlement, as well as that of South Paw Paw, is so near the real Paw Paw in the grove that, to a certain extent, the early history of one runs through all of them. William Rogers' hotel was evidently within the bounds of what became East Paw Paw. Baily Breese settled in 1841, and a part of East Paw Paw was platted on his land. Jacob Wirick bought out William Rogers about 1842 or 1843, and thus was, for a while, landlord of the hotel in that part of East Paw Paw lying in DeKalb County. A man by the name of Meade landed in 1838 and located in the grove south of East Paw Paw. At that time Paw Paw grove extended into DeKalb County. Hiram Gates came in 1845 and bought Meade out. Charles Pierce also arrived in the latter year. The first store at "the grove" was opened here by one Harris, and another was started a little west on the Chicago road by Charles Howard, in 1847, and a postoffice was opened in 1850 with Andrew Breese as Postmaster. About 1855 the Teachers' Institute and Classical Seminary was erected with funds subscribed for the purpose. The building stands in DeKalb County, and is now used for public-school purposes. Before 1848, S. B. Warren had a general store and Jos. Harris a grocery and saloon in East Paw Paw, and there was also a blacksmith shop in the place.

A Union Church has been standing here since 1868, but is no longer used for services.

South Paw Paw.—Most of the first settlers of South Paw Paw have already been mentioned, including John Ploss in 1835, and Deacons Boardman and Hallock in 1840. Eber St. John seems to have arrived prior to the latter date. Ralph Atherton arrived in 1844, as also did Dr. George S. Hunt, the first physician in the township as well as at the grove. Deacon Daniel Pine settled here in 1845, while Timothy Goble, brother of James, did the same in 1843. Once the place supported a graded school which is reputed to have done excellent work. Prior to 1859 a postoffice was opened here and continued until about two years ago, and was always called LeClaire Postoffice. Daniel Robinson was the first postmaster. About 1855 the Union Academy was started in South Paw Paw and was continued for several years, with H. H. Hoffman as first Principal. A two-story building was erected by subscription—the upper floor being used for the academy and the lower for a district school. It now stands about fifty rods east of the original site, being used as a barn.

Railroad.—September 22, 1869, the town, by a vote of 142 yeas to 62 nays, decided to take $50,000 stock in the Chicago & Rock River Railroad, issuing ten per cent. interest-bearing bonds for that purpose. The bonds were issued July 1, 1871. The town resisted payment by instituting suit to enjoin collection of the bonds, but was defeated. In 1881 new bonds were issued to take up the first issue, and were made payable in annual installments, the last of which fell due in 1901, the principal and interest aggregating $102,380. The stock was purchased at this cost to aid in the construction of the road, which went into operation in 1872 and has been of inestimable value to the community.

Elevator.—The only grain elevator in Paw Paw was erected by Capt. D. M. Roberts in 1872, and was operated by him until it was sold in 1873 to J. H. Hurlbut & Company of Chicago, and rented to Warner & Guffin, who bought it the following year. The original building collapsed in 1880, while loaded with wheat, oats, corn and timothy seed. It was rebuilt at once on the old site and is now owned by the estate of A. J. Warner, and operated by the firm of Warner & Guffin. Mr. W. I. Guffin has been a member of the firm from the beginning, and is now actively engaged in the business.

A prosperous tile and brick business is carried on in the village by J. M. Beal & Co. Their drying sheds have 15,600 feet floor space, and with their two kilns, give them a capacity of 30,000 brick per day and about the same proportion of drain tile.

The population of Paw Paw village, according to census of 1900, was 675. The population of the township and village combined, was 1,455 in 1890, and 1,546 in 1900.

CITIZENS OF LEE COUNTY.

The verdict of mankind has awarded to the Muse of History the highest place among the classic Nine. The extent of her office, however, appears to be, by many minds, but imperfectly understood. The task of the historian is comprehensive and exacting. True, History reaches beyond the doings of court or camp, beyond the issue of battles or the effects of treaties, and records the trials and the triumphs, the failures and the successes of the men who make history. It is but an imperfect conception of the philosophy of events that fails to accord to portraiture and biography its rightful position as a part—and no unimportant part—of historical narrative. Behind and beneath the activities of outward life the motive power lies out of sight, just as the furnace fires that work the piston and keep the ponderous screw revolving, are down in the darkness of the hold. So, the impulsive power which shapes the course of communities may be found in the molding influences which form its citizens.

It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts men to wish to learn the private, as well as the public, lives of their fellows. Rather, it is true that such desire tends to prove universal brotherhood; and the interest in personality and biography is not confined to men of any particular caste or avocation.

The list of those to whose lot it falls to play a conspicuous part in the great drama of life is comparatively short; yet communities are made up of individuals, and the aggregate of achievements—no less than the sum total of human happiness—is made up of the deeds of those men and women whose primary aim, through life, is faithfully to preform the duty that comes nearest to hand. Individual influence upon human affairs will be considered potent, or insignificant, according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. To him who, standing upon the seashore, notes the ebb and flow of the tides and listens to the sullen roar of the waves, as they break upon the beach in seething foam, seemingly chafing at their limitations, the ocean appears so vast as to need no tributaries. Yet, without the smallest rill that helps to swell the "Father of Waters," the mighty torrent of the Mississippi would be lessened, and the beneficent influence of the Gulf Stream diminished. Countless streams, currents and counter-currents—sometimes mingling, sometimes counteracting each other—collectively combine to give motion to the accumulated mass of waters. So is it—and so must it ever be—in the ocean of human action, which is formed by the blending and repulsion of currents of thought, of influence and of life yet more numerous and more tortuous than those which form "the foundation of the deep."

In the foregoing pages is traced the beginning, growth, and maturity of a concrete thing—Lee County. But the concrete is but the aggregate result of individual labor. The acts and characters of men, like the several faces that compose a composite picture, are wrought together into a compact or heterogeneous whole. History is condensed biography; "biography is history teaching by example."

It is both interesting and instructive to rise above the generalization of history and trace, in the personality and careers of the men from whom it sprang, the principles and influences, the impulses and ambitions, the labors, struggles and triumphs that engrossed their lives.

In the pages that follow are gathered up, with as much detail as the limits of the work allow, the personal record of many of the men who have made Lee County what it is. In each record may be traced some feature which influenced, or has been stamped upon, the civic life.

Here are pioneers, who, "when the fullness of time had come," came from widely scattered sources, some from beyond the sea, impelled by diverse motives, little conscious of the import of their acts, and but dimly anticipating the harvest which would spring from their sowing. They built their little cabins, toiling for a present subsistence while laying the foundations of private fortunes and future advancement.

Most have passed away, but not before they beheld a development of business and population surpassing the wildest dreams of fancy. A few yet remain, whose years have passed the allotted three score and ten, and who love to recount, among the cherished memories of their lives, their reminiscences of early days in Lee County.

Among these early, hardy settlers, and those who followed them, may be found the names of many who imparted the first impulse to the county's growth and home-likeness; the many who, through their identification with agricultural pursuits, aided in her material progress; of skilled mechanics, who first laid the foundations of beautiful homes, and productive industries; and of the members of the learned professions—clergymen, physicians, educators and lawyers—whose influence upon the intellectual life and development of a community it is impossible to over-estimate.

Municipal institutions arise; Commerce spreads her sails and prepares the way for the magic of Science that drives the locomotive engine over iron rails. Trade is organized, stretching its arms across the prairie to gather in and distribute the products of the soil. Church spires rise to express, in architectural form, the faith and aspirations of the people, while schools, public and private, elevate the standards of education and of artistic taste.

Here are many of the men through whose labors, faith and thought, these magnificent results have been achieved. To them, and to their co-laborers, the Lee County of today stands an enduring monument, attesting their faith, their energy, their courage and their self-sacrifice.

FATHER JOHN DIXON (deceased) was born at Rye, Westchester County, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1784, son of John and Elizabeth (Purdey) Dixon. In 1804 he established himself in the tailoring business in New York City, which he conducted until 1820, when he came to Illinois and settled at Springfield, where he erected the third house built in that city. At the expiration of four years, he removed to Peoria, Ill., where he was County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, etc., remaining there five years. The following year (1829) he spent in Bureau County, Ill., and on April 11, 1830, arrived at the ferry on Rock River. Mr. Dixon purchased the ferry, which was henceforth known as Dixon's Ferry, but later the word "ferry" was dropped and the village has since been called Dixon. In 1808 he married Rebecca Sherwood, a native of New York, and to them twelve children were born, four of whom grew to maturity. Father Dixon died July 6, 1876; his wife dying in February, 1847. He was a Republican in political sentiment, and in his younger days was a member of the Baptist church. Mrs. Dixon was a charter member of the Baptist church at Dixon.

BENJAMIN F. SHAW, editor and proprietor of "The Telegraph," Dixon, Ill., was born at Waverly, N. Y. March 31, 1831, of English and Colonial ancestry, being a descendant of William Bradford who kept the log of the ship "Mayflower" in 1620, and became the first Governor of Plymouth Colony. His grandmother on the paternal side was, previous to her death, the last survivor of the "Wyoming Massacre" of 1778, her father and two uncles being killed during the battle which preceded the massacre. His mother's father, Major Zephon Flower, was a soldier of the Revolution. Mr. Shaw engaged in journalism in Dixon, Ill., previous to 1856 and, on February 22d of that year, as editor of the "Dixon Telegraph," took part in the convention of Illinois editors held at Decatur for the purpose of outlining a policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, serving upon the committee which framed the platform. It was in accordance with resolutions adopted at this convention that the first Republican State Convention was held at Bloomington, Ill., May 29, 1856. Mr. Shaw's journalistic career, extending over a period of over fifty years, has been almost entirely identified with the "Dixon Telegraph," of which he is now the editor and proprietor, although he spent sometime in 1867 and 1868 as the Washington correspondent of a Chicago paper. The official positions held by him include two terms as Clerk of the Circuit Court and Recorder of Lee County, six years as Canal Commissioner, and Postmaster of the city of Dixon, in which he is now serving his second term.

EUSTACE E. SHAW (deceased), late associate editor and joint proprietor of the "Dixon Evening Telegraph," was born at Dixon, Ill., March 28, 1857, the son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Shaw, and died in that city, Sept. 5, 1902. Mr. Shaw learned the printing trade in his father's office, and gave his best efforts to assisting his father to build up the business of the B. F. Shaw Printing Company, during the latter years of his life serving efficiently as associate editor and business manager of the "Evening Telegraph." The following tribute to his memory was paid by the Rev. J. F. Newton at the funeral, which was largely attended by neighbors who deeply mourned his untimely death:

"He lived with Nature—a life of simple sweetness. He loved his fellow man and was kind of heart. There are none who knew him but who are eager to vouchsafe these lovable attributes to Eustace Shaw. He was always in touch with the subtle, tender influences that are akin to a manly nature; and to know him was to love him in turn. It might fittingly be reiterated. 'If every one to whom he had done some kindly act should drop a flower upon his grave, he would sleep beneath a bower of roses.' Eustace Shaw was energetic in every-day life and the soul of honor. With all who knew him his word was a sacred pledge, and the ties that bound him to his friends were as inseparable as the strongest links of gold. There were none too poor, none too lowly, to receive his every-day challenge of good will and friendship, and when he passed to his reward he was simply and truly among

"His memory cannot die with those who were privileged to know him in his true light.

There are many who have accomplished more in worldly affairs, but we know that the spirit of Eustace Shaw rests at peace, content with the love he inspired in others while living his worldly life. The earnest prayers that went up from so many hearts the day of his death must have reached him and given him quiet and peace. Eustace Shaw loved the woods and the flowers; he loved everything in Nature. He loved his native river; and his repose was assuring and keen when he might feast his eyes upon the gentle waters as they murmured by. He saw the pretty things in life, and more—he wanted others to see them and share their simple beauty with him. He knew no selfishness. He never deliberated over a sacrifice to be made for a friend—no, it came spontaneous; and many a noble tender has he made at the altar of friendship. He was never so quick to act as when the friend was in the direst distress—any conceivable reward unlooked for and an impossibility. He worshipped at the shrine of home, wife and children, and God has taken him as tenderly to his heart as he would take the most innocent babe; for how could God but love a man who was loved by all his fellow men and who despised hypocrisy, shunned bad habits and was honest and true to himself, as well the world at large? He passed away with a smile on his lips and a word of assurance to those about him; and this was but the crowning example of his great bravery and his solicitous concern for those whom he loved. Then the Guardian Angel said, 'Peace be with thy soul.' and the life of Eustace Shaw was ended."

Deceased was descended from Puritan stock; Governor Bradford, of Massachusetts Bay, being of the fifth (5) generation; three of his ancestors were in the Revolutionary War. He leaves a widow, Mabel (Smith) Shaw, and three sons, George Boules, Benj. T. and Robert Eustace Shaw.

JOHN DAWSON CRABTREE (deceased), lawyer and late Judge of the Circuit Court, Thirteenth Judicial District, was born in Nottingham, England, Nov. 19, 1837; came to America in 1848 and to Dixon, Ill., in 1853; was educated in the district schools and in the public schools of Dixon. In 1861, in response to the first call for troops to repress the rebellion, he enlisted in Company A, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was successively advanced to the rank of Lieutenant and Captain, and at the date of his discharge, August 16, 1864, was brevetted with the rank of Major. Returning home after the close of the war, he resumed study of the law, which he had begun previous to his enlistment, and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1886 he was elected State Senator on the Republican ticket, but resigned in 1888 to accept the position of Judge of Circuit Court to which he was elected the same year, was re-elected without opposition in 1891, and again reelected in 1897, but died May 22, 1902, one year before the expiration of his term of office. Judge Crabtree was a member of Friendship Lodge, No. 7, A. F. and A. M., Dixon.

JASON C. AYRES, President of Dixon National Bank, Dixon, Ill., was born in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., August 22, 1835, son of Sylvanus and Anna (Bean) Ayres. He located in Dixon in 1855 and has since been prominently connected with its growth and development, as well as with real estate interests of his locality. He was admitted to the bar in 1870. In political sentiment Mr. Ayres is a Republican and has served as City Clerk and Treasurer of Dixon for many years. On May 7, 1861, he married Lavina Crawford, daughter of Dr. John S. and Delia A. (Preston) Crawford, of Williamsport, Penn. Fraternally he is a member of Friendship Lodge, No. 7, A. F. & A. M.; Nachusa Chapter, No. 56, R. A. M.; Dixon Council, No. 21, R. & S. M., and Dixon Commandery, No. 21, K. T.

CHARLES W. CHADWICK, retired farmer, Lee Center, Ill., was born at Windsor, Me., June 18, 1822, son of Lott and Sarah (Linn) Chadwick. He came to Lee County with his father in 1838, where, for three years, he assisted the latter in his trade as mill-right. In 1841 he removed South, where he remained eight years, and then (in 1849) crossed the plains to California in search of gold. Returning from the gold fields in 1851, he located at Lee Center, where he engaged in the manufacture of plows; afterwards engaged in farming at Palestine Grove; later spent several years in Missouri and Colorado, but since 1883 has lived retired at Lee Center. In 1847 he married Nancy J. Holderby, who died two years later, leaving one child, Sarah J. (Mrs. Silas Whitney). In 1853 he married his second wife, Phebe Whitney, by whom there were the following named children: Alice (Mrs. John Jacobs), Ida (Mrs. W. W. Allen, of California), Fred C., now residing in California, and Harry, who resides in Mexico. In politics Mr. Chadwick is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the A. F. & A. M.

SAMUEL C. EELLS, President City National Bank, Dixon, Ill., was born at Walton, Delaware County, N. Y., March 19, 1822, son of Nathaniel G. and Betty (St. John) Eells, natives of Connecticut. He came to Dixon, Ill., in 1854, and engaged as bookkeeper with Robertson, Eastman & Company, bankers. In the spring of 1855 the firm was changed to Robertson, Eells & Company; in 1860 to Eells & Coleman; in 1865 to Lee County National Bank, and since 1885 has been known as the

SAMUEL C. EELLS.

City National Bank. Mr. Eells has been President of this institution since the death of Joseph Crawford, August 11, 1891, although he has been manager of the business since April, 1855. On October 12, 1854, he married

Anna Moore, and they have three children—Caroline W., Anna S., and Bessie P. In political relations Mr. Eells is a Republican, and in religious faith is a member of St. Luke's Episcopal church in which he has served as vestryman since 1855.

ABALINO C. BARDWELL, Dixon, Ill., born Oct. 23, 1844, at Conneautville, Penn., son of Dr. George A. and Julia A. (Cutler) Bardwell; parents moved to Prophetstown, Whiteside County, Ill., in 1853. Came to Dixon, Feb. 10, 1864, and read law in office of George P. Goodwin, Esq.; enlisted Feb. 10, 1865, as private; on organization of the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, was elected Captain of Company G; served as Provost-Marshal at Resaca, Americus and Savannah, Ga. Admitted to the bar Sept. 24, 1867, and commenced practice that fall at Rochelle, Ill., but owing to impaired health shortly after abandoned it. In February, 1868, he established the "Dixon Weekly Herald;" on Dec. 2, 1869, the Herald and Telegraph were united under his editorship. January 1, 1871, he retired from the paper and in August following resumed practice in partnership with Hon. James K. Edsall, since which date he has continued in practice, excepting from the spring of 1892 to the fall of 1894. Elected State's Attorney in November, 1876, and served one term. In January, 1899, was appointed Master in Chancery of Lee County Circuit Court, which position he continues to hold.

JOSEPH UTLEY (deceased), Dixon, Ill., was born at Western, Oneida County, N. Y., July 27, 1815, the son of Henry and Sarah (Morse) Utley. After completing his education in the neighborhood schools, he entered his father's tannery, learned the trade and succeeded to the business in 1838, which he followed until 1859, when he removed to Dixon and opened a saddlery hardware store, continuing until 1867, when he retired from active business. He was deeply interested in water transportation, and was a recognized authority on this subject; was appointed Canal Commissioner of the State in 1869 and served eight years, most of the time as President of the Board. He was one of the prime movers in the improvement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and to his efforts is largely due the Hennepin Canal, now being constructed, in the interest of which he did effective work before commercial bodies, Committees of Congress and

State Legislatures. The whole project met with fierce opposition from the Sterling people, and it was years after his death that sentiment changed, a dam at that point instead of Dixon having been pronounced the more feasible. Mr. Utley died at Dixon, Ill., March 19, 1889.

Theron Cumins.

Theron Cumins (deceased), manufacturer, Grand Detour and Dixon, Ill., was born in the town of Tunbridge, Orange County, Vt., son of Joseph and Hannah (Converse) Cumins, who were natives of Vermont; was educated in the public schools and, in 1842, came to Grand Detour, Ogle County, Ill., where he became clerk in a general store, remaining there three years, when he went to Newark, Ohio, remaining four years. Then, returning to Grand Detour, he was engaged for two years in the mercantile business with his brother Solon, when going a second time to Ohio, he became a contractor on the Ft. Wayne & Pittsburg Railroad, but two years later (1863) again came to Grand Detour and there entered into partnership with Leonard Andrus for the manufacture of plows. Owing to ill-health of Mr. Andrus the management of the concern devolved largely upon Mr. Cumins, and after the death of his partner he conducted the business alone until 1869, when Col. H. T. Noble acquired an interest in the establishment, followed in June, 1874, by the admission of O. B. Dodge to the firm. In June, 1879, the business having assumed large proportions, the concern was incorporated by Theron Cumins, Henry T. Noble, O. B. Dodge and Charles H. Noble, under the name of the Grand Detour Plow Company. In the meantime (1867) the plant was moved to Dixon, Ill., where it now occupies five acres of ground. Mr. Cumins served as President of the Company for many years, was also a director of the Dixon National Bank, and was an important factor in the development of Dixon as an industrial center. Politically he was an earnest Republican. Mr. Cumins died August 2, 1898.

RICHARD S. FARRAND, lawyer, Dixon, Ill., was born in St. Joseph, Ind., Oct. 1, 1852; left home when a boy of eleven years and afterwards was dependent upon his own resources, earning his livelihood by his own efforts and improving all available opportunities to acquire an education. In 1877 he came to Dixon, and soon after began the study of law with A. C. Bardwell, was admitted to the bar in 1879 and in 1882 was elected County Judge of Lee County, serving continuously until 1902, when he was chosen Circuit Judge for the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit to succeed the late Judge Crabtree. Judge Farrand has also served one term as Mayor of the city of Dixon. January 30, 1873, he was married to Miss Catherine Jane Marsh, daughter of Harry and Catherine (Smith) Marsh. Judge Farrand is a Republican in politics and is fraternally associated with Brooklyn Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Nachusa Chapter, No. 56; R. A. M. Lodge, No. 137; the A. O. U. W. and Camp No. 56, M. W. A.

J. B. MERRIMAN, M. D., (deceased), a prominent early settler of Lee County, Ill., was born in Hartford County, Conn., May 2, 1814, of English extraction. Nathaniel Merriman, born in England in 1614, was the founder of the family in America and settled in New Haven, Conn., in 1639. Anson Merriman, father of Dr. J. B. Merriman, was born in Hartford County, Conn., and died at the age of thirty-two years. J. B. Merriman was the second child in his father's family and obtained a good education in his youth, deciding at that time to become a physician. Graduating from the medical department of Yale College in 1837, he began practicing in Berkshire County, Mass., where he rose rapidly in his profession, but after ten years of steady service his health failed and he removed to Long Island, N. Y. His large and increasing practice at the latter place wore so rapidly on his physical powers that, six years later, he determined to abandon the medical profession and seek a new home on the western prairies with the hope of restoring his impaired health. Coming to Lee County in 1855, he located on a quarter section of unimproved land in South Dixon Township, to which he made subsequent additions until he owned between 700 and 800 acres of valuable land in that locality. He also purchased large tracts of land in Iowa, which he later disposed of. The doctor first married in Berkshire County, Mass., Miss Eliza Curtis, who bore him one child, Grace (Mrs. E. W. Curtis, of Chicago), who died March 3, 1893. His second wife was Elizabeth Smith, a native of Long Island, N. Y., who died at the age of twenty-one years, leaving one son, Walter B. His third marriage was with Angeline Judd, who died Sept. 2, 1891, aged seventy-four years. When Doctor Merriman came to Lee County he intended to abandon the medical profession, but his reputation as a skillful physician had preceded him, and thus many demands were made upon him for his services. In 1884 he left his home in South Dixon to reside with his son Walter B., whose home is now in the suburbs of Dixon City, where he died in 1898. The Doctor was a well-informed man, possessing excellent business qualifications, and made many friends during his long and influential career in Lee County. In political sentiment he was a Republican and served his township as a member of the Board of Supervisors and two terms as Justice of the Peace.

J. B. MERRIMAN, M. D.

WALTER B. MERRIMAN, County Treasurer of Lee County, Dixon, Ill., was born on his father's farm in South Dixon Township, Lee County, Nov. 5, 1859, son of Dr. Joel B. and Elizabeth (Smith) Merriman. Dr. Joel B. Merriman, whose biography may be found elsewhere in this volume, came to Lee County in 1855, where he practiced medicine and conducted a farm for many years. Walter B. Merriman remained on his father's farm until twenty-four years of age, and in the meantime received his educational training in the district schools of South Dixon Township, the public school at Dixon, and the Dixon College. He married for his first wife Mattie Lee, who died

WALTER B. MERRIMAN.

Feb. 27, 1893, leaving four children—Verna E., Guy H., Grace E., and Walter Earl. In 1896 he married his second wife, Ida Mackin, and of this union there were three sons—Glenwood B., George C. and Clifford F. Mr. Merriman retired from active farm life in 1896, but is still an extensive land owner, his farms aggregating 970 acres, and during his connection with the agricultural interests of the county, was well known as a breeder of thoroughbred Norman horses. In political views he is a Republican, and is serving as County Treasurer, having been elected to that office in 1902.

ELMER COTTON, farmer, Hamilton Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Vermillion County, Ill., April 13, 1862, son of Henry and Elizabeth G. Cotton. During the year 1881 Mr. Cotton worked in the coal mines and then removed to McLean County, Ill., where he conducted a rented farm for seven years, and afterwards purchased 240 acres upon which he lived until 1901. Coming to Lee County in the latter year, he bought his present 240-acre farm. Mr. Cotton was married March 4, 1886, to Mary E., daughter of William and Electa Wright, of McLean County, Ill., and of this union two children—William H. (deceased) and Charles E.—have been born. In politics Mr. Cotton is a Republican.

JOHN L. LORD (deceased), Palmyra, Lee County, Ill.; born in Hopkinton, N. H., June 10, 1829, son of John and Achsah (Cary) Lord; in 1838 came to Lee County with his parents, who first settled in Dixon, but in 1841 located on a farm in Palmyra Township, whence John L. was accustomed to walk to Dixon to attend school; besides working on the farm learned the trade of blacksmith with his father, who had established a wagon-factory; in 1850 purchased his father's interest in the wagon-factory, which some years before his death, he transferred to his son, Paul G. Mr. Lord's mother died about a year after the family removed to Dixon, and his father in 1873. June 17, 1851, he was united in marriage with Mary L. Warner, daughter of Moses M. and Orrel (Smith) Warner, who came to Lee County in 1838, and they had six children: August W.

and Paul G. Lord, of Dixon, Ill.; Dr. John P. Lord, of Omaha, Neb.; Mary E. Fred and Grace, who reside with their widowed mother on the farm. Mr. Lord died March 15, 1901, as the result of a stroke of apoplexy four days previous. An ardent Republican and a man of pronounced views and thorough conviction, he was of too modest and retiring a disposition to be a prominent factor in political affairs, but served his township as a member of the Board of Supervisors, and was active in connection with agricultural and horticultural institutes in his section of the State; was one of the founders and President of the Palmyra Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and for several years President of the Lee County Old Settlers' Association. Mr. Lord was a member and liberal supporter of the Universalist church.

HON. JAMES B. CHARTERS was born in Belfast, Ireland, July 11, 1831, son of Alexander Charters, who long made his residence at Hazlewood, Dixon. Judge Charters graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1852, and studied in The Inner Temple, London, England, and immediately thereafter came to Dixon, Ill., where, in 1856, he began practicing his profession, which he followed continuously until his death, Feb. 4, 1902. He was elected County Judge in 1877, and prior to holding this official position, had served as Mayor of Dixon one term. In 1858 he married Miss Fanny J. Charters, daughter of Mr. Samuel M. Charters, who died in 1883, and on July 9, 1885, he married Miss Blanche Soule, of Dixon, daughter of Dr. James Kent Soule. He was a Director of the Public Library from its founding, and a valued member of St. Luke's Episcopal church, in which he served as vestryman for thirty years. Ever identified with the best interests of Dixon, his many friends pay tribute to his qualities of mind and heart, and his gracious personality endeared him to all.

LEONARD ANDRUS.

LEONARD ANDRUS, Vice President City National Bank, Dixon, Ill., was born at Grand Detour, Ogle County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1853, son of Leonard and Sarah Ann (Bosworth) Andrus. Leonard Andrus, Sr., located at Grand Detour in 1834 and gave that village its name, but shortly afterwards went to Michigan, returning to the former locality about May 1, 1835, where he made a permanent settlement. In 1837, in company with John Deere, he made the first steel plow manufactured in America, and from this humble beginning developed an extensive business. He died in 1867. Leonard Andrus, Jr., came to Dixon in 1882 and has since been prominently identified with the interests of that city. On October 4, 1882, he married Elizabeth M. Alexander, daughter of Philip M. and Eliza (Howell) Alexander, and they have one son, Leonard A., a student of Harvard University. In politics Mr. Andrus affiliates with the Republican party.

PHILIP M. ALEXANDER.

PHILIP M. ALEXANDER (deceased) was born at Pompey Hill, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1819, the son of Solomon Alexander. In 1837 he came to Dixon, Ill., and was variously employed until 1854, when he and George L. Howell, established a hardware business on Galena Avenue, which was conducted until the time of Mr. Alexander's death at Wauwatosa, Wis., May 17, 1898. July 20, 1848, he married Eliza Howell, daughter of Nicholas and Betsy (Wilson) Howell. Mrs. Alexander died May 5, 1873. To Mr. and Mrs. Alexander two children were born: Ida Louise, born March 12, 1857, married June 1, 1882, George A. Morris, and died Jan. 12, 1901; Elizabeth Maude, born August 7, 1860, and married Leonard Andrus, Oct. 4, 1882.

Mr. Alexander was a staunch Democrat in political sentiment.

HON. JOSEPH CRAWFORD (deceased) was born in Columbia County, Penn., May 19, 1811; located in Lee County in 1835; appointed Deputy Surveyor for Northwestern Illinois in 1836; elected County Surveyor of Lee County in 1840, serving eighteen years; served as a member of the First Board of Supervisors of Lee County in 1841; elected to represent Lee and Whiteside Counties in the State Legislature in 1849; re-elected to the same office in 1853. He was one of the charter members of the Lee County National Bank (now the City National Bank of Dixon), which was organized in 1865, and served as its President until his death; elected Mayor of Dixon in 1873 and re-elected the two following terms. He died August 11, 1891.

GEORGE L. HOWELL (deceased) was born near Syracuse, N. Y., August 24, 1820, son of Nichol and Betsy (Wilson) Howell, natives of New York. George L. Howell came to Dixon, Ill., in 1854, and the same year formed a partnership with P. M. Alexander in the hardware business, which was continued for nearly forty years, or until the time of his death, March 23, 1893. On July 17, 1845, he married Julia Thomas who bore him three children—Clarence N. (deceased), Frank S. and Emma (deceased). Mrs. Howell died, and on Dec. 22, 1859, Mr. Howell married his second wife, Emma P. Little, who was born in Castine, Maine, and of this union there were four children—Edward N., Agnes P. (Mrs. William E. Appleford), Louise A. (deceased) and George L. Mr. Howell was a Republican in political views, and in religious belief a Presbyterian.

REV. EDWARD C. SICKELS, D. D., pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian church.

EDWARD C. SICKELS, D. D.

Dixon, Ill., was born in Indianapolis, Ind., April 24, 1835, the son of Rev. William and Alma C. (Coe) Sickles, both of New York State birth and ancestry. Dr. Sickels received his preparatory education in his native city, graduating from Hanover College, Ind., and later (1858) in theology at Princeton, N. J., having spent the years 1856 and '57 studying in Berlin, Germany. While in Berlin he was socially intimate with Timothy Dwight, former President of Yale College; the late Gov. Oglesby, the late Neal Dow, and many other prominent Americans who visited the German capital. The year of his graduation from Princeton, he began preaching at Kirkwood, Mo., but in the summer of 1862, came to Dixon, Ill., shortly after becoming pastor of the First Presbyterian church there—a position which he continued to occupy until the spring of 1895 when, after thirty-three years of continuous service, he retired with the position of pastor emeritus. During his pastorate at Dixon, Dr. Sickels served twenty-five years as Stated Clerk of his Presbytery and was twice chosen Moderator of the Synod of Illinois. He received the degree of D.D. from Lake Forest University in 1889. February 19, 1863, Dr. Sickels was united in marriage to Caroline P. Dunham, a native of Ohio but reared in St. Louis, Mo., the daughter of James S. and Jane (Cutler) Dunham, of New York. Dr. and Mrs. Sickels have had seven children born to them, viz.: Alma (deceased), Edward E., Gracia Gay (wife of Alfred G. Welch), James D., William C., Amy C. and Lewis N. In his retirement Dr. Sickels enjoys the ardent friendship of a large circle of former parishioners and acquaintances.

EDWARD A. SICKELS, physician and surgeon, Dixon, Ill., was born at North Dixon, Ill., Oct. 3, 1866, son of Rev. E. C. and Caroline P. (Dunham) Sickels. Rev. E. C. Sickels was pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Dixon for thirty-five consecutive years. Edward A. Sickels attended the North Dixon public schools and graduated from the high school when seventeen years of age. He afterwards attended the Dixon Normal School for five years, graduating from the commercial and scientific departments, and, during his attendance, paid his own expenses by manual labor in the brick and tile factory at Morrison, Ill., where, for a time, he had charge of a large force of men. In 1887 he entered the railway mail service, running ten years, and as his duties would permit during the last five years of his service, attended the Hahnemann Medical College, graduating with honors from that institution in 1897. Resigning his position in the mail service in the latter year, he entered the Hahnemann Hospital, Chicago, where he remained one year, and then came to Dixon, Ill., where he has since practiced his profession with successful results. In 1899 the Doctor lectured weekly on the subject of anatomy in the Hahnemann College, and also had charge of the surgical clinic in that institution. He is a member of the Rock River Institute of Homeopathy, Clinical Society of Chicago, National Institute of Homeopathy, is on the hospital staff at Dixon, formerly held a position on the surgical staff of the Hahnemann Hospital, and is Examining Physician for the Banker's Life Insurance Company, Des Moines, Iowa. Socially he is a member of the Knights of Maccabees, Knights of the Globe and Royal Circle. September 25, 1901, the Doctor was married to Jeanne Wood, daughter of the Rev. Wood, who is now connected with the mission work of the Dutch-Reformed church. In religious belief he is a Presbyterian, and in political views a Republican.

HON. ABIJAH POWERS (deceased) was born in Greenwich, Hampshire County, Mass., Dec. 16, 1814, son of Joseph and Sally (Powers) Powers, and a grandson of Col. Thomas Powers. In the spring of 1838 Joseph Powers and his son Abijah came west, and after reaching Rock Island, proceeded by boat to Dixon (then Dixon's Ferry) and entered land in Section 31, Palmyra Township, where the former died April 28, 1853; his wife surviving him several years, and dying at the age of seventy-six. Abijah Powers began life in the West without capital, working at first by the month as a farm-hand. He entered land in Lee County in 1838, which he later purchased of the Government with money saved while employed at farm labor. By industrious habits and careful management, Mr. Powers developed his land into a modern farm, and at the time of his death—July 24, 1891—owned, in addition to his home farm of 300 acres, several other valuable farms in Lee and Whiteside Counties. In September, 1839, he married Miss Amanda M. Sprout, born in Greenwich, Mass., daughter of Ezra and Dency (Newland) Sprout, also natives of the Bay State. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Powers, viz.: Alfred A., who died at the age of six years; Helen, who became the wife of Anson Thummel of Palmyra Township and died in 1889; Elvira, wife of Capt. Charles Eckles, a soldier in the Federal army during the late Rebellion and now a prominent farmer near Marshalltown, Iowa;

Mary, who married J. C. Nickerson, a commission merchant in Chicago; Warren F., who married Mary Miller and is now a prominent farmer in Whiteside County, Ill.; Austin, who married Adella Tallman and now owns and conducts the home farm in Palmyra Township. Mrs. Powers resides on the old homestead with her son Austin. Abijah Powers was a Republican in political views, and held a number of local offices including that of Township Supervisor in which he served five years. In 1876

he was elected Representative from his district to the Thirtieth General Assembly of Illinois. Mr. Powers was a member of the Congregational church at Prairieville, in which he served as deacon for many years.

CLYDE L. WICHER, Superintendent of the Lee County Almshouse, South Dixon Township, was born in Anamosa, Jones County, Iowa, Nov. 15, 1872, son of Henry and Georgiana (Stott) Wicher, the former a native of Cowes, Isle of Wight, England, and the latter, of Susquehanna, N. Y. Henry Wicher came west in 1867, and settled in Iowa. In spring of 1895, Clyde L. came to Dixon, and was employed in the mercantile establishment of I. B. Countryman until Nov. 7, 1900, when he was appointed Superintendent of the County Farm, and has since filled that position to the satisfaction of all concerned. January 1, 1898, he married

CLYDE L. WICHER.

Jesse B. Burright, and they have one daughter, Enid, born Sept. 30, 1900. Mr. Wicher is a member of the Knights of the Globe, and Dixon Lodge, No. 779, B. P. O. E. In religious belief Mr. Wicher is an Episcopalian, while Mrs. Wicher is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

AUSTIN POWERS, Section 31, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides, Oct. 18, 1857, son of Abijah and Amanda M. (Sprout) Powers, being the youngest in a family of six children. His father and paternal grandfather (Joseph Powers) settled in Palmyra Township in 1838. Abijah Powers was a man of practical ideas and was elected to represent his township as Supervisor for five years, and in 1876 was elected to the General Assembly of Illinois. He was prominent as a breeder of thoroughbred short-horned cattle and through his industrious habits accumulated a large estate. He died July 24, 1891. Austin Powers grew to maturity on his father's farm, and obtained his elementary education in the public schools at Prairieville, Ill., later becoming a student in Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa. On January 6, 1881, he married Adella Tallman, daughter of Jesse H. Tallman and wife, early settlers of Clinton County, Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Powers four children have been born, viz.: Grace (died in infancy), Leroy, Luella, and Edna. Mr. Powers became owner of his father's estate at the time of the latter's death in 1891. This farm is kept in a high state of cultivation, shade and fruit trees are planted as occasion requires, barns and other buildings are arranged so as to shelter stock and grain to the best advantage, and the general appearances of his well-kept premises give evidence of the owner's constant and careful supervision. Mr. Powers has a constant and increasing demand for select seed-corn, as he makes a specialty of cultivating that cereal, and by scientific tests retains only the choicest grain for planting. In politics Mr. Powers is a Republican and was Assessor of his township two years, at the present time is Trustee of the School Board, and is also crop reporter in Lee County for the Illinois State Board of Agriculture. He and his family are members of the Fourth Street Methodist church, Sterling, Ill., and he is Superintendent of the Sunday School in the Prairieville Union church.

W. I. GUFFIN.

HON. W. I. GUFFIN, grain and coal dealer, Paw Paw, Ill., was born at Carlisle, Schoharie County, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1840. He came to Lee County in the fall of 1868, locating at Mshugin's Grove, where he conducted a dairy farm until 1872. Locating at Compton, Ill., in the latter year, he engaged in the grain and stock business at that village until 1889, when he removed to Paw Paw, where he has since conducted his present enterprise. In 1869 he married Laura W. Fisk, who died in 1870, leaving one son, Edward F. In December, 1879, Mr. Guffin married Mary E. Bradshaw of Compton, and they have two children—Homer and Grace. In political sentiment Mr. Guffin is a Republican and served eight consecutive years (1892-1900) in the Lower House of the Illinois General Assembly. Fraternally he is a member of Corinthian Lodge, No. 205, A. F. & A. M.

BENJAMIN F. FRANTZ, Paw Paw, Ill., son of Joseph and Charlotte (Pike) Frantz, was born at "The Cove," Alleghany County, Md., Oct. 29, 1848. In 1859 his family removed to Somerset County, Penn., and in 1866, to Princeton, Ill., where Mr. Frantz was engaged with his brother, A. J. Frantz, in agricultural pursuits for a number of years, when moving to Paw Paw in 1873, he later entered the "Teachers' Institute and Classical Seminary," where he finally graduated with his class-mates, Frank Stevens, Sadie Van Patten and Anna Flewellen, June 10, 1881. During his connection with the Seminary he taught several terms in district schools in De Kalb and Lee Counties, and in the spring of 1882 was chosen Principal of the Paw Paw public school. On August 23, 1882, he was united in marriage to Mary J. Taylor, daughter of Thomas G. and Lucy (Moysey) Taylor, and with his wife continued teaching together in the Paw Paw school for one year. Mr. Frantz then engaged with his father in the sale of buggies, harness and agricultural implements, which they carried on successfully until 1890, when his father having retired on account of advancing years, the son assumed the entire responsibility of the business, conducting it alone for two years. He then turned his attention to the real estate and general mercantile business, in which he has been engaged to the present time. In the spring of 1893, W. B. McMahon surveyed and platted for Mr. Frantz what is known as "The Frantz Grove Cemetery," located about a half-mile south of Paw Paw, and containing about nine acres of ground, which has been improved and beautified until it is now one of the most beautiful and attractive "cities of the dead" in this part of the country. The cemetery grounds include a handsome grove, where Decoration Day exercises in honor of the soldiers of the Civil War are held annually. During the same year (1893) Mr. McMahon also surveyed and platted for Mr. Frantz the "Frantz Addition to Paw Paw." Mr. Frantz is a member of the Board of Directors of the State Bank of Paw Paw, holds the office of Deacon of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally is a member of the Knights of the Globe and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His family consists of his wife and one daughter—Eula Mae.

BENJAMIN F. FRANTZ.

JAMES A. WATSON.

MAJOR JAMES A. WATSON (deceased) was born in 1812, and came to Dixon in 1850; contracted to build, and in 1852 built the Illinois Central Railway running through Dixon; raised a company of volunteers in 1862 for the Seventy-fifth Illinois, and after the battle of Perryville, was promoted to the rank of Major; served during the war, and mustered out at Camp Douglas in 1865; was Superintendent of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, for several years, subsequently, engaged in farming near Dixon, following this occupation up to the time of his death in 1893. He was first married in 1840, and in 1853 married Mrs. Richard Loveland for his second wife. There were three children of the second marriage; Frederick A., Sam N., and Eleanor E., two of whom are living. Mr. Watson was an enthusiastic member of the G. A. R. He was accidentally killed at the Dixon dam, May 8, 1893.

FREDERICK A. WATSON, President Watson-Plummer Shoe Company, Chicago and Dixon, was born Oct. 3, 1854. From 1866 to 1868 he clerked in the store of W. G. Stevens & Co., Dixon, and from 1868 to 1870, was train-boy on the C. & N. W. Ry. From 1872 to 1874 he clerked in a store in St. Joseph, Mich., and from the latter year to 1901, was salesman, stockholder and manufacturing superintendent for C. M. Henderson & Co., locating their factories at Dixon, Ill., in 1887. He organized the Watson-Plummer Shoe Company in 1901, and succeeded to the business of C. M. Henderson & Co., in 1902. In politics he is a Republican; is President of the Dixon Power & Lighting Co., and Dixon Ice Company.

S. F. MILLS, retired Banker of Ashton, Lee County, Ill., and New York State, was born in the town of Columbia, Herkimer County, N. Y., June 21, 1831, son of Lorin A. and Eva (Petrie) Mills, who were parents of a family of six children—three sons and three daughters. S. F. Mills graduated from a high school in his native State, later took a seminary course and in 1857 came to Ashton, Lee County, Ill., then a small hamlet, where he engaged in buying grain which he stored in a small warehouse capable of holding about three car-loads. He was a man of genial temper, hospitable and won many life-long friends, no deserving person ever appealing to him for aid in vain, and took a foremost place in charitable work and in public improvements in his village. In his successful business career he was closely identified with his friend and partner, N. A. Petrie. December 22, 1879, Mr. Mills was married at Ashton to Miss Louise Getman, daughter of

Daniel and Mary (Vrooman) Getman of Palermo, Oswego County, N. Y., but formerly of Herkimer County. In 1890, desiring to retire from active business, Mr. Mills erected an up-to-date home at Parish, Oswego County, N. Y., and there resides nine months each year, spending the remaining three months with his friends and partner, Mr. Petrie, at Ashton, Ill. In action and appearance he would be taken for a man in the prime of life. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and adopts as his motto, "Good will to all, malice to none." Mr. Mills' father was a Colonel of the New York State militia and paternally he is of Scotch extraction, and maternally of English descent.

NATHAN A. PETRIE, Cashier of the Ashton Bank, Ashton, Ill., was born in Oswego, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1843, the seventh son of Rudolph and Elizabeth (Vrooman) Petrie, natives of New York. His early ancestors were German. The maternal grandfather was captain of a fort in New York in early colonial days, and was killed and scalped by the Indians, as were also his wife and son John. N. A. Petrie was raised on a farm, received his educational training in a country school, and came to Ashton in the winter of 1860, where he worked one year for his cousin, S. F. Mills, for $50.00 and board, and was employed a second year at a salary of $75.00. In the meantime he studied and read good books in the evenings after a hard day's work, and in this manner completed his education. He now owns a valuable library. In 1862 Mr. Petrie entered into partnership with S. F. Mills in the grain and lumber business, which they sold in 1865 and erected a large two-story frame building in Ashton, and engaged in the general mercantile business under the firm name of Mills & Petrie, in which they established an extensive trade, employing seven clerks. Disposing of their mercantile business in 1869 they established a bank at Ashton, which was conducted as a private institution until Jan. 1, 1903, when it was reorganized into a State Bank with a capital of $25,000 and a surplus of $5,000, the officers being S. F. Mills, President; M. D. Hathaway, Vice President; N. A. Petrie, Cashier. Mr. Petrie is a Republican and has represented his town as Supervisor two terms; has been a Notary Public for twenty-four consecutive years; was school treasurer eighteen years, and has administered in the settlement of about sixty estates during his business career in Ashton. He pays a high tribute to the county officers, with whom he has been closely associated for more than thirty years, and is a man of kind and generous disposition always thinking more of his fellow citizens than of himself. On December 22, 1879, he married Sarah E. Howard, daughter of William and Mary (Hollingsworth) Howard, natives of Lincolnshire, England, who came to America in 1857. Mrs. Petrie died Feb. 11, 1899, leaving no children. Mr. Petrie is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The life-long friendship of Mr. Petrie and Mr. Mills has never been interrupted by a hasty or cross word, and in this respect their association has been a second example of Damon and Pythias.

C. K. NORTHROP.

C. K. NORTHROP, Postmaster, Ashton, Ill., was born at Tyringham, Berkshire County, Mass., March 30, 1845, son of Gilbert D. and Eliza B. (Phillips) Northrup. Gilbert D. Northrup died in 1852, but his wife still survives at the venerable age of ninety-five years. C. K. Northrup obtained his education in the public school of his native State and came to Lee County in 1860. In 1862 he enlisted in Company G., First Wisconsin Cavalry, remaining until the close of the war, and participated in the battle of Cape Girardeau, Bloomfield, Chalks Bluff, Langee Ferry, Stone River, and Chickamauga. On September 19, 1863, during the engagement last mentioned, he received a severe wound in the right forearm. After the close of the war he entered Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., remaining in that institution four years, and for several years after that was engaged in farming in Bradford Township, but eventually disposed of his holdings and engaged in the mercantile business at Ashton. Mr. Northrup was appointed Postmaster in 1897, reappointed in 1901, and is still an incumbent of that office. On November 25, 1869, he married Mary M. Wright, daughter of William Wright, an early settler of Lee County, and of this union there were two sons, one of whom—Gilbert W.—is living and is a student in the State University, Rolla, Missouri. Mr. Northrup is a member of the Masonic order, M. W. A. G. A. R. and Knights of the Globe. He and his wife are communicants of the Presbyterian church, and in politics he is a Republican.

JOHN L. CLAPP, merchant, Compton, Ill., was born in Brooklyn Township, Lee County, Ill., Feb. 5, 1873, son of John F. and Sarah (Smith) Clapp, natives of Massachusetts and New York, respectively. In partnership with J. W. Rhodes, Mr. Clapp is engaged in the general merchandise business at Compton, Ill. On October 21, 1897, he married Nellie Holdren, daughter of Benjamin F. and Sarah (Cowling) Holdren. In politics he is a Republican, and in fraternal affiliations a member of the Masonic Order, I. O. O. F. and M. W. A. Mr. Clapp is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and is superintendent of the Sunday school.

HON SAMUEL DYSART, ex-President State Board of Agriculture; born in Huntingdon County, Penn., Sept. 4, 1834, son of James and Elizabeth (Roller) Dysart, who came to Illinois in 1855, settling near Franklin Grove, Lee County, where they both died. In 1855 Mr. Dysart settled on Section 14, China Township, and has resided there ever since. On February 24, 1858, he was married to Miss Margaret J. Henderson, daughter of David and Margaret (Conrad) Henderson, natives of Huntingdon County, Penn., and of this union nine children have been born, viz.: Harry W., U. Grant, Horace H., Jesse R., Drucilla D. (Mrs. Dr. Banker of Franklin Grove), Birdie B. (Mrs. T. B. Peterson, of Chicago), Mary Janet, Virginia L. (deceased) and Lola W. (deceased). From 1866 to 1883 Mr. Dysart was one of the leading breeders of short-horn cattle in Illinois; in 1874 he was elected Vice President of the State Board of Agriculture for his District, was chosen President of the Board serving two years and, during the last year of his incumbency (1888), visited Europe for the purpose of investigating the breeding of French draft horses. During 1878, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as one of the Live-Stock Commissioners to the Paris Exposition and, on July 1, 1891, was appointed by Gov. J. W. Fifer, Commissioner of the World's Columbian Exposition for the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois.

HENRY CASPER BROOKNER (deceased), born near Osnabruck, Hanover, Germany, June 15, 1827, son of George and Marie (Engle) Brookner; came to America at nineteen years of age, arriving with four dollars in his pocket, and having learned the carpenter's trade with an uncle, by persevering industry and prudent management acquired a handsome competency. In 1847 he came to Dixon, Ill., which continued to be his home for the remainder of his life, although absent much of the time for twenty years on official duty in connection with the Illinois Central Railroad. He was a trained musician, was a member of the first band organized in Dixon, and sang in the choir of the First Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was a member. His first home was just north of the Nachusa House. Mr. Brookner was twice married, his first wife leaving one daughter, Adella May, who died of cholera at the age of sixteen years. April 4, 1875, he married at Litchfield, Ill., Emily Reid Keithley, born at Greenville, Ind., the daughter of Seth McCollum Keithley, who was a native of Elizabethtown, Ky., born Oct. 18, 1812, and died at Litchfield, Ill., March 18, 1887. Seth McCollum Keithley's father, John Keithley, was a native of Germany, born Jan. 1, 1788, died Sept. 28, 1830, and his mother, Phebe (McCollum) Keithley, a native of Scotland, born in 1787, died April 11, 1868; his grandfather, John Keithley, born Jan. 1, 1750, died July 28, 1835, and his grandmother, whose maiden name was Ballou, was a native of Holland. The last named John Keithley served in the commissary department of the patriot army during the Revolutionary War. Henry Casper Brookner and wife had three children: Mae Adella, Paul Henry and George Keithley. Mr. Brookner died Jan. 10, 1889. Mrs. Brookner's mother, nee Anna Theresa Miller, was born at Elizabethtown, Ky., Nov. 13, 1808, and died at Litchfield, Ill., Nov. 22, 1869. Her parents, David and Elizabeth (Wise) Miller, were natives respectively, of Germany and Holland, and the mixture of German and Scotch blood in Mrs. Brookner's veins has tended to the development of a woman of strong vitality and much mental energy. Besides other business, she oversees two milk farms, has been a member of the Phidian Art Club for thirteen years, and served as delegate of this club to the Biennial Congress of Federated Women's Clubs held at Los Angeles, Cal., in 1902. She is also a charter member of the Woman's Relief Corps, is serving her second year as President of the Dixon Woman's Club, and is Worthy Matron of the Order of the Eastern Star—an organization which encircles the globe. Mrs. Brookner holds a commission from Governor Yates as inspector of insane wards of Lee County, and is President of the committee. She lives in quiet retirement with her children in the home erected by her deceased husband nearly fifty years ago, at 511 Peoria Avenue, Dixon, Ill.

WILLIAM W. BETHEA (deceased) was born in Marion District, S. C., May 15, 1812. He removed to Lee County in 1835, locating in Palmyra Township. Upon the organization of Lee County in 1839, he was elected Justice of the Peace and served continuously until 1877; elected County Treasurer in 1845 and served two terms. In 1833 he married Irene Fender, who died in 1838, and in 1850 he was united in marriage with his second wife, Mrs. Emily (Green) Ferguson.

ORRIS BISSELL DODGE, President Grand Detour Plow Company, Dixon, Ill., was born at Twinsburg, Ohio, Dec. 8, 1838. He obtained his education in the Twinsburg Seminary and Shaw Academy, the latter institution being located at East Cleveland, Ohio. When sixteen years of age, he came with his father to Campaign County, Ill., and for four years assisted in opening up a new prairie farm; at the age of twenty he engaged in general merchandising at Rantoul, Ill., remaining until 1867, when he located in Dixon, Ill., where he conducted a dry goods store for several years, and was the first merchant to establish the one price cash system in that city. In 1872 he purchased an interest in the Grand Detour Plow Works—established at Grand Detour in 1837 and removed to Dixon in 1867. He held the office of Secretary and Treasurer of the company for twenty-five years, and is now serving as President. Mr. Dodge is a member of the Masonic Order in which he has been Master, High Priest and Commander. He is a member of St. Luke's Episcopal church, was for thirty-five years a member of the vestry and is now Senior Warden. He has been President of the Business Men's Association, and was for four years a member of the City Council. Mr. Dodge assisted in establishing the Dixon Public Library in 1895, and has been President of the Board of Directors since that time. In 1900 he erected and donated to the city the library building now in use.

GEORGE ALEXANDER LYMAN, Postmaster, Amboy, Illinois; born in Winchester, N. H., June 26th, 1838; educated in the public schools of his native town, and at Northfield Institute (now Moody School), Northfield, Mass. In 1856 he removed to Bradford Township, Lee County, Ill., with his father's family, who settled on the farm he now owns. In 1888 he bought the "Amboy Journal," of which he is now editor and proprietor; was appointed Postmaster of Amboy, March 1, 1898, and is now (January, 1904) serving his second term. He has been a member of the Congregational Church in Lee Center and Amboy since 1860; is an influential Republican, serving for many years as a mem-twenty-five English Barons who compelled King John to sign the Magna Charta in 1215; is also a member of the Society of Colonial Wars, of the sons of the American Revolution, the Knights of the Globe, and of the Masonic Fraternity.

The Lyman family trace their descent in an unbroken line from Albert the Great, first King of England, and through his line of ancestors back to Woden or Odin, King of North Europe in the third century, about the year 225 A. D. Richard Lyman, the first of the name in America, came from England in 1631, landed at Boston, became a settler of Charlestown, Mass., and was one of the founders of Hartford, Connecticut, and of the first Congregational church of that city, and his tombstone may still be seen in the churchyard there.

Mr. Lyman was the first man in Bradford Township to offer his services to the Government at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861, but failed to be mustered in on account of physical defect. He continued active in the support of the Union cause, however; and Feb. 13, 1865, was elected and commissioned recruiting officer for the township of Bradford, Lee County, and enlisted by his own personal efforts alone, twenty-nine recruits who went to the front to fill the quota of Bradford Township; and in recognition of his enlistment and subsequent services, his name is enrolled in the roster of enlisted men of Company D, Thirty fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and he receives favorable mention by the historian of the regiment in the recently published history.

Mr. Lyman married in 1866, Mary E. Jones, and they have two children: Dr. James Alexander Lyman, Professor of Chemistry in Portland Academy, Portland, Oregon; and George Richard Lyman, Assistant Professor of Botany in Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H. Both sons are married, and Dr. Lyman has two daughters, Mary Ethel, born July, 1899, and Ida Grace, born April, 1902.

ALBION P. CHASE (deceased), physician, son of Mayhew and Anne (Merrill) Chase, was born in Livermore, Oxford County, Me., (later incorporated with Androscoggin County), Feb. 18, 1817. His grandfather, Sarson Chase, with brothers, Captain Thomas Chase (who was with John Paul Jones in the famous naval engagement between the Bon Homme Richard ber of the Republican County Committee, and for four years as secretary of the Committee. Mr. Lyman has been actively identified, as an editor and otherwise, with the religious, educational and political progress of his county, and this has been recognized by his election to membership in "The American Institute of Civics," organized in 1885 to "inspire and perpetuate the spirit of intelligence, and unselfish and incorruptible patriotism;" is a member of the Order of Runnymede by virtue of direct descent from Saier de Quincy, one of the and the Serapis), and Captain Tristram Chase (who was lost at sea in 1800), shipmasters, came to Livermore from Tisbury, Martha's Vineyard, before Maine was separated from Massachusetts. Some sixty families came from Massachusetts to Livermore about that time, and the town had for its first settlers, faithful and stanch men with an honest purpose for every duty; men who made sacrifices for their children's education, and who living in peace, read the newspapers with interest, discussed questions of state and country, and were only intolerant of injustice, oppression, meanness and lying. An old resident writes: "I will remember a neighborhood quarrel. I look back with pleasure, not unmingled with pride, upon their honest, useful lives, and feel thankful for the lessons they imparted." The first physician was Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, grandfather of Vice-President Hannibal Hamlin; the first minister was Rev. Sylvania Boardman, father of George Dana Boardman, the missionary to Burmah, in the mountains of Tavoy. Both of these men came from Tisbury, Mass. Israel Washburn, father of the noted "Washburn Brothers"—Israel, Elihu and Cadwallader—who have served their country so acceptably, was the first merchant. Nearly all had large families. The district schools, with their "spelling schools," their "debating clubs" and library (kept in the kitchen cupboard and parlor alcove of "the doctor"), formed the "Alma Mater" of many a man who has served his State honorably both in Maine and Washington, the winter schools sometimes numbering eighty pupils of all ages, and taught by young men who afterwards were Senators from other States. It was in this school that Doctor Chase prepared for the academy from which he went to Loudon County, Va., where he taught school for several years before going to Bowdoin College for a course of instruction in medicine, from which place he went to Boston, remaining for some time in the hospital there. He was a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, contemporary with Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. He practiced successfully in South Abington (now Whitman), Mass., from 1845, coming to Amboy, Ill., in 1856. He was long surgeon for the Illinois Central Railroad; also surgeon for the United States Pension Department. He was conscientious and sympathetic, with remarkably quick perception and correct judgment and retentive memory. He had a fund of pleasant anecdotes which were "as good as medicine," when it was the right time to relate them. He lived sixty-two years, dying May 27, 1879, sincerely mourned. A letter from a high officer of the Illinois Central Railroad stated that, during all the years of his service for their company, which commenced years before his appointment as regular surgeon, "not a single complaint of him had ever come to them and no operation had ever caused them unnecessary expense."

Dr. Chase was twice married; first to Miss E. R. Yale, of Stoneham, Mass., who died in 1850, leaving two children—Mrs. J. E. Fisher, of Houston, Texas, and Amerton Y. Chase, of Columbus, Texas. In December, 1852, he married Miss D. C. Howland, of Abington, Mass. Their son, Henry H. Chase, M. D., is a resident of Rock Island, Ill. A daughter, Mary N., died in 1868. Mrs. Chase still resides in the old home.

ABRAHAM B. TITUS, retired farmer, Steward, Lee County, was born in Onondaga County, N. Y., Nov. 8, 1828, the son of Leonard and Maria (Becker) Titus, who were both natives of New York State. The father was a blacksmith by trade, but late in life turned his attention to farming. In 1835 the family moved to Gallia County, Ohio, and there Abraham B., who was the oldest son by his father's second marriage, grew up on the farm attending the district school during the winter months. The father died in 1847, but the mother survived until 1899, dying at the age of ninety-three years. In February, 1850, the subject of this sketch came to Illinois, spent three seasons in farm work in Morgan County, when he removed to Richland County, and was married near Olney in that county, to Elizabeth J. Chauncey, the daughter of Isaac and Cynthia (Morehouse) Chauncey. Mr. Titus carried on farming in Richland County for ten years, when, in 1863, he removed to Champaign County, settling near Rantoul. Mr. and Mrs. Titus became the parents of seven children—five sons and two daughters—viz.: A. Leonard, Helen M., Edgar L., Ira R., Charles C., Mattie S. and Jesse R. Mr. Titus had a farm of 160 acres in Champaign County, which he sold in 1895, and bought a farm of 320 acres in Whiteside County. He had already retired from active farm life, and in 1902 removed to the village of Steward, Lee County, where he now resides. He is still the owner of a farm of 160 acres in Whiteside County, besides holding an interest with his two sons, Edgar L. and Ira R., in 400 acres in Viola Township, Lee County. About 1859 Mr. Titus spent a short time gold-mining with success in Colorado. He is a director of the First National Bank of Steward, is a Republican in politics and has been a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity since 1858.

IRA R. TITUS, member of the firm of Titus Brothers, bankers and grain-dealers, Steward, Ill., was born in Richland County, Ill., Dec. 29, 1862, the son of Abraham B. and Elizabeth (Chauncey) Titus; when one year old was brought by his parents to Champaign County, Ill., where he grew up on a farm about ten miles north of Urbana. Remaining with his father until twenty-two years of age, in the meantime he received his education in the district schools and a business college at Champaign, then engaged in the mercantile business at Rantoul with his brother-in-law, F.

B. Hitchcock. This partnership lasted one year, when Mr. Titus' brother, F. B. Titus, having purchased the Hitchcock interest, the firm became "Titus Brothers." A year later A. L. Titus was succeeded by another brother, C. C.

Titus, the firm name remaining unchanged for four years, when they sold out and C. C. Titus engaged in farming. The subject of this sketch then engaged in the grain business at Dewey, Champaign County, in partnership with J. M. Coon, continuing one year, when the firm having sold out, he spent some time at Walnut, Bureau County, but without completing his arrangements to engage in the elevator business there as contemplated. Then, having formed a partnership with his brother, Edgar L. Titus, in November, 1894, they purchased the elevator and agricultural implement business of Merritt Meller, at Steward, Lee County, which they carried on under the firm name of "Titus Brothers," later acquiring ownership of the "Steward & Henning Elevator," purchased from the L. E. Birdsall Company, and for the next eighteen months carried on an extensive grain, coal and lumber business. In the fall of 1902 they sold out the Steward & Henning Elevator and their lumber business, but still retain the ownership of the elevator first purchased. On January 1, 1903, in connection with a number of the leading business men of Steward, the Titus Brothers organized the First National Bank of Steward, with a capital stock of $25,000, of which Ira R. Titus is at present (1903) the Cashier, and his brother, Edgar L., the President—the Titus Brothers being owners of the controlling interest. May 21, 1889, Mr. Titus was married at Rantoul, Ill., to Lulu Coon, and two children have been born of this marriage—Lyle, born in 1892, and Ray, born in 1899. The Titus Brothers are associated with G. H. T. Shaw and S. D. Frost in constructing the Northern Illinois Electric Railway, extending from Dixon to Amboy by way of Lee Center, Steward and DeKalb, of which Ira R. Titus is Secretary. Mr. Titus is a Republican in politics, a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he holds the position of treasurer and is teacher of the Young Men's Sunday School class.

EDGAR L. TITUS, President First National Bank, Steward, Lee County, Ill., was born in Richland County, Ill., Sept. 29, 1860, the son of Abraham B. and Elizabeth (Chauncey) Titus, who were natives, respectively, of the States of New York and Illinois. Edgar L. Titus received his education in the public schools of Illinois, and remained on his father's farm until he reached the age of thirty years, when he was employed in his brother's store at Rantoul, and in the grain business. In the spring of 1892 he came to Lee County and there engaged in farming for the next two years, but in 1894 entering into partnership with his brother, Ira R., under the firm name of "Titus Brothers," purchased an elevator, grain and agricultural implement business, later bought another grain elevator, and carried on a very extensive business in grain.

coal and lumber. The elevator last mentioned, with the coal and lumber business, they sold out in 1902, retaining the first elevator with the grain business attached to it. January 1, 1903, in conjunction with several leading business men, they organized the First National Bank of Steward, with a paid-up capital of $25,000, in which the Titus Brothers hold a controlling interest and of which Edgar L. Titus was made President. The Titus Brothers are associated with G. H. T. Shaw and S. D. Frost in the construction of the Northern Illinois Electric Railway, extending from Dixon to Amboy and through Lee Center to Steward and DeKalb, of which Edgar L.

Titus was the original promoter and is now Vice-President. Mr. Titus was married June 3, 1891, to Minnie G. Staubus, who was born in McLean County, Ill., the daughter of Alexander F. and Frances (Miller) Staubus. Mrs. Titus' parents came to McLean County in 1866, but in 1873 removed to Champaign County, where they now reside. Her father served as a soldier through the Civil War. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Titus, viz.: Lee Edgar, Paul Bardwell, Luella Audrey, Helen Neleta and Gordon Alexander. Mr. Titus is a member of the Methodist church, a Republican in politics and fraternally a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Mystic Workers; Mrs. Titus is also a member of the latter order.

WILLIAM W. SEAVEY (deceased) was born on his father's farm in Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., Oct. 18, 1840, son of Winthrop and Elizabeth (Curtis) Seavey, natives of New Hampshire who came to Lee County in 1839, locating in the western part of Palmyra Township. Winthrop Seavey and his wife were among the pioneer settlers of Lee County, and founded what later became a valuable estate. At the time of their death William W. Seavey became owner of the estate, and by judicious management greatly increased its area and value. In 1885 he erected a modern residence, which is surrounded with stately trees, and together with other well-constructed farm buildings, presents an attractive rural picture. Mr. Seavey was an extensive breeder of Short-horn and Aberdeen Angus cattle. On November 17, 1870, he married Augusta Moses, born in Palmyra Township, and to them one child—Albion M.—was born. Mr. Seavey died August 14, 1897, and his widow resides with her son on the old homestead in Section 30, Palmyra Township.

ALBION M. SEAVEY.

ALBION M. SEAVEY was born in Portsmouth, N. H., in 1871, son of William W. and Augusta (Moses) Seavey. He grew to maturity on his father's farm in Palmyra Township, Lee County, and obtained his educational training in the district schools and Steinman's Business College, Dixon, Ill. On April 6, 1897, he married Elizabeth Comeror, who was born in Pennsylvania, and they have two daughters—Lola and Bessie. Mr. Seavey's farm consists of 440 acres, which, with the exception of his home farm and fifty acres adjoining, is rented to good tenants.

ALBERT T. TOURTILLOTT, farmer and stock-raiser, Sublette Township, Lee County; born Sept. 27, 1858, in the house in which he now lives, the son of John and Mary J. (Dexter) Tourtillott, and grandson of John Dexter, the first settler in Amboy Township; on the paternal side is descended from a member of the "Boston Tea Party," of Revolutionary times. Both branches of the family were pioneers in Maine. John Tourtillott, the father, born in the State of Maine, June 26, 1827, died Oct. 6, 1888; Mary (Dexter) Tourtillott, born at Vaughan, York County, Upper Canada, Nov. 8, 1832, died Oct. 10, 1878. The paternal grandfather, ALBERT T. TOURTILLOTT.

Thomas Tourtillott, born at Orono, Me., April 22, 1789, came with his family to Sublette Township in 1839, the journey occupying seventy days. A. T. Tourtillott was educated in the common schools of his neighborhood and at Naperville, Ill.; spent two years (1869-1871) with his father's family in California, and during his business life has been a farmer. September 20, 1878, he enlisted in the Illinois National Guard, of which he had been a member ever since, having re-enlisted three times—1880, 1888 and 1895—and in which he has held the following offices: Corporal, Dec. 29, 1889; Sergeant, August 1, 1885; Elected Captain, Feb. 23, 1889, by subsequent re-elections serving in this capacity until May 11, 1898, when he was mustered into the United States service at Springfield as a member of the Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Col. D. Jack Foster commanding, after which he saw service in Cuba and in Porto Rico, part of the time in the capacity of Major of his regiment, to which he was formally elected as a member of the I. N. G., August 5, 1899; also served as Captain of his company during the coal-miners' strike at Braidwood and the railway strike in Chicago in 1894. Major Tourtillott is the owner of a farm of 185 acres, and also follows the business of feeding stock of which he has 100 head. August 25, 1881, he was married to Hattie Welch, daughter of Enoch and Eliza (Richardson) Welch. The father, born at Groton, Vt., July 2, 1825, and the mother at Dalton, N. H., Sept. 8, 1834, were married at LaMoille, Ill., June 1856; the father died at Sioux City, Iowa, April 5, 1893, and the mother at LaMcille, June 14, 1866. Major Tourtillott and wife have had five children: Arthur J. and Alfred J. (twins), Mary E., Minnie E. and Frank H. Major Tourtillott has served as School Director, eight years as Constable, and in April, 1903, was elected Supervisor of his township. He and his family are members of the Congregational church.

AMBROSE N. ANGIER, farmer, Sublette Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in the house where he now resides, Jan. 3, 1843, son of Thomas and Fannie (Morse) Angier, and is, in all probability, the oldest person born in Lee County, who has always resided within its borders. Thomas Angier was born at Fitzwilliam, N. H., August 11, 1822, and died June 5, 1893, while his wife was born at the same place, April 15, 1821, and died Dec. 28, 1900. They were the parents of ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity. Mr. Angier came to Lee County in 1840 and entered 100 acres of land. He became a prominent citizen in his community, and was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors seventeen years, and Justice of the Peace for many years. Ambrose N. Angier was married on Oct. 30, 1869, to Annie M. Barrett, and they are the parents of four children, viz.: Laura, wife of Dr. Wallace E. Eddy of LaMoille, Ill.; Martha, wife of Martin Clark; Thomas R., who married Lizzie Clark, and Oliver R., who died aged fourteen years. Mrs. Angier's parents, Jonathan T. and Caroline E.

AMBROSE N. ANGIER.

(Isham) Barrett, came to Lee County in 1849, the former dying at Amboy in 1868, aged sixty-one years, and the latter in Lamoni, Iowa, in her seventy-eighth year. Mr. Angier owns 230 acres of land, which includes his father's homestead, and here he has passed the whole of his life. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church.

EVERETT E. CHASE (deceased), soldier of the Civil War, was born in Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 27, 1840; came to Amboy, Ill., in 1856, and at first was employed as a clerk and Deputy Postmaster, later becoming a partner of R. H. Mellen in the book and stationery business. In 1864 he enlisted in Company A, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until November, 1865, when he was mustered out at New Orleans. Mr. Chase was a Republican and held various offices, including City Clerk twelve years; Collector of Taxes, two terms; Mayor of Amboy, two years, and Justice of the Peace for many years. For a number of years he was private clerk to John C.

Jacobs (Supt. of the Illinois Central Railroad), a position he resigned in 1875. He was editor of the "Amboy News" for some time, but disposed of the business in 1900. In 1867 Mr. Chase was married to Mary Jacobs, daughter of John C. Jacobs. She died in 1868, and on June 15, 1875, he was married to Grace (Cowdrey) Wells, widow of Capt. M. W. Wells. Mr. Chase died Oct. 28, 1901.

WILLIAM MEPPEN, farmer, Nelson Township, Lee County, was born in Hanover, Germany, August 16, 1836, son of Peter and Martha (Becker) Meppen; emigrated to America in 1863, and coming directly to Lee County, Ill., worked for a time in Palmyra Township, after which he removed to Nelson Township, where he has since resided. January 21, 1875, he was married to Wilhelmina Brauer, daughter of Louis and Louise (Toel) Brauer, who came from Germany to the United States in the early '40s. Mr. and Mrs. Meppen are the parents of seven children, viz.: Mabel (deceased), Martha L., Lucy H., Louis G., William H., Arthur J., and Minnie Alice. Mr. Meppen served as Highway Commissioner of his township nine years. The family are members of the Lutheran church.

WILLIAM MEPPEN.

HON. WILLIAM H. VAN EPPS (deceased) was born in Schenectady, N. Y., August 12, 1812, son of John A. and Deborah (Hausman) Van Epps, the former having been a soldier in the War of 1812. William H. Van Epps came to Illinois in 1837, locating in Fulton County, but later returned to New York. In 1854 he located in Dixon, Ill., where for twenty years he was a prominent merchant and did much in the upbuilding of business interests of that city and in the development of Lee County. Mr. Van Epps was first married to Charlotte R. Churchill, and one son—William H.—of this union survives. For his second wife he married Mary A. Peck, Mrs. Louisa P. Steel being the only surviving child of that union. Mr. Van Epps died Oct. 8, 1877.

LEMUEL BAURNE, Vice President of the First National Bank of Amboy, Ill., was born in Sandwich (now Bowen), Mass., Jan. 21, 1830, and came to Lee County in 1855, where for eight years he served as agent for the Illinois Central Railway at Amboy. In 1862 he established a general mercantile business at Amboy, which he conducted until 1902 when he retired. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Amboy, and has served as Vice President since the date of its organization. In 1859 he married Anna M. Smith and they have six children. In politics he is a Republican, and served as a member of the Board of Review two years, and was President of the Board of Education for several years. In religious belief Mr. Baurne is an Episcopalian.

HON. GEORGE STEEL (deceased), ex-Mayor of Dixon, Ill., was born in Will County, Ill., May 10, 1842, the son of George and Annie Steen (Morrison) Steel. George Steel was a native of Scotland and one of the prominent pioneers of Chicago, where he was largely instrumental in organizing the Board of Trade of that city, serving as its first President. George Steel, Jr., was also a well-known character in Chicago, building the first crib for the water-works and the second lake tunnel. On July 11, 1871, he married Louise P. Van Epps of Dixon, and to them four children were born, viz.: William, Louise L. (deceased), Georgia (wife of Theo. Fuller, editor of Dixon Sun), and Gladys. From 1871 Mr. Steel was prominently connected with the interests of Dixon, where he served as a member of the City Council and School Board, and as Mayor during 1891-92. In political sentiment he was a Democrat. He died March 31, 1896.

Geo. H. T. Shaw.

G. H. T. SHAW, dealer in real estate and investments, Dixon, Ill., was born in Lee Center Township, Lee County, Ill., June 14, 1869, son of James Monroe and Rebecca (Linn) Shaw. Sherman Shaw, grandfather of G. H. T., was born in Windsor County, Vt., and, in 1833, came with the early pioneers to Lee County, where, in the same year he entered land in Bradford Township, upon which he made a permanent settlement in 1835, and became an influential citizen as well as an extensive dealer in live stock and land. Monroe Shaw was born in Bradford Township, Lee County, in 1840, and in early manhood engaged in the mercantile business at Lee Center. In May, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving three and a half years. He died Dec. 24, 1876, his death being caused by drinking poisonous water during his term of military service. G. H. T. Shaw received his educational training in the public school at Lee Center, Ill., Cornell College (Mt. Vernon, Iowa), and the State University at Ann Arbor, Michigan, pursuing the course of civil engineering in each of the higher institutions. In 1892 he began practicing his profession for different railroad companies, and in 1893 assisted in the survey for a railroad in the Republic of Colombia, S. A. In the fall of 1893 he opened what was intended to be a permanent office in Dixon, Ill., for the practice of his profession, but finding a few years later that his real estate interests demanded the whole of his time, he discontinued the former department of business and has since devoted his attention exclusively to the latter, being at the present time extensively interested in lands and rice culture in Texas and Louisiana. In 1899 he married Sarah S. Clark, daughter of O. M. and Mary (Wright) Clark, who came to Lee County in the early '50s, and to them two children have been born—Mary Gwendolin and Clark Monroe. Mr. Shaw is a member of the Sons of Veterans, and is President of the Northern Illinois Electric Railway Company. In national politics he is a Republican.

E. S. Murphy, M. D.

E. S. MURPHY, physician and surgeon, Dixon, Ill., was born in East Grove Township, Lee County, Ill., Jan. 25, 1871, son of John and Bridget A. (Fogarty) Murphy, natives respectively of Ireland and La Salle County, Ill. E. S. Murphy obtained his elementary education in the public schools of East Grove Township, later attended the Northern Illinois Normal School and Business College at Dixon, and in 1894 entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, graduating from the latter institution in 1897. He at once began practicing his profession at Eldena, Ill., where, in youth, he had taught school for two years, and in January, 1899, removed to Dixon where he has since conducted an extensive and successful practice. On June 2, 1900, he married Katherine Lally, who, before marriage, resided with her mother in Dixon. The Doctor is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and in religious convictions is a Catholic. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party.

remained under the parental roof until twenty-eight years of age, when he established a home of his own in China Township, where he resided thirty-six years, dying there on June 21, 1888. In February, 1852, he married Mary A. Miller, who died March 15, 1867, leaving the following children: Ida E. (Mrs. William H. Hausen), Frankie E. (who died aged three years), Flora M., Nellie I. and Ruby A. Mr. Nichols later married Nancy Wilson, who died in China Township, July 14, 1881.

WILLIAM H. HAUSEN.

WILLIAM H. HAUSEN (deceased) was born in Lincoln County, Me., August 25, 1816, son of Charles and Jane (Hilton) Hausen. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hausen were also natives of the Pine Tree State and came to Lee County in 1840, where the former died in 1859 and the latter in 1878. William H. Hausen was the oldest in a family of eleven children, and, accompanied by his brother, Harrison Hausen, came west in 1838, arriving in Lee County in October of the same year. Here they purchased a claim of 960 acres of land, and the first improvements made in that section of the country were upon the Hausen homestead in Section 2, China Township. In October, 1850, Mr. Hausen married Mrs. Julia Felker, who died Feb. 2, 1895, and on March 15, 1900, he married his second wife, Miss Ida E. Nichols, daughter of Andrew J. and Mary A. (Miller) Nichols, and granddaughter of John Nichols, who came to Lee County in 1832. Politically Mr. Hausen was a Democrat, and fraternally a member of Blue Lodge and Nathan Whitney Chapter No. 129, Masonic Order, at Franklin Grove. He was one of the first to introduce short-horn cattle in his section of the country, and was a leading member of horticultural and agricultural societies of the county. He died Dec. 6, 1901.

CHARLES F. HAUSEN, farmer, China Township, Lee County, was born in Lee County, Ill., March 10, 1863, the son of Sylvanus and Sabrina J. Hausen. (See sketch of Sylvanus Hausen.) Charles F. began life as a farmer in China Township, and has had a successful business career, being now the owner of 210 acres of land. April 23, 1885, he was married to Josephine Stevens, daughter of Parker and Mary (Tweed) Stevens, natives respectively of Vermont and Massachusetts, who came to Illinois in 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Hausen have one daughter, Bessie. Politically, Mr. Hausen is a Democrat and fraternally a member of the Knights of the Globe. In his religious views he is liberal.

DEACON ISRAEL F. HALLOCK, retired farmer, Paw Paw, Ill., was born in Orange County, N. Y., June 16, 1818, the son of Joseph and Ester (Young) Hallock, and is of the eighth generation from Peter Hallock, a pilgrim from England, who landed at Hallock's Neck, Long Island, in 1640. In December, 1840,

ISRAEL F. HALLOCK.

Israel F. came to Lee County, Ill., settling at Paw Paw Grove, where he was engaged in farming until 1892, when he retired and moved to Paw Paw in 1899. On December 19, 1839, he married Persis P. Boardman, daughter of Deacon Orlando and Mary (Brace) Boardman, and of this union two children were born: Jane E. (Mrs. S. A. Tarr), and William H. (deceased). Mrs. Hallock died May 5, 1892, aged seventy-three years. She is one of the thirteen who, in 1841, organized the Paw Paw Baptist church. Mr. Hallock was the second member received by baptism into the church, uniting with it in 1842. He was appointed deacon in 1850, and has served continuously in that capacity to the present time. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

WILLIAM C. FABER, meat dealer, Paw Paw, Ill., was born in Clarion Township, Bureau County, Ill., Feb. 21, 1867, son of Peter and Margaret (Mueller) Faber, natives of Germany, who came to Illinois and located at Clarion. Mr. Faber was engaged in farming in Clarion Township until 1889, and in 1890 crossed the ocean, visiting Germany and other European countries, his trip being principally for pleasure and obtaining ideas of the customs of different countries in regard to business methods and agriculture. He located at Paw Paw in 1891, and entered the firm of Faber Brothers, dealers in meats, and has since been identified with that enterprise. In 1899 he bought land at Paw Paw, Ill., and at Algona, Iowa, and in connection with the meat business is engaged in farming and breeding Aberdeen-Angus cattle, and expects to devote his entire attention to the latter industry in the future. On February 24, 1896, he married Eva A. Smith, daughter of Edmund D. and Helen (Huntley) Smith, of Paw Paw, and of this union there are four children: Helen M., Leonard M. C., Henry C. and Edmund E. Mr. Faber is a member of the Lutheran church, and politically affiliates with the Democratic party.

JAMES C. HOWLETT, farmer, Section 36, Willow Creek Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Onondaga County, N. Y., March 22, 1837, the son of H. G. and Amanda M. (Canfield) Howlett, natives of New York. H. G. Howlett was a farmer by occupation, an old line Whig in politics, and in 1837, came to Dixon, Ill., where he secured a claim to 120 acres of land in what is now Section 36, Willow Creek Township. He was a pioneer in Dixon, and conducted there the "Hotel Western," being one of the first hotel keepers in the place. The first Democratic County Convention was held in the bar-room of his hotel at Dixon, Mr. Howlett himself taking an active part in the politics of his day. James C. Howlett obtained his education in the seminary at Lee Center, and at Paw Paw, Ill., and afterwards taught school one year in Missouri and sixteen years in Illinois. He served three years in Company K, Seventy-fifth Illinois during the Civil War, and participated in many engagements, including Perryville, Nashville, and Franklin. Mr. Howlett was never wounded in battle, although in several instances his clothing was pene-his wife survived until Jan. 19, 1885. On the death of his father, Nathan A. Cortright assumed control of the farm, and now owns 145 acres. On December 9, 1873, he married Catherine A. Burket, daughter of John N. and Molly (Fleck) Burket, and to them six children have been born, viz.: John Wilber, Charles Nathan,

MICHAEL SULLIVAN.

MICHAEL SULLIVAN, farmer and Supervisor of Reynolds Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Flagg Township, Ogle County, Ill., Feb. 15, 1871, son of Jeremiah and Bridget (Sullivan) Sullivan, natives of Ireland, the former born in County Cork in 1826, and the latter in County Kerry in 1836. Jeremiah and Bridget Sullivan came to America with their respective parents about 1849, landing in New York, but proceeded to Massachusetts, where the heads of the families found employment in railroad construction. The maternal grandparents of Michael Sullivan died at Rochelle, Ill., but those on the paternal side died in Massachusetts. Jeremiah Sullivan came to Ogle County, Ill., in 1853, and found employment on the North-Western Railroad then in course of construction. In 1863, he bought 170 acres of land in Flagg Township, where he was engaged in farming until 1880, but in the fall of the latter year purchased a half section of land located in Sections 10, 9, 15, and 16, Reynolds Township, Lee County. A few years previously he had married Bridget Sullivan, and they became the parents of twelve children: Philip, Cornelius (died at the age of thirty-eight years), Mary, Daniel, Michael, John, Eugene, Jeremiah, Nora, Nellie and two who died in infancy. Mr. Sullivan was a practical farmer and improved his farm by erecting a comfortable house and barn, planting trees, and bringing the land into high state of cultivation. He died Sept. 9, 1899, but his wife still survives and resides at Rochelle, Ill. Michael Sullivan was raised on his father's farm and obtained his education in the public schools. On Nov. 19, 1901, he married Maggie Spaulding, daughter of Patrick and Elizabeth (Leonard) Spaulding, natives of Ireland who came to Illinois in 1851, and located at Rochelle, where they still reside. When Jeremiah Sullivan died, his farm, consisting of 360 acres, was left to his widow, but it is now rented and conducted by Michael Sullivan and his brother Jeremiah. Michael Sullivan is a Democrat in politics, and was elected Collector of his township in 1896 and '97, and has served an Supervisor since 1899.

JOHN C. McCLEARY, farmer and present Supervisor, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Lawrence County, Penn., Jan. 9, 1841, son of William and Selinda (Morehead) McCleary, who were the parents of eight children. William McCleary brought his family to Lee County in 1865, locating in Nelson Township, where he died in 1879, and his wife now resides with their son J. C. J. C. McCleary obtained his education in the district schools of his native State, and during the late Rebellion served nine months in Company I, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. His oldest brother, James, also served in the Union ranks, and was killed in the battle of Gettysburg. On Jan. 21, 1869, Mr. McCleary was married to Mary E. Gruver, daughter of Uriah and Katherine (Reitz) Gruver who came from Pennsylvania and settled in Lee County in 1848. To Mr. and Mrs. McCleary six children have been born—Laura (Mrs. Merrit Scholl), Alice, Emma, Edward, Ethel and William Jason, born March 8, 1883, and died Nov. 2, 1889. In 1876 Mr. McCleary purchased his present farm of 143 acres, upon which he has built a comfortable residence and spacious barns, besides planting a great many shade and fruit trees. He is independent in political views, and in 1903 was elected Super-

Mr. Lindeman was a successful manager and, at the time of his death, owned 280 acres of land in Lee County. In political views he was a Republican, and in religious convictions a Lutheran. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Lindeman had lived retired in Dixon, Ill., where he died in 1901.

HENRY J. SCOTT.

HENRY J. SCOTT (deceased), who for many years was a contractor and builder, Dixon, Ill., was born in Vermont in 1820. He learned his trade in his native State, where he also obtained his education, later engaged in teaching and became Captain of the local militia at Linden, Vt. January 5, 1852, he married Annie R. Robbins, and to them two children were born: Herbert and Ida (Mrs. William Morgan). Mr. and Mrs. Scott came to Lee County in 1852. Mr. Scott was a partner of Lyman Adams for about thirty years under the firm name of Scott & Adams, contractors and builders, and during this period built many fine residences and business blocks in Dixon and the surrounding country. In political views he was a staunch Republican and served as City Alderman. Mr. Scott was a successful business manager and owned considerable property in Dixon. He died April 3, 1896. Mrs. Scott was born in Peru, Bennington County, Vt., July 31, 1830, daughter of David and Eliza (Davis) Robins of Dublin, N. H. Mrs. Scott's father, David Robins, was a farmer in the Green Mountain State and served in the War of 1812, as also did her maternal grandfather Davis, while her paternal grandfather Robins was a patriot soldier of the Revolution, and two of her brothers served in the Union ranks during the late Rebellion. Mr. and Mrs. Scott gave their children good educational advantages. Their son Herbert is a graduate of the Dixon high school and at present is in the employ of the Grand Detour Plow Company while their daughter is a graduate in the department of music of Dixon College. Mrs. Scott still survives and occupies a pleasant residence erected by her late husband in North Dixon, where she has resided for fifty-one years.

JOHN DYSART.

CAPT. JOHN DYSART (deceased) was born in Huntingdon County, Penn., Oct. 4, 1834, son of Joseph and Mary A. (Davidson) Dysart. He received his educational training in the public schools of his native State, and came to Illinois in 1857, locating near Nachusa, where he engaged in the grain and lumber business. On Aug. 25, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Bowen's Cavalry Battalion of Volunteers—later a part of the Army of the Mississippi—in which he served three years, in the meantime being promoted to the rank of Captain. On March 9, 1865, he married Miss E. L. Crawford of Pennsylvania, and to them two children—Grace and Blanche—were born. In political sentiment the Captain was a Republican, and fraternally belonged to the Masonic order, Sir Knight and G. A. R. In religious belief he was a Presbyterian. He died Dec. 30, 1899. Mrs. Dysart and her daughters have a pleasant home on Depot Avenue, Dixon, Ill., where they now reside.

WILLIAM C. DYSART.

WILLIAM C. DYSART (deceased), for many years a prominent merchant and grain and lumber dealer of Lee County, was born in Huntingdon County, Penn., July 9, 1837, son of Joseph and Mary A. (Davidson) Dysart, and a brother of Captain John Dysart. His early life was spent on a farm and in the meantime he obtained a liberal education in the Mountain Seminary, Birmingham, Penn. In the spring of 1866 he came to Lee County, and in partnership with his brother, Captain John Dysart, erected the first grain elevator at Nachusa, which they operated for one year. Returning to his native State in 1867, he established himself in the grocery business at Altoona, which he conducted until 1879, when he returned to Nachusa, where he became a general merchant and lumber dealer, and retired from active business in 1887. On Jan. 23, 1872, he married Sophia Barlow, daughter of Augustus Barlow, and to them two children were born—Anna May (Mrs. Guy Furley of Iowa) and Lela. Mr. Dysart was appointed Postmaster of Nachusa in 1869, holding office until 1887, when he retired and removed to Dixon. He died July 28, 1902, and was buried with honor by the Knights Templar. Mrs. Dysart survives her husband and with her youngest daughter, resides on Depot Avenue, Dixon.

HENRY E. MILLER, retired farmer, Palmyra Township, Lee County, was born on his father's farm in Palmyra Township, Dec. 22, 1844, the son of William and Anna (Obrist) Miller, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Switzerland. His parents came to America in 1833, and to Lee County, Ill., in 1842, first bought a farm in Palmyra Township near Prairieville, but later one on Section 9, in the same township on which the subject of this sketch is now living. There were nine children of the family, of whom five are now living viz.: Henry E., B. F. and three maiden ladies—Anna, Louise and Sarah—who live together on the old homestead near their brother Henry E. The father died in May, 1871, and the mother in 1873. William Miller, the father, was a Democrat, served as School Director and organized the first school in his neighborhood, now district No. 5. Henry E. spent his youth on his father's farm, and owing to the absence of school facilities, at an early day, acquired most of his education between his twentieth and twenty-third year. December 23, 1869, he married Margaret Leivan, daughter of Mathias and Margaret (Miller) Leivan, who were early settlers of Lee County. Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Miller have had eight children, of whom five are now living, viz.: Charles M., who married Ellen Lawrence; Edward H., married Mary Plummer; John F., married

Bessie Plummer; Oscar L. and Frederick P. Mr. Miller is a member of the Lutheran church, politically a Republican and served many years as School Director of his district. He retired from active life as a farmer in 1902, but still occupies a pleasant residence on the home porated and named in honor of him, "The Pitcher Telephone Co." was born in Lewis County, N. Y., July 28, 1839, son of Philander and Mary (Ager) Pitcher. He obtained his elementary education in the common schools, and when a youth worked on a farm. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I, Fifth New York Heavy Artillery, later came to Jo Daviess County, Ill., and engaged in the mercantile business at a place named Pitcherville in his honor, afterwards appointed Postmaster during Lincoln's administration. He came to Lee County in 1871, being then patentee of the "barley fork," a tool much in use for handling grain without binding, but later superseded by the self-binder. Mr. Pitcher sold this implement to jobbers over a territory extending from the New England coast to California, and realized a fortune from the same. Later he engaged in the implement and coal trade at Dixon, which he conducted successfully until 1900. In 1896 he inaugurated the County Telephone Company, a system covering Lee County and connecting it with other counties and adjoining States. This enterprise has proved to be a great success and is much appreciated by residents of the village and rural districts in that territory. Mr. Pitcher owns a large amount of stock in the Pitcher Telephone Company of Jo Daviess County, of which, his son Grant W. Pitcher is manager with offices at Galena. In 1860 he married Harriet Graves, by whom there were three children, viz.: R. Everett, Mayor of Alma, Neb.; Mary, wife of William Peters, Stockton, Ill., and Grant W.

Mr. Pitcher was married to his second wife Abbie Cramer, in 1871, and of this union there are two children, Bessie E and Louis A., Supt. and Sec'y of the Lee County Telephone Company. Mr. Pitcher has served in the City Council several terms; was a member of the Board of Education fifteen years, and is a member of the G. A. R., and A. O. U. W. In political views he is a Republican.

In 1883 he came to Paw Paw, where, for four years, he was engaged in school teaching, afterwards entered the newspaper field, and in 1891 purchased the "Lee County Times," which he has since conducted. November 27, 1889, he married Jennie Pulver, daughter of James Pulver of Paw Paw, and they have two children—Harold A. and Stanley. In political views Mr. Briggs is a Republican, and socially belongs to the Masonic Order, Corinthian Lodge No. 205, and Mendota Chapter.

GEORGE W. I. BROWN, physician and surgeon, Dixon, Ill., born in Greensboro, Penn., Oct. 26, 1846, son of John Cox and Elizabeth (Hepton) Brown, grandson of George Moss and Letitia (MacFarland) Brown, and great-grandson of Richard Brown, who was a son of Sir Richard Brown of England. Richard Brown, born in England in 1760, came to Philadelphia in 1781, married Frances Moss and became an extensive land-owner in Greene County, Penn., and Monongalia County, Va., (now West Virginia), which he entailed to his descendants. Latetia (MacFarland) Brown, daughter of John and Susanna (Cox) MacFarland, natives of Wales, married George Moss Brown in Philadelphia, and they resided there all their lives. Dr. George W. I. Brown's mother, nee Elizabeth Hopton, was the daughter of Jesse and Sarah (Finch) Hopton, who were Quakers, of English descent, and settled in Western Pennsylvania in 1810. When Dr. Brown was three years old, his father, who had been a glass manufacturer at Greensboro, removed to Monongalia County, Va., and turned his attention to farming, but later returned to Greene County, Penn., where he had come into possession of a part of the Brown estate. Here the son grew up on the farm, attending the district schools during the winter, took a two years' course in Greene Academy at Carmichaels, and at eighteen years of age began the study of medicine with Dr. George F. Burch, of Greensboro, while teaching during the winter months; later continued his studies with Dr. George W. John, of Stewartstown, W. Va., and in 1867 entered Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery, where he graduated in 1869. He then succeeded to the practice of his preceptor, Dr. John, at Stewartstown, W. Va.; in 1870 removed to Meyersdale, Penn., where he remained seven years, meanwhile filling the position of Assistant Surgeon of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, Physician and Surgeon of the Keystone Coal & Manufacturing Company, and a similar position with the Savage Fire Brick Company. Having sold his practice to Dr. J. Ernest Meiers, of Washington, D. C., in 1877, he came to Illinois, entered Hahnemann Medical College at Chicago, and graduated in 1878. Then having entered into partnership with Dr. J. A. Hoffman, of Mendota, he practiced for a time at LaMoille, but in the fall of the same year removed to Dixon, where he succeeded to the practice of Dr. Steele, of the firm of Steele & Blackman, the firm taking the name of Blackman & Brown. This partnership was dissolved in 1880, and Dr. Brown has since practiced alone. In 1900 he took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Polyclinic Institute in Surgery, Gynecology and Dermatology, is now a member of the staff of Physicians and Surgeons of the Dixon Public Hospital; Surgeon of the Sterling, Dixon &

Electric Railway and of the Lee County Lighting & Fuel Company. The medical organizations with which he is affiliated include the Lee County Medical Society; Rock River Institute, of which he has been President; the Illinois State Medical Society; Illinois Homeopathic Medical Association; American Institute of Homeopathy, and the American Medical Association.

From boyhood Dr. Brown has been identified with the Methodist church, and for thirty-three years a member of the Official Board, being the sixth member to join the church at Meyersdale, Penn., in 1870, which, in six years, grew to a membership of 250. He has also been prominently identified with educational matters, serving for six years as member of the Board of Education at Meyersdale, Penn., and for fifteen years at Dixon, three years of this time serving as President; has also served two years as director of the Dixon Building and Loan Association. Since he was twenty-one years of age he has been an enthusiastic member of the Masonic Fraternity, having taken all the higher degrees of the order, and has filled numerous official positions, including Commander of Dixon Commandery, No. 21, K. T.; member of Freeport Consistory, S. P. R. S.; Grand Lodge of the State; Grand Royal Arch Chapter, and Grand Commandery K. T. of the State of Illinois. Politically he is a Republican, casting his first vote for Gen. Grant for President in 1868, and has often served his party in State and minor conventions. In 1872 the Doctor was united in marriage to Magdalene Miller, daughter of Josiah and Matilda (Beachy) Miller, of Meyersdale, Penn., and they have three children: Charles LeRoy, born in 1874, now an attorney-at-law in Chicago; Edna Florence, born in 1877, at home; and George Harold, born in 1887, who is completing his senior year in the Dixon High School.

REV. DANIEL S. CLARK (deceased), born in Ellington, Conn., Jan. 24, 1822, son of David and Sarah (Bartlett) Clark; in early life moved to West Woodstock, Conn., and there learned the carpenter's trade; then in 1853, coming to Amboy, Lee County, Ill., was employed for some years by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as superintendent of many of its buildings. In 1859 Mr. Clark became an exhorter in the Second Adventist Christian church, and the following year was formally ordained as a preacher in that denomination, continuing this work until his death, March 20, 1900. In 1844 Mr. Clark was married to Nancy M. BENJAMIN F. JOHNSON, farmer, Viola Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Kane County, Ill., March 4, 1846, son of Smith H. and Ziba K. (Thompson) Johnson. Benjamin F. Johnson remained at home until 1863, when he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served until the close of the war. He then returned to Lee County and bought 160 acres of land, but in 1869 went to Helena, Mont., where he engaged in placer-mining until 1876. Returning to Lee County in the latter year, he there resumed farming operations until 1887, when he took charge of a creamery at Compton, Ill., and conducted the enterprise for six years. In 1893 he again returned to the farm, locating on his present homestead of 260 acres in Viola Township. On February 24, 1877, Mr. Johnson was married to Arvilla, daughter of Joel and Nancy (Compton) Compton, of Compton, Ill. To them eight children have been born, viz.:

Lewis E., Andrew F., Levi, Linn, Joel L., Pearl V., Luella M., and Charlotte I. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a Mason, in politics a Republican, and has served as Commissioner of Highways twelve years, and Township Trustee ten years.

OLIVER P. JOHNSTON (deceased) was born in Erie County, N. Y., in 1812. In 1838 he came to Lee County, Ill., and settled in Brooklyn Township. For twenty years he kept a hotel to Melugin's Grove, where, in early days, he had many unpleasant experiences in connection with the business, but later engaged in farming with successful results, and became the owner of a large tract of land. In 1834 he married Elizabeth Ross, a native of Virginia, and they were the parents of six children.

WALLACE A. JUDD, retired farmer, Dixon, Ill., was born in Berkshire County, Mass., Sept. 30, 1821, son of Arden and Sarah (Hubbard) Judd, who were also natives of the Bay State. Mr. Judd came to Illinois in the spring of 1852, locating in Dixon, and he has the distinction of bringing the first car load of coal to that city. On October 11, 1847, he married Jerusha Merriman, born in Connecticut, and to this union six children were born, three of whom—Ellen L., Asa G. and Homer A.—are now living. Mr. Judd's farm adjoining the city of Dixon comprises 350 acres.

ROYAL JONES, embalmer and undertaker, Dixon, Ill., was born in Meigs County, Ohio, Dec. 30, 1869, son of Edward and Emily (Woodard) Jones. Royal Jones was raised on his father's farm in Ohio, attended the public schools and, prior to coming to Dixon, held an official position in the Hospital for the Insane at Elgin, Ill. Coming to Dixon in 1894, he engaged in the grocery business for two years, and then took a thorough course of training in the Chicago School of Embalming. Returning to Dixon, he opened his present extensive establishment, which is the only one in the city devoted exclusively to that particular line of business. On June 27, 1895, he married Celia A. O'Malley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Austin O'Malley, early settlers of Lee County. Of this marriage five children have been born: Lucille, Edward, Gerald, Willard and Herbert. Fraternally Mr. Jones is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and Knights of Columbus. Politically he is a Republican.

MRS. HARRIET E. KNIGHT, Dixon, Ill., was born in Bloomingdale, Du Page County, Ill., daughter of Royal D. and Lydia E. (Bennett) Meacham, natives of New York State who became early settlers of Illinois. June 4, 1885, she was married to Charles Hale Knight, son of Capt. Hale and Fanny (Carpenter) Knight, natives of Vermont. Capt. Hale Knight was for many years, the commander and part owner of the "New World," a large vessel employed in carrying mail and passengers between New York and Liverpool and other European ports. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hale Knight were born four sons: Hale, Robert, Royal and William. In early life Mr. Knight was engaged in merchandizing in the city of Chicago. Mrs Knight is a member and Treasurer of the Dixon's Women's Club.

CHARLES C. KOST, physician and surgeon, Dixon Ill., was born in Astoria, Ill., Jan. 3, 1867, son of George W. and Susan Lemon (Nelson) Kost, natives of Ohio. He received his early educational training in the public schools, and graduated from the Astoria High School in 1885. He then entered the Missouri Medical College, St. Louis, Mo., graduating in 1888, and began practicing his profession at Literberry, Ill., where he remained three years. Coming to Dixon in 1891, he has since conducted a successful practice in that city, and has also taken a post-graduate course in Chicago and New York City. He is a member of the American Medical Society, the Illinois Medical Society and the Lee County Medical Society. In November, 1890, he married Ollie Dinwiddie, daughter of Samuel and Ellen (Crum) Winwiddie, and they have one son—Byron D. The Doctor and his wife are members of the Christian Church. WILLIAM LEIVAN, farmer, Section 27, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in South Dixon Township, Lee County, Dec. 12, 1856, son of Mathias and Magdaline (Miller) Leivan, natives of Somerset County, Penn., who came to Lee County in 1856, locating near the city of Dixon. Mathias Leivan was twice married, there being two children by his first wife, and twelve by his second wife, Magdaline Miller. The paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch came from Germany to America, in 1845. William Leivan remained on his father's farm until twenty-two years of age. On December 14, 1882, he married Mary E.

Fritz, daughter of Hiram and Elizabeth (Miller) Fritz, natives of Pennsylvania, and to them two children—Elmer W. and Ralph V.—have been born. In 1884 Mr. Leivan bought a farm in Harmon Township, Lee County, which he managed successfully until 1900, when he purchased his present homestead, consisting of 108 acres of valuable land, located in Sections 27, 28, and 34, Palmyra Township. His farm is improved with well-constructed buildings, and his house is surrounded with stately trees. While dairying is the leading feature connected with Mr. Leivan's business, he also raises a great many horses, sheep, and hogs. His son Elmer assists in the management of this farm. Mr. Leivan and his family attend the Union church at Prairieville.

JAMES H. LINCOLN, Postmaster, Franklin Grove, Lee County, was born in the house in which he now lives, Dec. 12, 1862, son of Henry I. and Helen M. (Nay) Lincoln. Henry Lincoln came to Illinois in 1847, and until 1852 was engaged in farming in Kendall County, Ill. On May 1, 1853, he opened a general store at Franklin Grove, which he conducted until 1897, when he sold out and retired from business. James H. Lincoln was married Nov. 12, 1890, to Martha J. Bill. He is a Republican in politics, has served as Tax Collector in his township, and in 1898 was appointed Postmaster at Franklin Grove, and has served to the satisfaction of its patrons to the present time.

ANDREW J. LAUER, merchant, Sublette, Ill., was born in Sublette Township, Lee County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1856, son of Andrew and Katherine (Strubel) Lauer. He obtained a common-school education, and at an early age engaged as clerk in a dry goods store belonging to George Pulling at Sublette, where he remained four years. He afterwards managed his father's farm eight years and then cultivated land of his own for one year. Disposing of his agricultural interests, he became a partner of his brother George, the firm being known as Lauer Brothers, dealers in dry goods and groceries. He remained with the latter enterprise eleven years, when, in partnership with his brother, Anton H., he purchased the hardware and implement business of I. M. Crawford, which he has recently sold, and will shortly establish himself in the business of plumbing and steam-fitting. In 1885 he married Catherine Hildman, daughter of Conrad and Anna M. (Neis) Hildman, and to them one child—Amora—has been born. In politics Mr. Lauer is an Independent Democrat; has served as Township Assessor, and was President of the first Village Board of Sublette, serving three terms in each official capacity. In religious faith he is a Catholic, and is also a member of the Catholic Knights.

GEORGE LAUER, merchant, Sublette, Ill., was born in Sublette Township, Lee County, Ill., Nov. 19, 1852, son of Andrew and Catherine (Strubel) Lauer. His father was a native of Wurzburg, Bavaria, and his mother of Bingen, in Hesse-Darmstadt. The former came to America with his mother, Regina Lauer, in 1848, while the mother came with her parents—Karl and Katherine Strubel—in 1850, both families settling in Lee County, and here Andrew Lauer and Catherine Strubel (the daughter) were married in 1851, and had a family of eight children. Andrew Lauer was a farmer, and owned a farm of 320 acres. George Lauer, the son, remained with his parents until he was twenty-six years old, when he began farming on eighty acres of land, given him by his father. In 1880 he entered into partnership with Joseph Bettendorf in general merchandising, but a year later, in conjunction with his brother, A. J. Lauer, bought the interest of Mr. Bettendorf. The partnership with his brother continued five years, when George Lauer became sole proprietor, and has since conducted the business alone. Mr. Lauer was married June 7, 1881, to Mary T. Malach, born in Lee County, July 31, 1860, daughter of George and Katherine (Krepz) Malach, who were natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. Mrs. Lauer's maternal grandparents, John and Theresa Krepz, came with her parents to America in 1851, and the grandmother is still living, at the age of eighty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Lauer have seven children: George A., Erma M., Leo L., John, Alphonse, Romana and Otto. Mr. Lauer has served as school trustee of Sublette Village. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religious belief a Catholic.

ANTON H. LAUER, banker and merchant, Sublette, Ill.; born in Sublette Township, Lee County, July 9, 1867, son of Andrew and Katherine (Strubel) Lauer. He obtained a commonschool education, and for eight years was employed as a clerk in a general store belonging to his brother George. In 1892, in partnership with his brother Andrew J., he engaged in the hardware and agricultural implement business, and in 1900 became Cashier of the Sublette Exchange Bank, established in 1900, of which George F. Malach is President and John P. Malach, Vice President. September 9, 1896, he married Lesetta Malach, daughter of George J. and Catherine (Kreps) Malach, and to them three children have been born—Wilfred G., Cyril and Catherine. In political opinions Mr. Lauer is a Democrat and has served as Township Treasurer, and was a member of the Village Board for four years. He and his wife are members of the Catholic church, and fraternally he belongs to the Catholic Knights of Illinois and Knights of Columbus.

HUGH LARKIN, Sr., farmer, Wyoming Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in County Galway, Ireland, in August, 1830, son of Thomas and Catherine (Henshen) Larkin, who came to Eastern Canada in 1835, where the father (Thomas Larkin) died in 1837. In 1840 Hugh Larkin accompanied his mother to Cattaraugus County, N. Y., but two years later returned to Canada, where he remained until 1850, when he located in Buffalo, N. Y. In 1855 he located in Chicago and in 1861 came to Wyoming Township, Lee County, and purchased his present farm, consisting of 142 acres. Mr. Larkin was married Oct. 31, 1854, to Marianna Riley, and to them thirteen children have been born, viz.: Elizabeth (deceased), Thomas (deceased), Katherine, Hugh, John, Ida, William, George, Charles, Hattie, James, Frank (deceased), and May. In political opinions Mr. Larkin is a Democrat, and in religious belief a Catholic.

HUGH LARKIN, Jr., farmer, Wyoming Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Chicago, Oct. 20, 1860, son of Hugh and Mary A. (Riley) Larkin. In 1861 the family came to Lee County and settled on a farm near Compton. At the age of twenty-one years, Hugh Larkin, Jr., began farming operations for himself, and, in 1894, purchased his present farm of eighty acres in Wyoming Township. June 4, 1885, he married Jennie J., daughter of Constant and Josephine Henry, of Compton, and they have had three children, viz.: Nellie M. (deceased), Edyth J. and Charles H. (deceased). Mr. Larkin is a Republican in political sentiment, and in religious belief a Catholic. He is a member of the M. W. A. at Paw Paw, Ill.

JOSEPH T. LITTLE (deceased), pioneer manufacturer and merchant, Dixon, Lee County, Ill., was born at Castine, Me., in 1817, the son of Otis and Dorothy (Perkins) Little, who were natives of England. He obtained his elementary education in the public schools of his native State, and later graduated from a college near Castine, Me.; removed to Columbus, Ohio, in 1839, remained there one year, and then came to Dixon, Ill., where he passed the remainder of his life, dying there Nov. 16, 1902. For several years Mr. Little was quite extensively engaged in the manufacture of wind-mills, and, during the early years of his residence in Dixon, established there the first general store in that section of the State. In religious belief he was a Baptist, and was one of the founders of the church of that denomination at Dixon, in which he served as Deacon and Clerk during his residence in that city. In political sentiment he was a Republican, and served his fellow-citizens as County Treasurer eight years, and several years as Deputy Treasurer. He was also a leading member of the Agricultural and Horticultural Societies of Lee County, and served as Clerk of the State Fair the year it was held in Dixon. Mr. Little was also a clerk in the Treasury Department in Washington, D. C., for eight years. On September 30, 1840, he was married to Miss Eleanor Wilde Cobb, of Castine, Maine, and to them the following named children were born: Thomas C., George Otis, Charles Henry, William Avery, Mary F. (now Mrs. J. R. Carpenter), Joseph T., Jr., and Frank W.

IRA W. LEWIS, Circuit Clerk of Lee County, Dixon, Ill., was born in Broome County, N. Y., April 3, 1842, son of Hiel and Eveline D. (Stone) Lewis. Hiel Lewis brought his family to Lee County in September, 1842, locating on a farm in Amboy Township, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying there in 1880. Ira W. Lewis remained on his father's farm until he reached his majority, afterwards served as Deputy Sheriff from 1864 to 1867, and, in 1868, was appointed Deputy Circuit Clerk, filling the latter position with the exception of one and a half years, until 1882, when he was appointed Circuit Clerk, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Remington Warriner. In 1883 Mr. Lewis was elected to the office above mentioned, and, for more than twenty years, has filled that important public position, much to the satisfaction of his fellow-citizens, whom he has represented as a public officer for the last thirty-five years. On March 21, 1867, he married Marcella Williams, daughter of Cyrus and Lydia (Dodge) Williams, early settlers of Lee County. Mr. Lewis is a prominent member of the Methodist church, with which he has been closely identified for more than forty years, and officially so since 1871, and has been President of the Board of Trustees for the past eleven years. Socially, he is a member of the M. W. A., and in political sentiment a Republican.

LAUER, farmer, Viola Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Retzstadt, Bavaria, Germany, Feb. 16, 1879, son of Charles and Catherine Lauer, who came from the Fatherland in 1881, and settled near Sublette, Lee County, Ill. In 1897 Mike J. Lauer rented land near Paw Paw, Ill., and is now engaged in farming in Viola Township. In political views he is a Democrat, and is now serving his fellow-citizens as Township Collector. Mr. Lauer is a member of the Catholic church.

LEANDER L. LeFEVER, farmer and stockman, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Lancaster County, Penn., May 2, 1868, son of George and Susannah (Weaver) LeFever, who were also natives of the Keystone

State. George LeFever was a soldier in the Civil War, enlisting in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and served three years, entering the service as a private, but was later promoted to the rank of Sergeant. He died Jan. 9, 1904, but his wife still survives, and lives on the old farm in Pennsylvania. Leander L. LeFever remained on his father's farm until eighteen years of age, and in the meantime attended the public schools at Quarryville, Penn. He came to Lee County in 1886, where he was first engaged as a farm hand at Prairieville, Palmyra Township, but afterwards rented a farm for five years, and still later purchased a farm and village property at Prairieville, which he disposed of in the spring of 1903, and bought the McGaffey farm, consisting of 200 acres, where he now resides. On December 7, 1892, he married Fannie Ebersole, daughter of Christian and Susanna (Rutt) Ebersole, and to them seven children have been born, viz.: Minnie S., George E., Mary E., LeRoy D., Jennie W., Frank McKinley, and Fannie L. Socially, Mr. LeFever is a member of the Mystic Circle. In political views he is a Republican.

ANDREW LITTLE, farmer, Viola Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Lee County, Nov. 13, 1850, son of Andrew and Charity (Ross) Little, natives of Scotland and Ross Grove, Ill., respectively. His parents were married in Illinois and were among the very earliest settlers of Lee County, where they owned 340 acres of land. Mr. Little owns a 150-acre farm, and devotes his attention to general farming. On December 6, 1871, he married Caroline C., daughter of Abraham V. and Caroline (Barhydt) Christiane, and they have one daughter, Edyth I. Mr. Little is a Republican in politics, in religious belief a Methodist, and fraternally a member of the Masonic Order.

JOHN THARP LAWRENCE (deceased), pioneer citizen of Palmyra Township, Lee County, was born in the Island of Jamaica, West Indies, 1819, son of John T. and Julia (Ricketts) Lawrence, both of whom were of English descent, the maternal grandfather (Ricketts) being an officer of the British Army. When John T. was eight years of age, his parents came to America, first settling in New Jersey, where he attended good schools in that section and at West Point, N. Y., but did not graduate. In 1839 they came to Lee County, Ill., and began farming in Palmyra Township, and there John Lawrence was married to Elizabeth Graham, daughter of Capt. Hugh Graham, who came to Palmyra Township in 1838, and built the first frame house in that section of the county. Six children—one son and five daughters—were born of this marriage, viz.: Julia, John Tharp, Jr., Elizabeth, Lillas, Mary and Frances. Mr. Lawrence and his father planted fruit and shade trees on their farm, erected comfortable and useful farm buildings, and were classed among the intelligent and progressive pioneers of Lee County. The elder Mr. Lawrence died in 1848, and his wife in 1856. John Tharp Lawrence served as School Trustee of his township a number of years, was Manager of the Palmyra Fire Company, and a member of the Episcopal church; in politics he was a Democrat. His death occurred in 1898, and that of Mrs. Lawrence in 1895. The Lawrence farm is now managed by three of the daughters of John T. Lawrence—maiden ladies, who acquired a good education under home training and culture, and who conduct a dairy-farm, sending milk to the factory.

IRA M. LEHMAN, farmer and stock-raiser, Nachusa Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides, May 11, 1868, son of Samuel and Margaret (Bareddoll) Lehman, natives of Adams County, Penn., who came to Lee County in 1853. Samuel Lehman was twice married, his first wife, who died Oct. 21, 1870, bore him five children, of whom Ira M. was the fourth. Mr. Lehman died in 1899, aged sixty-eight years, and at the time of his death owned 400 acres of land in Lee County. On January 28, 1892, Ira M. Lehman was married to Mary Throstle, born in Ogle County, Ill., Dec. 7, 1867, daughter of Levi and Isabel (Spangler) Throstle, and of this union there are three children—Bertha Belle, Leroy S. and Galen Throstle. Mr. Lehman owns a 200-acre farm in Nachusa Township, which he purchased in 1900, and makes a specialty of raising thoroughbred Hereford cattle. In political opinions he is a Republican; has served two years as School Director, and three years as Pathmaster. He and his family are members of the Brethren church.

MRS. IDA C. MOULTON, Franklin Grove, Lee County, Ill.; born Sept. 1, 1861, eldest daughter of Sylvanus C. and Sabine J. (Fellows) Hausen, natives, respectively, of Maine and New York State, the former locating in Lee County, Ill., in 1840, and the latter in 1859. Mrs. Moulton (nee Miss Ida C. Fellows), obtained her elementary education in the country district schools and the public schools at Franklin Grove, afterwards attending Cornell College (Mt. Vernon, Iowa), two terms. On March 30, 1891, she was married to George Franklin Moulton, born at LeRoy, Bremer County, Iowa, July 29, 1864, son of Benjamin Waite and Electa Louise (Hall) Moulton, natives of Michigan and Illinois, respectively. To Mr. and Mrs. Moulton five children were born, viz.: Guy E., Ruth H., Violet F., Inez L., and an infant, unnamed—the last two are deceased.

GEORGE E. MOREY, merchant and Postmaster, Lee Center, Ill., was born at Climax, Kalamazoo County, Mich., June 4, 1855, son of Edwin and Harriet (Mayo) Morey. Edwin Morey was born near Elmira, N. Y., and came to Lee County in 1846, while his wife is a native of Pennsylvania, and came to Lee County in 1847. They were married in 1848. Mr. Morey introduced the second grain separator into Lee County, and operated a threshing machine in that section of country for many years in addition to conducting his 240-acre farm. To Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Morey nine children were born, eight of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Mason L., Mary S., Albert H., George E., Lettie E., Edwin, Sarah I. and Charles M. Mr. Morey died June 30, 1888, aged sixty-eight, but his wife still survives, at the age of seventy-three years. George E. Morey began business life for himself at the age of twenty-five, first conducting a rented farm for seven years, and afterwards purchased 151 acres of land, which he sold five years later. In 1892 he opened a meat market at Lee Center, which he conducted four years, and has since been engaged in the general merchandise business. He has been Postmaster of Lee Center for the past five years; is serving his second term as Clerk of Lee Township, and, while residing on the farm, served as Road Commissioner and School Director for several years. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 146, A. F. & A. M., and of 1036 Camp, M. W. A., having served as clerk of the latter order for seven years. Mr. Morey was married on Sept. 9, 1880, to Ella R. Derr, daughter of John and Rebecca (Geisinger) Derr, and they are the parents of three children—Ernest L., Edwin R. and Hazel M. Mr. and Mrs. John Derr were natives of Pennsylvania, and came to Lee County in 1864, where the former died in 1902, aged eighty-three, and the latter in 1901, in her seventy-third year.

WILLIAM G. MCGINNIS, farmer, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in New York City, in 1830, son of Stewart and Mary (Law) McGinnis. Stewart McGinnis was born in the North of Ireland, Feb. 22, 1802. The father dying when Stewart was an infant, he was shortly afterwards brought by his mother to America, and they resided in New York City, where he later learned the trade of an architect, and erected one of the first saw and planing mills in New York State. He later built sugar mills in the Southern States, and lost his life in a fire in 1838. He married in New York City, Mary Law, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, born Feb. 24, 1813, who came with her parents to America in 1818. Mrs. McGinnis still survives, at the venerable age of ninety years, and lives with her son, William G. Her mother, Keziah Law, lived to be 103 years of age. In 1861, William G. McGinnis enlisted in Company A, Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, his regiment forming a part of the Western army. He participated in the battles of White River, Vicksburg, Chickasaw Bayou, Siege of Vicksburg, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Ringgold Gap, besides other minor engagements. He lost one of his fingers in the Siege of Vicksburg. Mr. McGinnis has spent most of his life in Lee County and has been a sacrificing son in behalf of his aged mother, whom he watches with filial care, and, perhaps for this reason, he never married. In politics Mr. McGinnis is a Republican, and has served as Township Collector and Pathmaster. He is a member of the G. A. R. at Dixon.

ELIJAH E. SWOPE, farmer Brooklyn Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Adams County, Penn., June 25, 1855, son of George and Mary A. (Nary) Swope, natives of Germany and Pennsylvania respectively, who came to Lee County in 1859, but both of whom are now deceased. Elijah E. Swope married, on March 4, 1891, Catherine Malfeld, daughter of Pete and Carrie Malfeld, and they are the parents of five children, named George H., Emeline, Minnie, Roy and Mabel. In politics he is a Republican, and is a member of the M. W. A., and Knights of the Globe. He is a communicant of the Reformed church. Mr. Swope devotes his time to the management of his 80-acre farm in Brooklyn Township.

HENRY P. STEIN, farmer, Brooklyn Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Troy Township, LaSalle County, Ill., Dec. 1, 1866, son of Frederick and Sydillia (Lehn) Stein, natives of Germany, of whom the former came to the United States in 1844, and the latter a few years later. On February 10, 1889, Mr. Stein was married to Elizabeth Florschuetz, born April 27, 1866, daughter of George J. and Barbara (Caetles) Florschuetz, natives of Germany, who came to LaSalle County, Ill., in 1854, and to Lee County in 1862. To Mr. and Mrs. Stein two children—Lillie M. and Gilbert P.—have been born. Mr. Stein devotes his time and attention to the management of his 160-acre farm in Brooklyn Township. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party, and in religious belief is a German Lutheran.

JOHN SCHMIDT, farmer, Brooklyn Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Germany, Nov. 3, 1836, and came to the United States in 1864, and to Lee County, Ill., in 1870, where he now owns 200 acres of excellent farm land in Brooklyn Township, and devotes his time and attention to general farming. On July 17, 1867, Mr. Schmidt was married to Mary Ganz, a native of Germany, and to them nine children have been born: Amelia, Catherine, Mary A., Minnie (deceased), Phillip J., John J., Elizabeth S., Anna M. and Lena M. Mr. Schmidt is liberal in his political views. He is a member of the Lutheran church.

M. J. STUNKEL, farmer, Section 13, Reynolds Township, Lee County, Ill., was born near Raleigh, N. C., August 26, 1866, son of August and Isabella (Stonebanks) Stunkel, natives of Hanover, Germany, and New York City, respectively. August Stunkel, born in 1833, obtained his education in the Fatherland, became a sailor and followed a sea-faring life for nine years. In 1855, after having made a trip to California, he settled at College Point, in Long Island, N. Y., where he married in 1861. In 1865 he removed to Raleigh, N. C., where he devoted his attention to growing cotton and tobacco, and there spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1884. His wife still survives, and resides in North Carolina. Mr. Stunkel and wife were the parents of seven children, M. J. being the oldest. The maternal ancestors of the subject of this sketch came from England at an early date, and settled in New York, where the maternal grandfather was a prominent architect and builder. The paternal grandfather of M. J. Stunkel was a Collector of Revenue in Zelle, Hanover, Germany. M. J. Stunkel spent his boyhood with an aunt at Richton, Cook County, Ill., and obtained his educational training in the schools of that locality. When thirteen years of age he began working out for farmers, being thus employed for four years. Then returning to North Carolina, he resided with his parents until he reached his twentieth year, when he returned to Illinois, where he was employed as a farm hand for one year, worked one year in Chicago, and for seven years afterwards conducted a farm at Benson, Ill. In January, 1890, he married Gertrude Reents, native of Secor, Woodford County, Ill., and of this union there are six children—August, Truletta, Alma, Lydia, Elnora, and Mauriese. Mr. Stunkel came to Lee County in 1895, and bought his present farm, to which he has made many improvements, and has brought his land to a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Lutheran church, and in political views is a Republican.

HENRY SARTORIOUS, farmer, Section 4, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in the house where he now resides, Oct. 10, 1854, son of Gustavus and Charlotte H. (Eldmann) Sartorius, natives respectively of Oldenburg, Germany, and Minden, Prussia, who came to Lee County in 1848, locating on a farm in Palmyra Township. Gustavus Sartorius was a soldier of the late Rebellion, enlisting in Company D, Thirty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and serving eighteen months. He was a Democrat in political views, and served as a member of the School Board. Socially he belonged to the G. A. R. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sartorius, two of whom—Henry and William—survive. Mr. Sartorius died Dec. 25, 1889, but his wife still survives, and resides with her son Henry. Henry Sartorius grew to years of maturity on his father's farm, obtained his education in the public schools, and on Nov. 22, 1878, married Louisa Bouger, daughter of William Bouger and wife, who came from Germany to Lee County in 1870. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sartorius—Gustavus (died at the age of ten years), Charlotte and Carl. Mr. Sartorius owns 147 acres of valuable land, upon which there is a comfortable residence and well-constructed farm buildings. In politics he is a Democrat, and is serving as Township Collector. Fraternally he is a member of the Sons of Veterans and Knights of the Globe. He and his wife are communicants of the Union church at Prairieville.

CHARLES G. SMITH, plumber and steam-fitter, Dixon, Ill., was born in the State of New York, April 4, 1847, son of Nathan T. and Eliza (Becker) Smith, the former a native of Connecticut; the latter being of Holland ancestry, and related to the Van Rensselaer family of New York. Nathan T. Smith was, at different times, a merchant, farmer and school teacher, and in the early part of the nineteenth century, removed, with his father's family, from Connecticut into New York. In 1850 he came west and bought land in Vermillion and Bureau Counties, Ill., and Winnebago County, Wis. In 1851, while hunting with his wife's brother, he was accidentally shot, dying in nine days after the accident occurred. His wife survived him about forty-nine years, dying in 1900. Charles G. Smith was the youngest in a family of ten children. After completing his education in the Dixon schools, he learned the milling trade, an occupation members of his mother's family (the Beckers) had followed for generations. He afterwards joined his brother, Nathan T., in the publishing business in Chicago, remaining until 1876, when he returned to Dixon and resumed his former occupation, but shortly afterwards removed to Kansas, where he remained until 1880. Returning to Dixon in the latter year, he had charge of a mill in that city until 1886, when he returned to Kansas, where he was employed in a similar capacity at Great Bend, and also built a mill in Stafford County, same State, which he later sold. Then removing to Las Vegas, New Mexico, he built and operated a mill in that locality, and also conducted an agency for George Westinghouse, remaining thus employed until 1890, when he again returned to Dixon and established his present business, which he has since conducted in a very successful manner. On March 17, 1870, he married Susan A. McKenney, daughter of F. C. and Catherine (Clute) McKenney, who came to Lee County in 1836. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have but one child living, Fred McKenney Smith, who is a partner in his father's business. Their other son, Earl Becker Smith, a bright, promising young man, and a graduate of Dixon High School, was fatally injured by one of his schoolmates while practicing gymnastic exercises for field sports, which were to take place a few days later, and, after lingering a few days, died May 9, 1903. In politics Mr. Smith is a Republican, and was a member of the Board of Education six years. Socially he is a member of the Masonic Order and K. T. In religious belief he is a Methodist, and is Secretary of the Official Board of his church.

RICHARD M. SHADDICK, farmer, Wyoming Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Devonshire, England, Dec. 5, 1857, and in 1884 removed to Ontario, Canada, remaining there until 1890, when he came to Wyoming Township, Lee County, where he now owns a 160-acre farm. On March 19, 1877, he was married to Ann Burnett, a native of England, and to them five children have been born: Fanny, Anna, William, Frederick and George. In politics Mr. Shaddock affiliates with the Democratic party, and in religious belief is a Presbyterian. He is a member of the M. W. A.

JOHN H. SLOGGETT, farmer, Ashton Township, Lee County, was born at Granby, Province of Quebec, Canada, Nov. 1, 1855, son of William and Bethany (Horer) Sloggett—the former a native of London, England, who came with his father (also named William), to Canada, in 1831, and the mother, a native of Vermont. William and Bethany Sloggett became the parents of ten children, six of whom (1903) are now living, viz.: Sarah, wife of Moses G. Montgomery; William, Alfred, John H., James, and Hattie, the wife of Harry J. Packer. The parents came to Illinois in 1856, and the subject of this sketch was reared at Forreston, Ill., attended the public and high schools, and acquired a good business education; also learned the creamery business, which he followed at Franklin Grove from 1890 to 1901. February 1, 1883, he married Julia Holsinger, daughter of John Holsinger, and they have two children—Glennie May and Everett—both of whom, as well as their mother, are now deceased. July 26, 1893, Mr. Sloggett was married to his second wife, Miss Lucy Sanders, daughter of Henry and Rachel Sanders, and their family consists of an adopted son, Fred Morris Sloggett, and a daughter, Ethel Marie Sloggett, born Feb. 19, 1904. Mr. Sloggett is a Republican in politics, a member of the Presbyterian church, in which he and his wife take an active interest, and fraternally associated with the Order of Modern Woodmen of America. Henry Sanders (deceased), the father of Mrs. Lucy (Sanders) Sloggett, was born in Hardin County, Penn., in 1826, son of Henry and Mary (Buck) Sanders, natives of Pennsylvania, but of German extraction. Henry Sanders, Sr., was a Captain in the State Militia, and in religious belief a Catholic. Henry Sanders came to Illinois in 1845, but after remaining here one year, returned to his native State; then coming back to Lee County, he there made his home for the remainder of his life. In 1851 he married Rachel Morgan, daughter of Edward and Nancy Morgan, both natives of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sanders had nine children: Winfield B., Mary (deceased), Joseph F., Jerome (deceased), Alice (deceased), Jane, John W. (deceased), Edward and Lucy. Mr. Sanders was prosperous as a farmer, acquiring an estate of over 600 acres of land. He died March 18, 1895, and his wife Feb. 18, 1902.

FLETCHER SEAVEY, farmer, Section 23, Palmyra Township, Lee County, Ill., was born in Carroll County, N. H., Sept. 2, 1839, son of Asa A. and Ruth (Ricker) Seavey, who came to Lee County in 1854, locating in Palmyra Township. Fletcher Seavey was the oldest of three children in his father's family. He was raised on the farm, attending the district school near his home, and during the Rebellion enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving eight months in the Atlanta campaign. In 1862 he married Eveline Eastwood, whose parents were pioneer settlers of Lee County, and of this union the following children were born: Harry C.; Fred A., deceased; Eda B., wife of J. M. Honey of Dixon; Allen E., who rents and conducts his father's farm; Roscoe C., deceased; Clyde L., who resides in California; Ruth M., who is qualifying herself as a nurse in a Chicago training school; Erma L., who resides with her sister, Mrs. Honey. Mr. Seavey gave his children the advantages of a good education, most of them being high school and college graduates. In politics he is a Republican, and has filled several public offices in his township, including that of Assessor and Supervisor. He is Secretary of the Palmyra Insurance Company, having held that office for the past ten years. In religious belief he is a Methodist, and fraternally belongs to the M. W. A., A. O. U. W. and G. A. R. Mr. Seavey has resided on his present 140-acre farm for twenty-one years, and has lived in the immediate neighborhood nearly fifty years. He is a man of more than ordinary ability, and is highly respected for his honest principles and sterling worth.

The Nathan Whitney Chapter of Royal Arch Masons was named in his honor. He died June 11, 1891.

EDWARD E. WINGERT, attorney, Dixon, Ill., was born at Franklin Grove, Lee County, Ill., Nov. 13, 1866, son of Walter J. and Mary C. (Emmert) Wingert, natives of Ohio and Maryland, respectively. Walter J. Wingert came to Lee County in 1852, and is now a resident of Dixon. Edward E. Wingert obtained his education in Dixon, and the University of Michigan, graduating from the law department of the latter institution in 1889, and locating in Dixon the same year. For two years he taught languages in the Northern Illinois Normal School, and was also engaged in a similar capacity in the Law School for three years. He married, in 1892, Bessie E. Boardman, and to this union there are three children: Marjorie, Bessie and Edward B. In political sentiment he is a Republican, and served as City Attorney from 1890 to 1893, and again from 1902 to 1903. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

CAPTAIN GEORGE E. YOUNG (deceased) was born in Lee Center, Oneida County, N. Y., June 24, 1840, son of Franklin J. and Mary Ann (Ward) Young, who removed, with their family to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1854. George E. Young came to Amboy in 1879, where, for many years, he was engaged in the grocery business. On October 1, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served three years in defending his Nation's honor. He was chosen First Lieutenant at the organization of his regiment, and Oct. 7, 1862, was elected Captain, holding the command until mustered out of the service. On August 1, 1883, he married Miss Julia Tippie, who still survives. In political views he was a Democrat, and served as Mayor of Amboy several terms, and was Postmaster of the same city eight years. Captain Young died at Pamonia, Cal., Nov. 7, 1892.

THOMAS YOUNG, proprietor of the Nachusa House, Dixon, Ill., was born in Dodge County, Wis., in 1856, son of Thomas and Zemira (Fleming) Young. Thomas Young, Sr., was born in Devonshire, England, and came to the United States in 1830, locating first at Elmira, N. Y., where, in 1840, he married Zemira Fleming, the same year removing to Milwaukee, Wis., where he became a manufacturer and real estate dealer. Here he remained until 1845, when he removed from Milwaukee to Beaver Dam, Wis., where he continued in the manufacturing business until 1872. In 1872, assisted by his sons, Oscar A. and Thomas, he established a number of eating houses at different points—Minnesota Junction and Madison, Wis.; Dixon, Ill., and Eagle Grove, Iowa, on the Chicago & North-Western Railroad,—which eventually induced him to locate at Dixon, Ill., where, in 1887, he assumed management of the Waverly House, which he conducted until 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Young were the parents of nine children, five of whom are living, viz.: Charles M., Oscar A., Thomas, Zemira M. (who is housekeeper for her brother Thomas at the Nachusa House), and Leora (Mrs. J. Craney). Mr. Young died in 1892, and Mrs. Young in 1893. Thomas Young, Jr., obtained his education in the high school at Horicon, Wis., and in 1899, in partnership with George Dewey, became proprietor of the Nachusa House at Dixon. In the spring of 1893 they sold their lease to a Mr. Orvis, who retained possession until September, 1899, when Mr. Young and John H. Schafer became proprietors. In April, 1900, Mr. Young bought his partner's interest, and is now sole proprietor of that hostelry, as well as the Assembly Park Hotel at North Dixon, and the Orient Hotel at Polo, Ill. Socially he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Globe, Dixon Club, and Retail Merchants' Association.

S. T. ZELLER, grain dealer, firm of Zeller & Hutchison, Ashton, Ill., was born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1853, son of A. F. and Maria (Flickinger) Zeller. When an infant he was brought, by his parents, to Preble County, Ohio, where he attended the public schools, and remained on his father's farm until 1889. Coming to Lee County in the latter year, he conducted a grain elevator at Harmon for twelve years, the greater part of the time being in partnership with A. E. Hutchinson. Withdrawing from the firm, Mr. Zeller removed to Sterling, where he was engaged for a time in a similar capacity, but on Jan. 1, 1901, disposed of his business at the latter place, and coming to Ashton, Ill., again entered into partnership with Mr. Hutchison, when they purchased the Knapp & Jennings Elevator, and the extensive stock yards adjacent, where stock is fed in transit on the North-Western Railroad. Under the firm name of Zeller & Hutchison they conduct an extensive business. In 1881 Mr. Zeller was married in Ohio to Caroline Foster, and they have four children, viz.: Nellie, now attending Oberlin Conservatory of Music, Oberlin, Ohio; Samuel, now a student in the State University of Michigan; Ruth, and Ralph. Mr. Zeller is a Republican in political views, and, while a resident of Harmon, served as Town Clerk and Supervisor. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic Order and M. W. A. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church.
